Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman has already addressed the House. I merely wanted to say that this is an amendment to the original act. The Committee on Foreign Affairs had jurisdiction of this bill, and it was properly referred to that committee.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] may proceed for 2 minutes.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we do not even know what the bill is. The title has not been read. There is a motion before the House, and if that motion is not debatable, I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, what is the motion?

The SPEAKER. The motion is to rerefer the bill H. R. 6547 to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, the bill has not been reported.

Mr. COCHRAN. I submit the bill has not been read. How can we know what the bill contains simply by knowing the number of the bill?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes to explain the bill for the gentleman's edification.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made to that request.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. In the opinion of the Chair, was the bill properly referred in the first instance?

The SPEAKER. Of course, the Chair thinks so, because it was so referred.

Mr. McREYNOLDS demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CELLER) there were—ayes 37, noes 84.

So the motion was rejected.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on tomorrow, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall have to object to this request. The Committee on Immigration has not had a day of its own for more than 12 years and we have been dispensing with Calendar Wednesday business since I have been a Member of this House without giving this committee and the other committees an opportunity to be heard. We have not had a day on the floor this session and we have had none for 14 years, and under the circumstances I am compelled to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

THE INCONSISTENCE OF RESTRICTION ADVOCATES WHO OBJECT TO CONSIDERATION OF REMEDIAL LEGISLATIVE MEASURES

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend and revise my remarks today in opposition to the request by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] that business in order tomorrow—April 3, Calendar Wednesday—be dispensed with, I wish to present some facts to the Members of this House relative to the consideration of bills referred to the committee of which I am chairman, and the inconsistency of objections raised on this floor to proper consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

For several weeks past statements of all kinds have been hurled, both from the floor of this House and in the public press, against the Chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, some even accusing him of being responsible for the difficulties which the country is facing relative to adjustment of some distressing phases of our immigration laws.

These accusations were effectively answered by me on the floor of this House, and I felt that nothing remained to be said in my effort to clear up the situation for the information of the Members of this body. But a few days ago the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] have seen fit to proceed again with their misstatements concerning the situation as it affects the existing immigration laws.

I have also been charged with being responsible for the return to the United States of Emma Goldman, it being claimed that it was legislation I sponsored which made it possible for her to come in recently as a visitor. So I say the time has come when it is necessary to give this body a thorough review of the present situation.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] said:

> Mr. Speaker, in 1932 the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], who was then, and is now, Chairman of the Committee on Immigration, brought in here a bill which he passed, and it was approved May 25, 1932, and became Forty-seventh Statute, 165.

Later the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] referred to operations under that law, and in reference to Emma Goldman he said:

> She was brought back to the United States under that bill. If it had not been for that bill, she would not have been brought back here.

Now let us see what the underlying facts really are.

An act approved March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1551), contained provisions in section 1 (a), which, for all practicable purposes, amounted to total banishment of every alien against whom a deportation order had been issued, either before or after the approval date of that act. There were absolutely no exceptions.

The operations under that section of the act proved to be so inhuman and tyrannical in effect that on June 24, 1929—less than 4 months after the Banishment Act became law—an amendment was approved which gave certain discretion to the Secretary of Labor in the cases of aliens who had been deported prior to March 4, 1929, so that such aliens may apply from abroad for permission of the Secretary of Labor to file a new application for an immigration visa with an American consular officer abroad.

During the Seventy-second Congress, persistent representations were made to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and also to the Senate Committee on Immigration, that under the operation of that amendment, a lot of hardship was being inflicted upon families in the United States left behind when the breadwinner of the family was deported, in many cases only on a technicality of the law, after March 4, 1929, and was thereafter perpetually prevented from ever returning to the fireside of his family in the United States. The hardship in these cases had to be borne by those of the family left here when the breadwinner had been forced to leave and the committees were urged to remedy that situation.

However, contrary to the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], the relief that had been earnestly requested by the families of these deported breadwinners was not originally in any bill as reported directly to this House from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization under my sponsorship—although I would have been glad to sponsor such a relief measure for meritorious cases where the deported person was definitely in the noncriminal classes.

What happened was this: The Committee on Immigration, under date of January 25, 1932, reported a bill known as "H. R. 6477", the purpose of which was to further extend certain naturalization privileges to alien veterans residing in the United States. This bill was passed by the House and sent to the Senate.

The session of that Congress was rapidly drawing toward an adjournment, and for that reason, and owing to the urgent need for certain other immigration and naturalization legislation pending at that time before them, the Senate Committee on Immigration added a number of amendments to the House bill 6477 and reported the amended bill to the Senate.

This amended bill was passed by the Senate and was sent to a conference of the two Houses. The House then receded from its disagreement to the Senate amendments, the report of the conferees was agreed to by the House, and there is nothing in the RECORD to show that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] objected to this final action by the House.

This amended bill, as finally agreed upon by both Houses of Congress, became law upon the approval by the President on May 25, 1932 (Public Law No. 149, 72d Cong.).

A careful study of this statute shows that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] was referring to section 7 of this act. That section reads as follows:

> SEC. 7. Despite the provisions of subdivision (a) of section 1 of the act entitled "An act making it a felony with penalty for certain aliens to enter the United States of America under certain conditions in violation of law", approved March 4, 1929, as amended, an alien, if otherwise admissible, shall not be excluded from admission to the United States under the provisions of such subdivision after the expiration of 1 year after the date of deportation if, prior to his reembarkation at a place outside of the United States, or prior to his application in foreign contiguous territory for admission to the United States, the Secretary of Labor, in his discretion, shall have granted such alien permission to reapply for admission.

This section 7 of the act of May 25, 1932, simply amends the so-called "Banishment Act" as approved March 4, 1929, so as to provide a means of alleviation in cases where the perpetual exclusion of all deportees operated to forever prevent members of the family in the United States from ever having the husband or the wife or children who had been deported rejoin the family fireside in the United States.

The alleviation granted by this new amendment was strictly limited so as to require the person deported to stay away at least 1 year following deportation, and after that lapse of time then personally apply from abroad directly to the Secretary of Labor for permission to return. In the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, such applications could be acted upon by granting the deported person permission to come back. Thereafter the deported alien would initiate an altogether new application for an immigration visa before an American consul abroad, and upon establishment of eligibility to admission to the United States under the immigration law would be given a new visa, and then upon arrival at a port of entry this immigrant would be subject to all examinations that every newly arrived alien is required to submit to when seeking admission.

I fail to see how the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] could possibly object to this humane procedure. Yet that is the law he erroneously charged me with sponsoring and erroneously laid on me responsibility for some action which he disapproves.

The remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] on that occasion were very much in line with the statement he made on this floor when the Filipino repatriation bill was before the House. At that time he said there were 20,000,000 aliens in the United States, of whom 10,000,000 were here illegally. That erroneous statement was effectively answered.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer briefly to each of the bills reported from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and others pending before that committee, all of which should obtain the full cooperation of everyone in the House who is interested in seeing that the interests of this country shall be adequately protected without inflicting any injustice to anyone. These several bills are as follows:

H. R. 5839: The purposes of this bill are to provide legislative authority for the removal of aliens from the United States when they come here for a visit or for a temporary stay and then engage in spreading foreign propaganda and mix in local political activities in the United States. The bill further seeks to extend the authority of the Secretary of Labor to remove from the United States any alien who ostensibly comes to this country for permanent residence but who, after admission here, proceeds to spread a political philosophy of racial and religious intolerance among American citizens and political philosophies inconsistent with the American theory of government, even advocating the use of force and violence to establish here those alien ideas of how the United States should be governed.

Having recently concluded a thorough investigation into subversive activities of aliens in the United States and thereby having obtained definite information about the way that this pernicious activity is carried on here, it is quite obvious to me that legislation of this type is sorely needed to attack this dreadful scourge at its very root. I am sure that the purposes of this bill are salutary, and I feel it will receive the support of all fair-minded Members of the House. I did not believe there would be a Member of this House who would be opposed to this type of legislation, yet I see that the Membership of this House was prevented from fully considering this bill by objections raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

That bill would remove many undesirable aliens, and I fail to see the consistency of the objections made.

Another bill reported from the committee is H. R. 5799. This proposes to correct a situation created by the recent Saar plebiscite. Many naturalized Americans went from the United States and cast their votes in a foreign country on a matter in which they as United States citizens had no interest, and they voted in the interest of a foreign nation. A study of our laws revealed that there is no statute in existence which is sufficient to bring about the forfeiture of the citizenship of such naturalized aliens who hold a dual allegiance of this character. Hence reluctantly concluding that such drastic legislation is necessary this bill was reported. While the measure reported will not affect those who voted in that Saar plebiscite, probably the enactment of this bill now would prevent such a situation arising in the future and would serve notice that hereafter there will be no such double allegiance. Persons who become naturalized citizens will know they must declare themselves as Americans and by that act give up all connections which would justify taking part in elections or plebiscites in the interests of any foreign country, and they will know that if they do vote in a foreign election they must suffer the consequences and be classed here as aliens and subject to all disabilities that aliens may be subjected to thereafter.

This very necessary new legislation was not permitted to receive proper consideration by this House when the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] all objected to consideration of this bill. I am at a loss to understand what possible objection could justify them in preventing the Membership of this House from acting on this remedial type of legislation which seeks to strengthen citizenship.

Another bill which the committee has submitted for the consideration of the House seeks to correct a situation growing out of the provisions of the Cable Act which gave to married women individual citizenship status independent of their husbands. This bill (H. R. 4354) proposes to restore citizenship to women born in the United States, who are living in the United States, who have never taken personally any oath of allegiance to any foreign government but who, nevertheless, lost their citizenship prior to September 22, 1922, simply because before that date they married aliens. An American woman who married an alien subsequent to September 22, 1922, did not thereby lose her citizenship. This bill will benefit only native-born women who are now and for 3 years have been living in the United States and will enable them to resume their citizenship without exhaustive procedure before naturalization authorities and permits them to obtain a certificate of citizenship, if they desire it, in a rather informal manner.

I cannot for the life of me see why there should be any objection to this bill, since it simply equalizes the citizenship status of native-born women now living in the United States who married aliens prior to September 22, 1922, with the citizenship status of native-born women now living in the United States who married aliens after September 22, 1922.

Yet when this bill was reached the other day on the calendar, the objection of one Member prevented consideration by the House. This one objection came from the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART]. I was especially surprised at this objection, since the gentleman who thus prevented consideration of H. R. 4354 now has pending with the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization a bill of somewhat similar intent, only his bill would permit any woman who had lost her citizenship by reason of marriage to an alien, or because her husband lost his citizenship, to regain her own citizenship by a short naturalization procedure while she is living abroad, and he would permit the woman seeking repatriation to take her oath of allegiance before an American consul in a foreign post of duty with no requirement on the woman's part that she intends to reside permanently in the United States.

If the gentleman from California would seek this privilege for a woman living abroad I fail to see his reason for objecting to the consideration of the bill H. R. 4354, which seeks a similar privilege for women born here and living here.

Again referring to the Filipino repatriation bill—which is House Joint Resolution 71—and which was objected to about a month ago by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK]. The objections by these three Members struck that resolution from the Consent Calendar for this session of Congress.

I cannot see the consistency of such objections when the same gentlemen continually tell you we should get rid of undesirable aliens. The Filipino is neither an alien nor a citizen—he is just a national or subject. Yet this resolution proposed to relieve many local communities and political subdivisions of the United States which now have a very real problem in the burden of caring for unemployed and distressed Filipinos; we proposed paying their fares back to their native homeland, and in this way repatriating them and taking them off public relief rolls thereby saving money for the American taxpayer in the long run.

A similar measure was submitted 2 years ago and was supported by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Labor. The resolution has the support of our immigration officials and will undoubtedly encourage voluntary applications from many Filipinos for transportation back to the Philippine Islands.

I have no doubt a close examination of the purposes of the resolution, coupled with a study of the situation and a careful reading of the report by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, will convince many Members of this House of the soundness of its provisions, and they will then permit this measure to be considered and passed by this House. It will help the Filipinos and this country, too.

Another bill which the Committee on Immigration recently reported out provides for the repatriation of aliens who have fallen into distress and unemployment and is H. R. 3472, which gives that right to the Federal authorities in lieu of the existing provisions of law which limit such aid to 3 years after the entry of the aliens into the United States. The proposed statute intends to grant this right to the Secretary of Labor without any limitation of time after entry in the case of any alien who finds that he cannot maintain himself in the United States, wishes to go home, could be transported at the expense of the Government and thereby relieve our communities of the problem of caring for, supporting, and maintaining such aliens.

Yet here again we find Members of this House, who claim to be interested in relieving this country of undesirable aliens, entering objections to consideration by this House of this bill—H. R. 3472—which is a very much needed measure. Three objections were entered on March 4, 1935, by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], and the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

A study of these bills and the objections made to their consideration by this House after the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has submitted unanimous reports favoring the passage of these necessary legislative measures will cause any candid student of the situation to wonder at the apparent inconsistency indicated by the Members who urge restriction and clean-up, on one hand, while, on the other hand, preventing the Membership of this House from consideration of beneficial legislative measures in line with their expressions.

The program of our committee would not be complete without granting some relief to World War veterans of alien birth who for sometime past could be naturalized under a shortened procedure, but the law under which this naturalization could be effected has since expired. We propose to extend this period of time and we also wish to extend the same privileges to aliens who did not serve under our flag but who did serve under the flags of countries with which the United States was allied during the World War. I believe that with this proposed legislation our immigration problem will be materially remedied and that we shall then be as near its solution as is feasible.

This measure for the benefit of veterans of the World War was passed by the House on April 1, 1935, and sent to the Senate. This is the second bill sent to the Senate this session from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

I conclude with just this statement. That every bill reported from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization this session has met with unexpected and unwarranted opposition on the floor of this House and it seems impossible to secure appropriate consideration of measures that should be passed in the ordinary procedure of the House. The committee has not had a regular call on Calendar Wednesday at any time in many years and now with the repeated practice of dispensing with Calendar Wednesday business, according to the House rules, there seems practically no chance this session for orderly consideration of our bills except by the granting of special privileges through rules from the Committee on Rules. I hope we may yet have consideration of some of the important measures which have been reported from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and the very vital legislation which will yet be reported from that committee during the next few weeks.

I thank you.

H. R. 7017—A WAY TO STAMP OUT CHILD LABOR

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on a national problem which after many years remains to be solved. I refer to child labor—still one of the dark spots of our social system. Too many of us have, unfortunately, assumed that the evils of child labor were a thing of the past. I can tell you that this is decidedly not so. Child labor, with its evils, its hardships, its senseless injustice, is a part of our daily life and living.

A PROPOSED CHILD-LABOR LAW

It is for this reason that last Wednesday, March 26, I introduced in the House of Representatives H. R. 7167, which, if adopted, will make child labor a thing of the past. Essentially this bill is designed to prevent the use of child labor by barring from the mails all articles which are manufactured, sold, packed, or delivered by child labor. My bill makes it a violation of the law to send such articles through the mails, as well as any letter, post card, statement, invoice, or check which refers to or deals in any way with such articles. The bill defines child labor as the employment of all children under the age of 16, and the employment of children between 16 and 18 for more than 6 hours a day or more than 5 days a week.

THE CHILD-LABOR AMENDMENT

I want to say first of all that I was hoping that it would not be necessary to introduce this bill. As we all know, the proposed child-labor amendment—which would be the twenty-second amendment to the Constitution of the United States—has been before the various States of this country for the last 11 years for ratification. This amendment would give Congress the power to regulate the employment of persons under 18 years of age. For an amendment to become part of the Constitution the approval of 36 States is required. Up to 1935, 20 States had ratified this amendment, and those splendid men and women who had fought for it were hoping that success was in sight.

I hoped that ratification by the States would come fast. However, during the past year only 4 additional States have ratified the child-labor amendment, whereas 14 have rejected it. There is absolutely no chance that the necessary 36 States will have ratified the amendment by next year, since most State legislatures are now adjourning and will not meet again for 2 years. So if we are going to strike at child labor, if we are going to abolish it, then we must do so through congressional legislation.

UNITED STATES CHILD-LABOR STATISTICS

Does child labor still exist in this country? Let me place before you some official figures which have been gathered on this question.

How many of us realize that in 1930 more than 400,000 children between the ages of 10 and 17 worked as laborers and operatives; that 15 percent of this 400,000 were 15 years and under; and that in this same year, 1930, just 4 short years ago, 235,000 of this same total were 10 to 13 years old?

Appalling as these official figures are, they do not paint the whole hideous picture, because it is well known that there are many children even younger who are put to work the year around at back-breaking tasks—in street trades, and in industrial home work, and in other occupations.

WORKING CONDITIONS IN CHILD LABOR

When we thoroughly examine and study reports on the conditions under which these children work, we find a shameful record of abuses, of despicable working conditions, of a greed for profit, and of total damage to the health, the safety, and even the very lives of these boys and girls.

Employers who use child labor are not interested in their safety or in their health. They are interested in making profits out of the labor of children. They force them into the least skilled and into the hardest kinds of work. In canning factories children haul heavy pails of fruit and vegetables; they stack heavy cases filled with canned goods. They work as long as 10 and 12 hours a day on wet floors, in steam from the machines in which fruit and vegetables are cooked.

In textile factories the use of child labor has for a long time been one of the darkest blots on industry. We have had stories of long hours, of children worked until they have collapsed at their machines, and of pay envelops of $2 and $3 a week for 60 and 70 hours of work.

This is what child labor is—the meanest, the most underpaid, the most injurious work. I can sketch only the high lights of such a system here, for this record of shame would fill many volumes.

ECONOMIC WASTE IN CHILD LABOR

And where did all this get us? What were the profits to the manufacturer who turned out his products by the use of this modified slavery? And what were the profits to our country which permitted this system—a system which prevented millions of children from receiving the education, the health supervision, and the social contacts to which they were entitled?

Well, we all know what happened to the manufacturer who produced huge stacks of manufactured goods which he could not sell because labor had no money with which to buy them. His own greed led to his ruin.

As for the country itself, the loss cannot be measured in dollars and cents, but just the same it is just as serious, if not more so. You cannot chain children to machines, keep them away from sunlight and fresh air, and deny them the benefit of normal schooling and play without great injury to this and to future generations.

CHILD LABOR A CRIME AGAINST SOCIETY

Of all waste the most inexcusable is the waste of potential brains and ability. In this lies the crime of child labor. It is a crime against society and ourselves, as well as against the child. When you put a child to work, you thrust him into a hard and unyielding pattern at an age when he is quickest to react to his surroundings and associations, when he is most likely to learn his special possibilities in future life; at that age child labor presses his body and spirit into a mold from which he cannot escape. He is lost both to himself and to society.

No, Mr. Speaker, the country as a whole has paid a high price for child labor. It will continue to pay that price until we have abolished it forever.

And we must abolish it. The need for doing so is greater today than ever before. It is these years of depression which, for the first time, have shown us how short-sighted our policy has been. For it is this same child labor which has thrown millions of adults into the bread lines and the relief rolls.

All available jobs belong to the adults, and not to children. When you give jobs to children, the adults become jobless. If we had realized this 5 or 10 years ago, if heads of families could have seen that by sending their children to factories and shops to work long hours for pitifully small pay, they were merely creating a condition which would in time take away their own employment, we would not have so much unemployment and so much suffering today.

N. I. R. A. NOT A SOLUTION

I would like to mention here one argument which has been made against the permanent abolition of child labor, an argument which should be shown up because it is worthless and is doing the movement much harm. Many people have said: Why all this agitation against child labor? Has not the National Industrial Recovery Act taken care of this problem? Do not most of the codes outlaw child labor? I ask the people who raise these questions some other questions.

I ask them if they are not overlooking the fact that of the 431,000 children 14 and 15 years old who were working in 1930, 61 percent were in agriculture. These have no codes. I could further tell them that of the 235,000 children 10 to 13 years old who were working in 1930, 87 percent were in agriculture. These have no codes.

Too, in 1930 there were 37,000 wage earners in commercialized agriculture. There were 23,000 bootblacks and other street workers. There were 40,000 domestic workers. They have no codes. No; for these the N. I. R. A. has no solution to offer.

Also, there is the hard fact that the National Industrial Recovery Act expires on June 16, 1935. Of course, plans are already being discussed for its renewal, but we must bear in mind two things: The National Industrial Recovery Act is emergency legislation; it is specifically temporary in nature. Furthermore, it is becoming increasingly evident that if and when new legislation of this type is enacted it is going to be confined in the main to the workers engaged in interstate commerce.

If carried out, this would leave hundreds of thousands of child laborers, in industries whose activities do not extend beyond the boundary of a single State, without protection.

My bill would apply equally to interstate and intrastate commerce. By barring the use of the mails to a firm engaged in child labor I have created an instrument which would be thoroughly effective in abolishing child labor.

UNITED STATES IS READY FOR ACTION

Ladies and gentlemen, it is my firm belief that this country is ready, and is eager, for such action. As I mentioned before, it has remained for the depression to bring home the full realization. Millions of unemployed know now the bitter truth that the struggle for work belongs to the adult. Even without these bitter lessons, the evils of child labor were sufficient to make us want to do away with this system. These lessons show that we can no longer wait. Let us have action now.

I hope that the Congress will pass H. R. 7017.

TOWNSEND OLD-AGE-PENSION PLAN

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received a communication from the office of the Governor of the State of California which states briefly:

> At the request of Governor Merriam and in accordance with the terms of the resolution, I am enclosing herewith for your information and record a certified copy of assembly joint resolution no. 39, adopted by the California State Legislature.

This resolution calls upon the Congress of the United States as follows:

> Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Congress of the United States is respectfully urged to enact H. R. 3977, introduced in the House of Representatives January 16, 1935, and cited as the "Townsend old-age revolving pension bill." The State of California urges that this legislation be enacted into law.

Yesterday my distinguished colleague and friend from California [Mr. McGROARTY], introduced a revised Townsend old-age-pension plan. I hope the Members of the House of Representatives, especially the Republicans, inasmuch as this request comes from a Republican administration in the State of California, will sign the petition on the desk to bring the Townsend plan to the floor of the House so this question may be heard and determined.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. In just a moment.

In this same connection I should like to read a press item, "Shops Guarded in Los Angeles." This occurs in my own district where the distressed people are boycotting the shops because of the high price of meat and other commodities.

If we will enact the Townsend plan, or any other real, remedial legislation, the unemployed will not be driven to take radical action of this kind.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman think it is helping to restore prosperity to increase the price of food commodities to such a point that the unemployed cannot afford to eat?

Mr. HOEPPEL. If we enact the Townsend old-age-pension plan, there will be no unemployed. This plan will put billions of dollars into circulation which will benefit not only the aged, the direct beneficiaries of the plan, but youth as well, and the stimulative effect of this increased purchasing power will be felt throughout the length and breadth of our land, among all classes and in all industries. There would be no more lack among our people for the barest necessities of life, for all would have sufficient funds with which to purchase them.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein this resolution and other papers submitted to me from the office of the Governor of California, also to include at the conclusion the old-age-pension plan introduced yesterday by my distinguished colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. McGROARTY].

Mr. YOUNG and Mr. BULWINKLE reserved the right to object.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, the resolution was offered in another body and is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as I understand it, and, furthermore, the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL] refers to the Townsend plan, and the Townsend plan, as set forth in the original bill introduced in January, has now been abandoned by Dr. Townsend and its leaders, and the Townsend plan is now embodied in a measure that was introduced in the House of Representatives yesterday by the gentleman from California [Mr. McGROARTY].

Therefore I object to the inclusion of any material other than the gentleman's own remarks.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I regret that the objection of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG] prevents the printing in the RECORD of H. R. 7154, the revised Townsend bill introduced by Mr. McGROARTY, which makes no change whatever in the essential features of the plan, as embodied in H. R. 3977.

In my opinion, legislation of this kind is very necessary, and I further wish to say that I believe no legislation thus far advanced in the new deal will have as far-reaching and positive an effect toward our national recovery as will the Townsend old-age revolving pensions, which the State of California memorializes the Congress to enact.

We should not deceive ourselves. The unemployment situation is more serious today, in a sense, than it was when our party took over the reins of government, notwithstanding that we have spent billions of dollars since that time and are continuing to appropriate additional billions with which to battle the depression.

The patience of the people is more or less under an elastic strain, and their endurance almost at the breaking point. An evidence of this is the boycott which individuals in Los Angeles are now applying as a protest against high prices of meat and, indirectly, the higher prices which they are compelled to pay for other necessities of life. According to the newspaper item, to which I have already referred, this boycott is attributed to the activities of "reds."

Certainly no one would attribute communistic sentiments to disabled war veterans who are receiving compensation, yet I received yesterday a communication from a tubercular World War veteran, who because he receives the paltry sum of $25 compensation was removed from F. E. R. A. employment, and now is given only four grocery orders per month. Nothwithstanding that this disabled veteran has a wife and 4 children, ranging in ages from 14 years to infancy, he is expected to maintain himself on his insignificant compensation of $25 per month, plus the meager food orders, a copy of which discloses that fresh meat or fish was not furnished, but that, in lieu thereof, he was supplied with corned beef. Assuredly, this is not a diet for growing youth, much less for a tubercular veteran and, assuredly, no one would attribute communistic thought to an individual of this character who joined the boycott as a protest against the inordinate and increasing high cost of living.

I am satisfied that if we enact the Townsend old-age revolving pension plan conditions such as I have described will not arise, and I do hope that the Congress will not adjourn, without examining into and passing upon the merits of the proposal of Dr. Townsend, as so admirably expressed in the McGroarty bill.

The petition, which has been placed on the Clerk's desk, to discharge the committee from further consideration of the Townsend old-age-pension plan, as embodied in the McGroarty bill, and to bring it to the floor of the House for action, bears only 57 signatures. Of this number, there are 14 signatures of Representatives from the State of California, who are to be commended for their just attitude, expressing as it does the American principles of democracy, which demand that the voice of the minority as well as that of the majority shall be heard in the councils of our Nation.

In conclusion, I reiterate my former request that every Member who is interested in giving our aged citizens a square deal and in increasing the opportunities of our young people sign the petition to which I have referred, in order that full and free discussion may be had on this humane measure, the enactment of which, in my opinion, will do more than anything yet advanced to bring about our national recovery.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 100

Whereas approximately 4,000 persons rely upon the commercial fishing industry for their sole means of livelihood; and

Whereas upward of 6,000 persons are dependent upon the incomes of such persons; and

Whereas the sea-food industry has operated at a loss for several years last past and is seriously in need of aid which can come only as the result of increased consumer interest and the concomitant increase in consumption of sea food; and

Whereas it is highly desirable not only to subsidize this industry but also to devise ways and means of making fresh fish and sea food caught off the Atlantic coast by such fishermen available to the hundreds of thousands of persons living in the inland States at moderate prices; and

Whereas it is the sense of the people of the State of New York that some action and cooperation on the part of the Federal Government is absolutely necessary to promote the sale and consumption of sea food and thereby avoid the demoralization and destruction of the fishing industry: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, respectfully memorialized to enact with all convenient speed legislation establishing a sea-food distributing and marketing bureau for the purpose of protecting and encouraging the fisheries of the Atlantic coast, subsidizing the sea-food industry and promoting the sale and consumption of sea food; and it is further

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That copies of this resolution be immediately transmitted to the Secretary of the United States Senate, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and to each Member of Congress elected from the State of New York, and that the latter be urged to use their best efforts to accomplish the purpose of this resolution.

Mr. COPELAND also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 103

Whereas a resolution providing for the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski is now pending in the present session of the United States Congress; and

Whereas the 11th day of October 1779 is the date in American history of the heroic death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who died from wounds received on October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.; and

Whereas the States of Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Nevada, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and other States of the Union through legislative enactment designated October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

Whereas it is fitting that the recurring anniversary of this day be commemorated with suitable patriotic and public exercises in observing and commemorating the heroic death of this great American hero of the Revolutionary War; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has by legislative enactment designated October 11, 1929, October 11, 1931, October 11, 1932, and October 11, 1934, to be General Pulaski's Memorial Day in the United States of America: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York—

1. That we hereby memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, the General Pulaski's Memorial Day resolution now pending in the United States Congress.

2. That copies of this resolution, properly authenticated, be sent forthwith to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and each of the United States Senators and Representatives from the State of New York.

Mr. GIBSON presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Vermont, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the Department of State at Washington has given notice of intent to negotiate trade agreement with Canada; and

Whereas one of the principal, possibly the principal, item of export from Canada into the United States is softwood and hardwood lumber, rough and dressed. The greater part of it comes into our northeastern territory; and

Whereas the present tariff is $3 per thousand feet revenue and $1 per thousand feet excise tax; and should this tariff, through reciprocal agreement with Canada, be reduced or eliminated, the effect on our northeastern lumber manufacturers will be extremely serious. It will especially affect the lumber industry of the State of Vermont, as well as the other New England States, because the species produced in Canada and shipped into our territory are the same as we produce; and

Whereas the lumber manufacturers in the United States are obliged to operate under the Lumber Code, the present costs are higher than the cost of production of those Canadian species which are shipped into our markets; and

Whereas, because of this additional cost, it is absolutely necessary that a suitable duty be kept on the imported material; and

Whereas if the $3 or $4 duty should be removed it would have ill effects upon the lumber industry of the New England States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That the general assembly deplore any attempt of the State Department at Washington to remove the trade barriers with Canada and to allow Canadian lumber to come into the United States free or at a reduced rate of duty, believing the same to be against the best interests of our State; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to each member of the Vermont delegation at Washington and to the chairman of the committee for reciprocity information.

Mr. McCARRAN presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Senate joint resolution memorializing Congress to increase National Guard units within the State of Nevada and appropriate funds for the building of suitable armories for the housing of same

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Nevada, hereby respectfully represents that—

Whereas the plan of the Federal administration is to decrease unemployment through a large public-works building program; and

Whereas we feel that the State of Nevada should be authorized a substantial increase in National Guard personnel and that the State of Nevada should be allotted a sum of not less than $300,000 for the building of National Guard armories where needed in the State; and

Whereas we feel that the steps in this direction already taken by the present administration will be in consonance with the suggestion herein made, and that the same will hasten the hope and anticipations of our President for the benefit of a large portion of our population: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of Nevada, That we respectfully request the Congress of the United States to set aside $300,000 for the building of National Guard armories within the State of Nevada and to authorize at least five additional units of the National Guard to the State of Nevada; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Nevada forward a properly certified copy of this memorial to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each of our Senators in the United States Senate, and to our Representative in Congress.

Mr. McCARRAN also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Assembly joint resolution

Whereas for the past 4 years the general appropriation act of the State of Nevada has carried a biennial appropriation of $400 for the promotion of civilian rifle practice, to be expended under the direction of the adjutant general; and

Whereas such appropriation was authorized for the purpose of promoting civilian rifle practice within the State of Nevada in accordance with the act of Congress creating the board for the promotion of civilian practice in the United States; and

Whereas under the authority of such board civilian clubs have been organized and are now existing in the State of Nevada, whose purpose is the promotion of rifle practice, and such clubs have organized the "Nevada State Rifle Association", which cooperates with the adjutant general in the promotion of civilian rifle practice throughout the State of Nevada and holds annual rifle matches within this State and will continue to hold same; and

Whereas the sum which has heretofore been appropriated has been insufficient to cover the cost of holding such State rifle matches, and it is desirable to have additional assistance for such purposes: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of Nevada, That the adjutant general be requested to communicate with the Secretary of the Navy, with the view of having a detail of enlisted men from the marine detachment now on duty at the naval ammunition depot at Hawthorne, Nev., assigned to temporary duty, not exceeding 3 days, on the occasion of the holding of such annual State rifle contest; and be it further

Resolved, That the adjutant general likewise address the commandant of such naval ammunition depot at Hawthorne, Nev., and the commander of the marine detachment at such point, requesting their aid and assistance in the promotion of such State rifle contest by arranging for matches between civilian rifle clubs of the State of Nevada and members of the marine detachment on duty at such depot; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state transmit a certified copy of this resolution to the Secretary of the Navy at Washington, D. C., and to our Senators and Representative in Congress.

Mr. McCARRAN also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Assembly joint resolution memorializing Congress for the creation of a separate railway mail district to be located in the Federal building at Reno, Nev.

Whereas the State of Nevada is situated with high Sierra Nevada Mountains to the west, which effectually cut off transportation from all except one or two points, and even these are cut off completely during a considerable portion of the year when deep snow makes highways impassable. Only two railways cross this chain of mountains toward the west; and

Whereas to the east it is approximately 550 miles to the Utah line. The State extends north and south—or perhaps it would be better to say from the northwest to the southeast—a distance of approximately 650 miles; and

Whereas practically this entire territory is isolated from all parts of the United States, and we must depend for our economic and industrial existence almost entirely upon ourselves. Transportation in this immense district becomes very much of a problem and, we believe, cannot be adequately handled by persons residing from 300 to 600 miles distant; and

Whereas we citizens of Nevada believe we are not receiving our full share of service or monetary benefits due us by reason of supervision of the Railway Mail Service being located at such great distances away. We believe we should have a supervisory force of the Railway Mail Service located in this State; and

Whereas under the existing conditions the transportation of mails in Nevada is under the supervision of the chief clerk, District No. 3, located at San Francisco, and the chief clerk, District No. 1, Ogden, Utah. It has been the custom in the past of domiciling practically 90 percent of Nevada appointees in the Railway Mail Service at terminals, either in California or Utah, adjacent to their headquarters, for convenience and administrative purposes. Such practice results in appointees from Nevada losing their Nevada citizenship and becoming citizens of an alien State, their incomes, estimated at from $35,000 to $45,000 per annum, naturally being spent where they live instead of in their appointive State. Of a total of about 30 clerks and substitutes appointed from Nevada, only 6 clerks and 1 substitute are now domiciled within the geographical borders of this State. All other appointees, although working and earning their living in Nevada, are citizens of neighboring States. It is our opinion that this great territory of Nevada is sufficient for the creation of a separate railway mail district, under the supervision of a chief clerk, with office and personnel to be located in the Federal building at Reno: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of Nevada, That our Senators and Representative at Washington be urged to use their influence with the proper authorities for the creation of a new district to supervise and administer this region, as shown in the following outlines: Generally that portion of California situated on the eastern divide in drainage of the Sierra Nevada mountain range and extending from the Oregon line on the north to Owenyo, Calif., on the south; the counties of Humboldt, Washoe, Pershing, Lander, Eureka, Churchill, Storey, Lyon, Ormsby, Douglas, Mineral, Nye, and Esmeralda, in Nevada; all post offices, closed-pouch, or stage routes entering or terminating in same; all service on Ogden and San Francisco railway post offices between Reno and Carlin, Nev.; all service on Reno and Mina, Reno and Minden, Alturas and Reno railway post offices; and summer service on Truckee and Lake Tahoe railway post offices; and be it further

Resolved, That properly certified copies of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state to each of our Senators in the United States Senate and to our Representative in Congress.

Mr. McCARRAN also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Assembly joint resolution memorializing Congress to purchase certain lands adjacent to Lake Tahoe, in the State of Nevada, for the establishment thereon of a park for recreational purposes, and for the establishment thereon of an emergency aviation field

Whereas the lands lying in the basin surrounding Lake Tahoe, taken together with the setting of the lake, constitute one of the grandest scenic beauties in the United States; and

Whereas the lands surrounding Lake Tahoe are rapidly coming into the hands of private parties who use the same for commercial purposes; and

Whereas the people of the State of Nevada and of the surrounding territory in the State of California feel that an area for recreational purposes should be set aside for the benefit of the people visiting this scenic playground; and

Whereas said sites would be of great value to the Government of the United States in case of emergency as a landing field for aircraft; and

Whereas there is now available a limited area of suitable land; and

Whereas the said tracts are almost on a direct air line between the city of San Francisco and the Federal munitions plant at Hawthorne, Nev.; and

Whereas there are six improved highway routes leading to the Lake Tahoe region from the States of Nevada and California; and

Whereas the State of Nevada does not have within its boundaries any public parks, recreation grounds, or aviation fields: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of Nevada, That Congress be memorialized to make an appropriation in the sum of $150,000 for the purchase and improvement of an area, and that the Public Works Administration be directed to assist in making such an area applicable for the purpose hereinbefore set out; and be it further

Resolved, That our Senators in the United States Senate and our Representative in Congress be urged to use their best efforts in the furtherance of the objects of this resolution; and be it further

Resolved, That duly certified copies of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Nevada to each of our Senators and to our Representative in Congress.

EXPENDITURE OF RELIEF FUNDS IN PUERTO RICO

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to read a three-page letter touching on the expenditures of relief funds in Puerto Rico, because the program is so large that I feel Senators ought to know what is contemplated to be done under Puerto Rico's share of the public-works bill. The letter is addressed to me by Mr. Carlos E. Chardon, and reads as follows:

PAN AMERICAN UNION,
Washington, D. C., March 12, 1935.

Hon. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Chairman Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: Allow me to correct the erroneous impression that the reconstruction program of Puerto Rico is only going to benefit 750 cane planters (which are to be moved to good cane lands) and 7,500 homesteaders (in the marginal cane lands).

The objectives of the sugar program are more far-reaching to the island's economy: (1) It attempts to reduce permanently the sugar production by exchange of good lands for marginal and submarginal sugar lands; (2) as soon as restriction is accomplished through this exchange the rest of the industry can go ahead normally without any restriction and sugar could be produced at a cheaper cost; (3) land monopoly would be partially broken; (4) the production of food crops would be greatly increased in the 75,000 acres of marginal lands; and (5) a temporary legislation like the Sugar Act could be converted into a permanent reconstruction policy. This would be going farther ahead than any legislation of a similar nature in the continent.

The following would be the results of the sugar program at the end of 2 years (the complete program taking 3 years to be fully developed):

Sugar program—Results at end of second year

Permanent reduction (in tons of sugar)	100,000
Number of colonos whose gross income will increase from 25 to 33 percent	500
Additional gross income to these colonos (1½ percent more for cane ground and 30 cents per ton saved in transportation)	$1,020,000

This is the portion in particular which I thought was worthy of the attention of the Senate:

Additional pay rolls to laborers in sugar regions and marginal lands in house and other construction (2 years)	$3,625,000
Additional employment, laborers	13,475
Persons taken away from relief rolls (above x 5.7)	76,800
New 10-acre homesteads	5,000
Concrete houses for laborers and homesteaders	7,500
Additional vocational educational units	30
Increase in school attendance, close to	5,000
White-collar jobs (administration of homesteads, social workers, vocational teachers, etc.)	250
Additional acreage in food crops	30,000
Homesteaders on a subsistence basis (with families)	28,500
Savings in imports of food crops, $30 per acre (theoretical)	$600,000

During the third year the permanent reduction of sugar could be increased to 150,000 tons or more, and the full benefits of the sugar program could then be felt by the industry, the farmers, and the workers. But this covers only sugar.

The coffee program of our plan we calculate will yield the following results at the end of the second year:

Pay rolls to coffee laborers at $156 a year (8,000 the first year; 8,000 the second year)	$2,496,000
Pay rolls to laborers in house constructions, minimum	$2,400,000
Additional employment, laborers	16,500
Coffee farmers will receive in cash (for purchase of land)	$600,000
Coffee farmers will receive fertilizers for demonstration (tons, in 2 years)	3,000
New 3-acre plots for laborers	8,000
Concrete houses for laborers	8,000
Persons taken away from relief rolls	95,000
White-collar jobs	175
Additional vocational educational units	20
Increased school attendance (about)	3,500
Homesteaders on a subsistence basis (with families)	45,600
Insurance fund for coffee plantations (minimum)	$5,000,000

This covers only the sugar and coffee programs up to the end of the second year. The whole program contemplates also extensive development of the hydroelectric system, rural electrification, a tobacco program similar to that of coffee, and extensive public-works program, a 10-year reforestation plan, industrial development, tourist trade, slum clearance, and many other projects of minor character. The plan recommends an expenditure of $103,000,000.

A program of such wide nature which contemplates so fundamental changes in Puerto Rico's economy can be only carried out under an authority directly under the President, with wide and ample administrative powers and completely divorced from political influence. The administration of the authority may be safely placed in the hands of responsible Puerto Ricans.

In my judgment, the funds going to Puerto Rico under the big relief bill should not be spent in "relief and work relief", as section 1 of said bill now provides; they should be diverted through definite channels leading to a permanent and definite reconstruction policy.

The opportunity for Puerto Rico is now unique in our history. The President has made a formal public commitment to this program, and the plan itself has been approved by the Departments of Agriculture and Interior. I therefore wish to present these facts to you as Chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions for your consideration.

Sincerely yours,

CARLOS E. CHARDON.

It is a very far-reaching plan which is in contemplation for Puerto Rico, and we ought not to allow the expenditure of a huge sum like this to go through without at least being put on notice. I hope Senators will read the letter as it will appear in the RECORD.

PUBLIC-UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, last night the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] delivered an address over the radio on the holding-company bill now pending before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate. I desire to quote one paragraph from that address, and I wish to say before I quote it that I am informed that, although the address was delivered only last night, yet by 12 o'clock noon today the Senator from Montana received more than a thousand telegrams from Philadelphia in regard to that paragraph. It is quite enlightening, and I think Senators ought to hear it. The Senator from Montana said:

I hope the good people of Philadelphia are listening to me tonight. You know I have an ever-growing warm spot in my heart for Philadelphia. More letters have come out of that metropolis with my name on them in the last month than I have received from my home State of Montana during the last 2 years. As a matter of fact I am sure the census taker was wrong about Philadelphia's population because his figure does not compare with the number of letters they have sent me. Nice chummy letters, too. They call me everything from such high-class terms as "rogue" and "rascal" on down the scale. Most of them show the fine hand of the United Gas Improvement Co. The best of them must have come from Gertrude Stein. It consists of this: "It makes me sick to think how sick I get when I think about you." Such popularity must be deserved. I have however been strangely neglected by Mr. Insull's Chicago. It must be that that city has been Insull-ated against my charm.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire address be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RADIO ADDRESS BY SENATOR BURTON K. WHEELER, OF MONTANA, APRIL 2, 1935, ON THE PUBLIC UTILITY HOLDING COMPANY BILL

I am going to talk to you tonight about the public-utility holding-company bill pending before both branches of the United States Congress, the bill to carry out President Roosevelt's ideas and policies on public-utility holding companies.

I hope the good people of Philadelphia are listening to me tonight. You know, I have an ever-growing warm spot in my heart for Philadelphia. More letters have come out of that metropolis with my name on them in the last month than I have received from my home State of Montana during the last 2 years. As a matter of fact, I am sure the census taker was wrong about Philadelphia's population, because his figure does not compare with the number of letters they have sent me. Nice chummy letters, too. They call me everything, from such high-class terms as "rogue" and "rascal" on down the scale. Most of them show the fine hand of the United Gas Improvement Co. The best of them must have come from Gertrude Stein. It consists of this: "It makes me sick to think how sick I get when I think about you." Such popularity must be deserved. I have, however, been strangely neglected by Mr. Insull's Chicago. It must be that that city has been Insull-ated against my charm.

There has been more lying propaganda about this bill, and on a larger scale, than about any other bill I have ever seen. The Power Trust has tried to make investors believe that the holding-company bill imposes what they call a "death sentence" on all the private companies in the electric light and power industry. It keeps talking about the "wreck of a $12,000,000,000 industry." That's bunk. The holding companies' title affects only the public-utility holding companies themselves, companies like Associated Gas & Electric, Cities Service, Electric Bond & Share, North American Co., and United Corporation. It doesn't lay a finger on the kind of a company which actually operates the electric light and power plant in your home town, and in which many of you have invested your savings.

The public utility holding company is a kind of high finance company which makes a business of acquiring control of the companies which actually run the electric light and power plants in your home town. Sometimes a single holding company run by a few insiders controls thousands of such electric light and power plants. Those thousands of local electric light and power plants may be scattered all over the country, but the heads of the holding company run them all for their own advantage from an office in New York, Chicago, or some other big financial center. Perhaps a better name for them would be "public utility holding-the-bag companies."

Usually these insiders get control of numerous local companies with the investment of very little money of their own. There are extreme cases where investments of less than $50,000 control subsidiary utility investments having face values in excess of a billion dollars. There was a case reported the other day by a New York State legislative committee investigating holding companies where insiders sold the public $100,000,000 of holding company securities in 1 year at a profit to themselves of thirty-four million. That illustrates the way a few people through a holding company can use other people's money. And how well they have succeeded the figures show. In 1932 thirteen large holding company groups controlled over 75 percent of the private operating utility industry. Three of these groups alone, Electric Bond & Share, United Corporation, and Insull controlled among themselves over 40 percent of that entire operating industry.

The holding company promoters manage to do this through the help of clever lawyers and the hocus-pocus corporate device called the holding company. The holding company buys control of the voting stock of the local power and light company. Then the insiders get control of the voting stock of the holding company. They sell a lot of other securities which haven't any right to vote to the outside public. "Outside" describes the public exactly. The poor suckers who buy that kind of a security are outside the company and outside their money at the same time.

Will Rogers remarked the other day: "A holding company is something where you hand an accomplice the goods while the policeman searches you." The same kind of pressures that are being brought on you as investors were immediately brought on Will to retract. He did retract in the papers last Sunday in his inimitable way: "Well, I didn't figure that little half-witted remark would upset the whole holding company business. But I forgot that a remark generally hurts in proportion to its truth. If it's so untrue as to be ridiculous why nobody pays any attention to it." I will wager that the holding company crowd will now try to make Will retract his retraction.

Now, it's that kind of company that this bill is after. The bill does not hurt operating companies or the securities of operating companies in the slightest. It benefits operating companies by taking off their backs the load of the tribute they have now to pay to holding companies.

The holding company insiders who are trying to block the President on this title keep telling you that it interferes with operating companies. That's bunk. They tell you that it will confiscate investments in the securities of operating companies. That's also bunk. They try to tell you that it will confiscate investments in the holding companies themselves. And even that's bunk.

The arguments of these holding-company advocates are complicated when they argue at all. I am not able to take up point by point the technical defects in their misleading position during this half-hour talk. But in a speech I made last Thursday in the Senate I did answer those complicated arguments. That speech is in printed form. If you will write me at my office in Washington, D. C., I'll send you that speech.

Remember the public utility business is not a private business subject to the normal restraints of competition. It is a legalized monopoly given special privileges by local government to serve public ends. Regulation is supposed to protect the public consumer and public investor against that monopoly. But no local community and no State can handle these giant corporations with all their tremendous resources of money and lawyers and political power which this holding device has assembled. We are now testing whether even the Nation itself is strong enough to stand against them.

The argument that we should try to distinguish between "good" companies and "bad" companies forgets how human and how variable and how temporary are the causes which make one company "good" and another company "bad." An overnight change of management can transform a company that has hitherto been the best in the business into the worst. A change in the outlook of the same man once changed the best company in the utility business into the worst. The holding company advocates assure us that the Insull abuses will never occur again. But there was not a single man in the utility business who would not have recognized Samuel Insull in 1914 as the best operator in the field and the safest bet for the investor's money. But bad banking influences changed Samuel Insull from a careful and conservative manager into a Napoleon of high finance. The continuation of the supposed "goodness" of what is generally held up as the best of the holding companies today depends on the direction of a single individual. His fortunes in turn are tied up in the operation of a series of investment trusts of none too savory reputation. If the depression had not intervened to stop the pyramided operations of these investment trusts, that company might very well have gone the disastrous way of Insull.

The truth is that there is no scientific reason at the present time why we need holding-company systems sprawled over the whole United States. We do not need or want utility combinations that aren't confined to the service of an area where they are needed to tie together a group of related operating companies. The only death sentence the bill pronounces on holding companies is to say, "You've got to trim down to what's absolutely necessary to serve the public if you want to go on doing business in this country. You've got to do that for the sake of the consuming public. You've got to do that for the sake of the investing public who have always mistakenly thought that through you they were investing in a sound and useful and regulated operating business." I don't know or care whether you call legislation which does that "elimination" or "regulation." But any kind of legislation that will not restrict the use of the holding device to a field where it performs a demonstrably useful and necessary function would not be regulation at all. It will simply give recognition under the screen of a few puny rules to a dangerous business of stock jobbing and insiders' profits that has no place in the modern operating utility business and has no justification to exist. That kind of so-called "regulation" the utilities are proposing is not real regulation—it is simply camouflage for the toleration of an entrenched wrong.

Let's not stick our head in a sand of regulatory words and miss the big realities. If we mean business these utility empires have got to be shorn of their present tremendous powers. If we mean business these utility empires have got to be brought down to proportions where they are manageable by the public and can justify their usefulness for the public good. If they are left as big as they are now, all the piddling rules in the world masquerading under the big name of regulation won't stop their repeating the abuses of 1929 as soon as they get a chance. All those little rules will no more hold them than a single strand of barbed wire can hold the weight and power of an Army tank. Within 1 year they'll again be regulating their regulators.

I'm like the holding companies—I have doubts about this bill. But my doubts are whether it goes far enough to be realistic. I remember how Congress and the reformers glowed with achievement when they passed the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, the Clayton Act, and other similar legislation. But if those acts had done half what they promised they would have nipped this holding-company business in the bud long ago. A democratic community cannot cut too fine with private empires which threaten its very existence. You can no more risk regulating a giant holding company than you can risk domesticating a rattlesnake. Any compromising with this problem will be simply a cowardly betrayal of Congress's duty because of fear of power-trust money in the next election. And I can tell the power gang that even the greenest new deal Member of Congress has no illusions that he can purchase their forbearance in his next campaign by running away from this bill. He knows, and every "new dealer" and Progressive in Washington knows, that between the power gang and us there can be no peace, now, in 1936, or ever.

In his message of March 12, the President gave investors in both holding-company and operating-company securities assurances that their interests would not be harmed by the bill. You may remember that he said, "So much has been said through chain letters and circulars and by word of mouth that misrepresents the intent and purpose of a new law that it is important that the people of the country understand once and for all the actual facts of the case. Such a measure will not destroy legitimate business or wholesome and productive investment. It will not destroy a penny of actual value of those operating properties which holding companies now control and which holding-company securities represent insofar as they have any value. On the contrary, it will surround the necessary reorganization of the holding company with safeguards which will, in fact, protect the investor."

In his broadcast of February 17, Mr. RAYBURN, who introduced the bill in the House, gave you the same assurances. Tonight as the sponsor of the bill in the Senate I give you the same assurances. Who tells you the bill will hurt your investments? Those same people who sold you stock at somewhere around 100, the same stock that is probably now selling somewhere around 2. They're urging you to stick with them, so they can save that 2 for you after they lost the 98.

Now, Mr. Investor, as a matter of common sense, which advisers are you going to trust? Which are you going to believe? I don't promise you that your stock will go back to 100 if this bill goes through. I'm not selling green goods; I'm not a holding company. But I do tell you that you have a much better chance to save what is really left of your investment if this bill passes than if the holding-company managers and bankers are free to waste the last of it by the same high finance.

I would not talk so roughly and bluntly, if the power companies and American big business in general were not putting on a desperate, insidious campaign of misleading misstatements regarding the objects of this bill, in the hope that frightened investors will bring such pressure on Members of Congress that those Members will be afraid to think for themselves.

It is an old strategy of tyrants to persuade their victims to fight their battle for them. They hide behind the skirts of their indispensable widows and orphans, and say to Congress, "No matter how bad we have been, no matter how dangerous we are, you can't touch us. Although we fooled them, a great proportion of the solid people of this country bought our securities. So you've got to leave us alone."

The lobby against this bill is not only working hard in Washington; it is working hard in every community in the country, and working in the most insidious and unsuspected ways. Holding-company managers and bankers, whose jobs and profits and whose control over your jobs and over your business may be at stake under this bill, hold in the palm of their hand nearly the entire operating utility industry of this country. As I've told you before, in 1932, 13 large holding-company groups controlled over 75 percent of the electric operating utility industry, and 3 of these groups alone—Electric Bond & Share, United Corporation, and Insull—controlled among themselves over 40 percent of that entire operating industry. That means that the managers of the giant holding companies hire and fire the manager of the little power plant in your home town. They hire and fire all its employees. They hire and fire the local lawyers who have the much-prized utility-company retainer. In many instances they control banks and dictate the policies of the local newspapers. And directly or indirectly, crudely or subtly, you can be sure they have passed orders all the way down that line to frighten you—to frighten you by direct statements; to frighten you by long, technical booklets of financial and legal arguments, carefully calculated to impress you, but not to be understandable to you; to frighten you at lunch; to frighten you at tea; to frighten you in the course of many of the most innocent contacts, where you would never expect you were being reached, even if only by simply repeating over and over again, "This terrible bill is going to ruin everybody."

An employee of your local power and light company has probably long ago come to your door and told you what a terrible bill this is and asked you to sign a letter. He may have been the employee of an Electric Bond & Share subsidiary who wrote me this letter I am going to read to you:

"DEAR SIR: Please find enclosed printed matter which is given to all employees of the power and light company. Also a card which they are asked to have signed by four voters.

"They are also asking all employees to write a letter to each Congressman in the Senate and House of Representatives who are on the Committee on Interstate Commerce. Then he must bring them all to the power and light company office to be checked. These men resent this very much, but they know they had better do as asked or their jobs will be endangered. I mention this to you so that when you get a flood of letters you will know how and why you received them. I am 100 percent behind your Wheeler-Rayburn bill, and sincerely hope you put it over."

Every time Congress proposes to look into a particularly rotten situation hush-hushers try to tell us that public airing of rottenness hurts business confidence. When my late distinguished colleague, Senator Walsh, investigated the Fall-Doheny oil scandal and when at the same time I began to investigate Harry Daugherty's Department of Justice, the conservative press belabored both of us for upsetting and even attempting to destroy the Government. When the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate started its investigation of high finance which produced the Securities and Exchange Act there was a hue and cry that the investigation would bring runs on all the banks and that any attempt to regulate the stock markets would bring on a panic such as the country had never known. I have been pressing recently for an investigation of railroad financing. The lobbyists are trying to block it on the ground that exposure of the facts would ruin the railroad credit, forgetting conveniently the fact that the railroads have no credit now except at the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Congress has learned, I hope, that the truth helps, not hurts, business confidence.

As for the threats of socialism and communism alleged to be hidden in this bill, many of us share a firm conviction that it is only by laws like this that we can avert a destruction of the traditionally American independence and initiative. This bill tried to break down business units grown so big and so dangerous that, if left that way, the Government will inevitably have to take them over and socialize them. The bill tries to save them from socialization—tries to preserve them for private enterprise. When any private socialism—and that is what these giant superholding companies amount to—gets too big, the people will demand its abolition or that the people take it over.

The only way we can save capitalism in this country is to encourage a decentralized system of moderate-sized businesses in which enough men have the status of master, not of servant or peasant, and where no one man or little group of men can so blanket any field of endeavor that other men have little or no opportunity.

The people of this country no longer revere the mysterious abilities of great benevolent captains of finance and industry whom they once thought knew how to run billion-dollar businesses for the public benefit. The people have learned for good and all that the accumulation of vast powers by the supercaptains of industry has done the public no good; I hope the people have learned for good and all that abilities capable of running billion-dollar industries do not exist. There is real hope that we can maintain indefinitely a decentralized democratic capitalism in this country. There is no hope that we can indefinitely maintain the kind of centralized plutocratic capitalism which has definitely proved itself morally and intellectually incapable of honest leadership for the benefit of the many.

Every morning and every evening, and even at noon here in Washington, my favorite newspaper publisher amuses me with warnings of the Communist propaganda which is sapping the foundations of our social order. But let us not deceive ourselves. Soap-box orators, parlor pinks, labor agitators, and bespectacled professors do not endanger American institutions. Revolutionary changes are not brought about by oratory but by a long growing sense of oppression. The utility holding company with its present powers has been an instrument and a symbol of imperial oppression in the industry and has utterly failed tc serve the public interest in any way, shape, or form. It has given unwarranted economic power over other people's wealth to unscrupulous stock manipulators. They in turn have used that power unfairly, unwisely, and even corruptly for their own advantage. It has been an instrument by which a few men have been able to set up a system of private socialism, which has crowded our boasted individual enterprise and local initiative out of one of the most important of our industries.

It has been a leader in a general trend of American business which, in the words of the President, "has made most American citizens once traditionally independent owners of their own businesses hopelessly dependent for their daily bread upon the favor of a very few." If any of you think that trend can long continue to humiliate a traditionally independent people, I tell you that I know it can't.

I believe that democracy belongs to the future, with its boundless hopes and possibilities. Some day in America autocracy will be no man's land, a bleak and barren region of darkness upon whose portals should be inscribed, "Abandon hope all ye that enter here." Democracy is "all men's land", the land of the future, spanned by the everlasting rainbow of hope, "where thrones have crumbled and kings are dust, where labor reaps its full reward, and work and worth go hand in hand."

COMPULSORY R. O. T. C. TRAINING—ARTICLE BY LT. COL. ORVEL JOHNSON

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in view of conditions of which we are aware, abroad and at home, we should give reasonable encouragement to the R. O. T. C. Lt. Col. Orvel Johnson has discussed this subject in an article which is impressive and sound and should have wide circulation, and I ask to have it inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT DECIDES FEDERAL CONSTITUTION NOT VIOLATED BY STATE SCHOOLS REQUIRING STUDENTS TO TAKE MILITARY TRAINING, REGARDLESS OF "CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTIONS." DUTY OF ALL CITIZENS TO BEAR ARMS NOT ALTERED BY BRIAND-KELLOGG PEACE PACT

(By Orvel Johnson, lieutenant colonel Inf-Res., director general, R. O. T. C. Association of the United States, member of the bar of Oklahoma, the District of Columbia, and the Supreme Court of the United States)

A most important and far-reaching decision was handed down by the United States Supreme Court December 3, 1934, in the case of Hamilton et al. against The Regents of the University of California, in which the Justices were unanimous in their opinion. Mr. Justice Butler delivered the opinion of the Court. This case came up on appeal from a judgment of the highest court of California sustaining a State law that requires students at its university to take a course in military science and tactics, the validity of which was by the appellants challenged as repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States.

The parties to the suit were Albert W. Hamilton, a minor, by Albert Hamilton, his guardian ad litem; W. Alonzo Reynolds, Jr., a minor, by W. Alonzo Reynolds, his guardian ad litem; Albert Hamilton and W. Alonzo Reynolds, appellants, against The Regents of the University of California, Robert Gordon Sproul, and Ernest Carroll Moore.

The appellants are the above-named minors and the fathers of each as his guardian ad litem and individually. They are taxpayers and citizens of the United States and of California. Appellees are the regents constituting a corporation created by the State to administer the university, its president, and provost. Appellants applied to the State supreme court for a writ of mandate compelling appellees to admit the minors into the university as students. The material allegations of the petition are:

In 1933 each of these minors became students in the university, conforming to all its requirements other than that compelling him to take the course in military science and tactics in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps (R. O. T. C.), which they asserted to be "an integral part of the Military Establishment of the United States"; that "the courses in military training are those prescribed by the War Department"; and that the "arms, equipment, and uniforms for use of students in such courses are furnished by the War Department of the United States Government."

"These minors are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and connected religious societies and organizations. For many years their fathers have been ordained ministers of that church."

The Methodist Church has for years vigorously opposed all military training and other preparation for national defense, together with all forms of military service. At its general conference in 1928 it declared: "We renounce war as an instrument of national policy because our Nation led the nations of the world in signing the Paris peace pact (Briand-Kellogg) * * ." In 1932 the general conference of that church adopted as a part of its tenets and discipline: " * * Furthermore, we believe it to be the duty of the churches to give moral support to those individuals who hold conscientious scruples against participation in military training or military service."

Appellants as members of that church and feeling bound by its tenets and discipline petitioned the university for exemption from military training and activities of the training corps, upon the ground of their religious and conscientious objections to war and military training. Their petition was denied by the regents of the university, who refused to make military training optional or to exempt these students. Several other allegations of the petition may be disregarded as not important.

The university is a land-grant college by its acceptance of the terms and conditions of an act of Congress, known as the "Morrill Act", approved July 2, 1862 (12 Stat. 503), under which public lands were donated to the several States in order that upon the conditions specified all moneys derived from the sale of such lands or from the sale of scrip issued under the act should be invested and constitute a perpetual fund the interest of which should be inviolably appropriated by each State accepting the benefits of the act "to the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading objects shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and mechanic arts, in such manner as the legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life."

March 23, 1868, the Legislature of California passed an act creating the university "in order to devote to the largest purposes of education the benefactions made to the State" by the Morrill Act. Statutes 1867–1868, page 248, paragraph 5, reads: "And in order to fulfill the requirements of said act of Congress, all able-bodied male students in the university, whether pursuing full or partial courses in any college, or as students at large, shall receive instruction and discipline in military tactics in such manner and to such extent as the regents shall prescribe."

The State constitution, as amended November 5, 1918, makes effective the provisions of the Morrill Act. September 15, 1931, pursuant to the above act and constitution, the regents issued their order requiring "every able-bodied student * * * as a condition of his attendance as a student to enroll in and complete not less than one and one-half units of instruction in military science and tactics each semester of his attendance until such time as he shall receive a total of six units of such instruction * * *."

In the court below appellants assailed the laws and order above referred to as repugnant to the California constitution, the regents' order, and the Constitution and laws of the United States.

The State court denied the petition for a writ of mandate. Appellants applied for a rehearing. The court, denying the application, held the regents were within their lawful power in issuing their order, and that the suspension of the students because of their refusal to pursue the required courses in military training involved no violation of their rights under the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Justice Butler, speaking for the court, said: "Appellees contend that this court has no jurisdiction because, as they say, the regents' order is not a 'statute of any State' within the meaning of paragraph 237 (a), Judicial Code. But by the California constitution the regents are, with exceptions not material here, fully empowered in respect of the organization and government of the university, which, as it has been held, is a constitutional department or function of the State government (Williams v. Wheeler (1914), 23 Cal. App. 619, 623; Wallace v. Regents (1925), 75 Cal. App. 274, 277). The assailed order prescribes a rule of conduct and applies to all students belonging to the defined class. And it was because of its violation that the regents by resolution suspended these students.

"The meaning of 'statute of any State' is not limited to acts of State legislatures. It is used to include every act legislative in character to which the State gives sanction, no distinction being made between acts of State legislatures and other exertions of the State law-making power. King Mfg. Co. v. Augusta (277 U. S. 100); Sultan Ry. Co. v. Dept. of Labor (277 U. S. 135). It follows that the order making military instruction compulsory is a statute of the State within the meaning of paragraph 237 (a).

"The allegations of the petition do not mean that California has divested itself of any part of its power solely to determine what military training shall be offered or required at the university. While, by acceptance of the benefits of the Morrill Act of 1862 and the creation of the university in order appropriately to comply with the terms of the grant, the State became bound to offer students in that university instruction in military tactics, it remains untrammeled by Federal enactment and is entirely free to determine for itself the branches of military training to be provided, the content of the instruction to be given, and the objectives to be attained. That State—as did each of the other States of the Union—for the proper discharge of its obligations as beneficiary of the grant made the course in military instruction compulsory upon students. Recently Wisconsin and Minnesota have made it elective. The question whether the State has bound itself to require students to take the training is not here involved. The validity of the challenged order does not depend upon the terms of the land grant.

"The petition is not to be understood as showing that students required by the regents' order to take the prescribed course thereby serves in the Army or in any sense becomes a part of the Military Establishment of the United States. * * * The States are interested in the safety of the United States, strength of its military forces, and readiness to defend them in war and against every attack of public enemies. Gilbert v. Minnesota (254 U. S. 325, 328–329); State v. Holm (139 Minn. 267, 273).

"Undoubtedly every State has authority to train its able-bodied male citizens of suitable age appropriately to develop fitness, should any such duty be laid upon them * * *. And when made possible by the National Government, the State in order more effectively to teach and train its citizens for these and like purposes may avail itself of the services of officers and equipment belonging to the Military Establishment of the United States. So long as it is within retained powers and not inconsistent with an exertion of the authority of the National Government and transgresses no right safeguarded to the citizen by the Federal Constitution, the State is sole judge of the means to be employed and amount of training to be exacted for the effective accomplishment of these ends. Second amendment, Houston v. Moore (5 Wheatl, 16–17. Dunne v. The People (1879) (94 Ill. 120, 129). * * *

"The clauses of the fourteenth amendment invoked by appellants declare: 'No State shall make or enforce any law which shall adbridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.' Appellants' contentions are that the enforcement of the order prescribing instruction in military science and tactics abridges some privilege or immunity covered by the first clause and deprives of liberty safeguarded by the second. The 'privileges and immunities' protected are only those that belong to citizens of the States—those that arise from the Constitution of the United States as contrasted with those that spring from other sources. Slaughter-House cases, (16 Wall. 36, 72–74, 77–80). McPherson v. Blacker (146 U. S. 1, 48)." Numerous other cases cited.

"The fact that they are able to pay their way in this university but not in any other institution in California is without significance upon any constitutional or other question involved. California has not drafted or called them to attend the university. They are seeking education offered by the State and at the same time insisting that they be excluded from the prescribed course solely upon grounds of their religious beliefs and conscientious objections to war, preparations for war, and military education. Taken on this basis of the facts alleged in the petition, appellants' contentions amount to no more than an assertion that the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment as a safeguard of 'liberty' confers the right to be students in the State university free from obligation to take military training as one of the conditions of attendance.

"Viewed in the light of our decisions, that proposition must at once be put aside as untenable.

"Government, Federal and State, each in its own sphere, owes a duty to the people within its jurisdiction to preserve itself in adequate strength to maintain peace and order and to assure the just enforcement of law. And every citizen owes the reciprocal duty, according to his capacity, to support and defend government against all enemies. (Selective Draft Law Cases, supra, p. 378; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, 166.)

"United States v. Schwimmer (279 U. S. 644) involved a petition for naturalization by one opposed to bearing arms in defense of country. Holding the applicant not entitled to citizenship, we said (p. 650): 'That it is the duty of citizens by force of arms to defend our Government against all enemies whenever necessity arises is a fundamental principle of the Constitution. * * * Whatever tends to lessen the willingness of citizens to discharge their duty to bear arms in the country's defense detracts from the strength and safety of the Government."

Mr. Justice Butler cites and quotes at length United States v. MacIntosh (283 U. S. 605), a later naturalization case, in which the applicant was unwilling, because of conscientious objections, to take unqualifiedly the statutory oath of allegiance, and as in the case above, the application was denied. The Court disposed of that case in these words: "No other conclusion is compatable with the well-nigh limitless extent of the war powers as above illustrated, which include to compel the armed service of any citizen in the land, without regard to his objections or his views in respect of the justice or morality of the particular war or war in general.

"In Jacobson v. Massachusetts (197 U. S. 11, 19) this Court (upholding a State compulsory vaccination law), speaking of the liberties guaranteed to the individual by the fourteenth amendment, said: '* * * and yet he may be compelled, by force if need be, against his will and without regard to his personal wishes or his pecuniary interests, or even his religious or political convictions, to take his place in the ranks of the Army of his country and risk the chance of being shot down in its defense.'

"And see Pearson v. Coale (— Md. —, 167 Atl. 54), a case similar to that now before us, decided against the contention of a student in the University of Maryland who on conscientious grounds objected to military training there required. His appeal to this Court was dismissed for want of a substantial Federal question (290 U. S. 597).

"Plainly, there is no ground for the contention that the regents' order requiring able-bodied male students under the age of 24, as a condition of their enrollment, to take the prescribed instruction in military science and tactics, transgresses any constitutional right asserted by these appellants."

"The contention that the regents' order is repugnant to the Briand-Kellogg peace pact requires little consideration. * * * Clearly, there is no conflict between the regents' order and the provisions of this treaty." Affirmed.

Mr. Justice Cardoza, after noting his concurrence in the Court's opinion as delivered by Mr. Justice Butler, said: "* * * the petitioners have not been required to bear arms for any hostile purposes, offensive or defensive, either now or in the future * * *. If they resort to an institution for higher education maintained with the State's moneys, then, and only then, they are commanded to follow courses on instruction believed by the State to be vital to its welfare * * *.

"Manifestly a different doctrine would carry us to lengths that have never yet been dreamed of. The conscientious objector, if his liberties were to be thus extended, might refuse to contribute taxes in furtherance of war, whether for attack or defense, or in furtherance of any other end condemned by his conscience as irreligious or immoral. The right of private judgment has never been exalted above the powers and the compulsions of the agencies of government. One who is a martyr to a principle—which may turn out in the end to be a delusion or error—does not prove by his martyrdom that he has kept the law.

"I am authorized to state that Mr. Justice Brandeis and Mr. Justice Stone join in this opinion."

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics; and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, through an inadvertence yesterday the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was not quite correctly included in the reprint of the bill. It is correctly set forth in the RECORD. I have talked with the Senator from Missouri, so what I am saying is in full accord with his views.

On page 2 of the new print of the bill, line 19, before the first word "medicinal", the word "no" should be inserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 19, before the word "medicinal", it is proposed to insert the word "no", so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) The term "cosmetic" includes all substances and preparations, except soaps or household cleansers for which no medicinal or curative qualities are claimed by the manufacturers or retailers in labels or advertisements, intended for cleansing, or altering the appearance of, or promoting the attractiveness of, the person.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on page 10 of the old print——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to have the Vice President know that there are a large number of amendments pending, and there will be no anxiety about final passage of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair saw in the RECORD that all committee amendments had been agreed to, and the bill has therefore reached the stage of engrossment and third reading. Naturally the only question that can be before the Senate is the engrossment and third reading of the bill until some Senator offers an amendment. The Chair will deprive no Senator of an opportunity to offer amendments. The Senator from Michigan may be assured of that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from New York is going to recur to section 303 on page 10 of the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct. I am going to offer an amendment to that section.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. COPELAND. On page 10, line 15, in the new print, line 11 of the old print——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York will permit the Chair to make a statement. The parliamentary clerk suggests that Senators use the old print. There are parliamentary reasons for so doing.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. On page 10 of the old print, line 11, after the word "vegetables", I move to strike out the period and insert the words "and no standard of identity for fresh apples and fresh pears."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, line 11, after the word "vegetables", it is proposed to insert the words "and no standard of identity for fresh apples and fresh pears", so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no standard of quality shall be established for fresh fruits and fresh vegetables, and no standard of identity for fresh apples and fresh pears.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I should like to submit an inquiry to the Senator from New York. Why should the Senator select one class of fruit and omit others? We are very much interested in the question in my State. Why select apples and omit other classes of fresh fruit?

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator want me to say frankly why? In all friendliness to the Senator and to the State which in part he represents, and of which I am a part-time citizen——

Mr. TRAMMELL. We are very proud of that fact.

Mr. COPELAND. I suggest the Senator do not press the matter.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Very well.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have a letter from the Rogue River Traffic Association of Medford, Oreg., relating to the matter just now suggested by the Senator from New York. I should like to have the clerk at the desk read the letter, and then I shall be glad to have a comment by the Senator from New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ROGUE RIVER VALLEY TRAFFIC ASSOCIATION,
Medford, Oreg., March 29, 1935.

Hon. CHAS. L. MCNARY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Proposed food and drugs bill, S. 5, committee print no. 3 (now committee print no. 4)

DEAR SIR: In behalf of the pear and apple producers of this district, we wish to protest the passage of the above-mentioned act in its present form. It is our position that the bill should be amended in at least three particulars, which are vital to said producers.

First. Apples and pears at least should be exempted from "Standards of identity" in section 303. The Secretary of Agriculture should not be granted the power to fix the sugar, acid, and solid content of these fruits, raised under all the varying differences of varieties, soil, weather conditions, age, and care of trees, etc., in a country as vast as the United States. In our judgment all fresh natural foods should be exempted, but certainly apples and pears. Otherwise, varieties and sections could be eliminated from marketing, either in whole or in part, depending on how high the standard was fixed. In fact, there would always be grave danger in any such standard of identity.

Second. The court review section (702) should be so rewritten as to insure an interested party, a defendant, or a claimant of goods in the event of seizure, his full day in court on all of the facts underlying or surrounding the Secretary's regulations and any new scientific or other facts that may have developed since the regulation was promulgated. That right is not now given by section 702. The right of review by the courts is now very much limited and circumscribed, and the citizen does not have his full day in court as he does under the present law. Primarily, what is now proposed is government by promulgated regulations without a full right of review of those regulations on all of the facts.

Third. The bill should be further amended so that an interested party (fruit growers or others) can initiate proposed amendments to regulations. As it is, the Secretary alone is required to initiate regulations and amendments. Neither a citizen nor the advisory committees can initiate anything. It is all in the hands of the Secretary.

The foregoing amendments are vital to the citizen and in no way affect the purity of food.

We respectfully request that you use your influence to have the bill so changed as to meet the above objections.

Yours very truly,
ROGUE RIVER VALLEY TRAFFIC ASSOCIATION,
By W. J. LOOKER, Secretary.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, after we have order on the floor of the Senate I should like to make a request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks for order.

Mr. BORAH. For order on the floor.

Mr. McNARY. I particularly specified order on the floor, and I think if the Presiding Officer should indicate a desire to have order we would have it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon desires order in the Chamber. The Chair may state that the Senate makes its own rules; it knows its own rules, and the Chair is satisfied that the Members of the Senate do not desire to disobey the rules.

Mr. McNARY. The letter which has been read is very clear, and covers the situation which I should like to have the Senator from New York discuss and describe if he will.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question. Practically the same letter came to me from the Traffic Association of Idaho. I do not understand what change is desired in section 702. The letter which has been read is not clear to me, although it is in the same terms as the letter I have received. I do not know what the letter is asking for with reference to court procedure. I wonder if those writing the letters had the latest print.

Mr. COPELAND. I think I know what is desired by the writer of the letter.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McNARY. I yield the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the writer of this letter complains of a provision in the bill which he thinks should be corrected. He speaks about differences in climate and soil and their effects upon apples. He fears the Department may attempt to establish a standard of identity for this product and that it might distress the apple-growers.

I have just presented, and there was adopted, an amendment, that no standard of identity for fresh apples and fresh pears shall be established.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask just what is the amendment which has been adopted? How does it read?

Mr. COPELAND. On page 10, beginning at line 13 with the word "Provided", the amendment reads:

Provided, That no standard of quality shall be established for fresh fruits and fresh vegetables, and no standard of identity for fresh apples and fresh pears.

That takes care of the first criticism of the writer.

The next criticism is due to the failure of the writer of the letter to realize that another amendment has been inserted in the bill. The writer said in his letter, as I understood it, that there is provided no opportunity for an industry or a group of citizens to make any move to secure a new regulation, or to change an existing one.

If Senators who are interested will look in the old print of the bill, on page 32 it will be seen that we have inserted an amendment to which I shall refer in a moment.

Let me say, as introductory to what I am about to remark, that in the original bill as presented, the Secretary of Agriculture was granted arbitrary power. If he should think overnight of something he might want to put in the form of a regulation, he could formulate and enforce that regulation. We were not willing, and I say for myself I was not willing, to have such power reposed in any individual. Therefore the bill was changed so that a regulation cannot be made until the Secretary has first decided that it is needed. Then he transmits the proposed regulation, in the case of foods, to an advisory committee of 7, appointed by the President, 2 of whom shall be from food industries, so there will be a certainty that in the committee hearing affected industries will be represented. Then, if the advisory committee decides that the proposed regulation is a reasonable one and ought to be given consideration, a public hearing is held.

In short, the advisory committee has first passed upon the proposed regulation. Industry is represented on the committee; but, even after that, the regulation goes back to the Department in order that there may be a public hearing, that all parties in interest may be heard. Then, after it has been determined that a regulation is necessary, it goes back to the committee, and a majority of the committee must say "yes; that is a good regulation." All this must be done before it may be promulgated.

The writer of this very intelligent letter, however, makes the very just complaint, if it were well founded, that there is no opportunity for an industry to make an appeal for a regulation or for a change in a regulation. Senators will find on page 32 of the bill, beginning at line 15, the language I am about to read. This part of the bill relates to a function of the committee of which I have spoken:

Having received from an interested industry or from representatives of the public a request for a new regulation or a change in an existing regulation, either committee—

That is, either the public health committee or the food committee—on its own motion, may advise the Secretary of its recommendations for action in accordance with the procedure set up by this section.

So I may say to the able Senator from Oregon that the criticism which was transmitted to us by the writer of the letter has been met and answered by the language I have read.

LOUISIANA'S CONTRIBUTION THAT HAS SPREAD INTO A PLAN FOR AMERICAN RESTORATION

Mr. LONG addressed the Senate. His remarks appear on p. 5014.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOODS, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics and to regulate traffic therein, to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is not present, but a number of days ago he showed me the suggestion of a change which, so far as I am concerned, I am glad to have made, and the Department feels the same way about it. It is on page 27, line 18.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator from New York that the Senator from California has been ill for several days, which is the reason why he has been absent from the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I understood the Senator was ill, and it was because of that fact that I wanted to make sure the amendment which he showed to me is given attention by the Senate.

It is the desire of the Senator offering the amendment that in the court's review of a regulation it shall be very clear that the court shall go to the heart of the matter as regards the facts upon which the regulation was based. To make sure of this it is suggested by Senator JOHNSON that in line 18, on page 27, we strike out the language in italics in the original bill, "in the light of the facts", and that in line 19 we strike out the first word "with", and that at the end of line 18 there be added "with the facts or", so the language would read:

If it is shown that the regulation is unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious, or not in accordance with the facts or law.

I move the adoption of that amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. What suggestion does the Senator make with respect to the words "and that the petitioner may suffer substantial damage by reason of its enforcement"?

I may say that I do not regard that condition as essential in order to obtain relief in the courts.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think I do, either.

Mr. KING. I shall move to strike out that language at the appropriate time, unless the Senator consents to striking it out now.

Mr. COPELAND. I think it would not be in order until the committee amendments are completed. I ask, however, that the change suggested by the Senator from California be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. On page 28, line 7, to accomplish the same object I offer an amendment to strike out the words "in the light of the facts" and to insert at the end of the line the words "the facts or."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. I offer one other amendment: On page 46, at the bottom of the page, after the word "seized", in line 25, to strike out the period and insert a comma and the words "and as regards fresh apples and fresh pears a true copy of the analysis on which the proceeding is based", so the paragraph will read:

The court at any time after seizure up to a reasonable time before trial shall, by order, allow any party to a condemnation proceeding, his attorney or agent, to obtain a representative sample of the article seized, and as regards fresh apples and fresh pears a true copy of the analysis on which the proceeding is based.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. In the absence of the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], who has been detained at home during the week by illness, I propose an amendment at his request, which I ask the clerk to state, and on which I should like to have the observations of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 10, line 9, after the word "container", to strike out down to and including line 11 and insert the following:

: Provided, That no standard of quality or standard of identity shall be established for any fresh natural food: And provided further, That in any regulations pertaining to fill of container the Secretary shall give due consideration to the natural shrinkage in storage and in transit of fresh natural food and to need for the necessary packing and protective material.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the portion of the amendment beginning with "And provided further." The first part we have already discussed. If the Senator from Oregon, speaking for the Senator from California, presents an amendment so that at the end of section 303 as amended there shall be added the language:

And provided further, That any regulations pertaining to fill of container—

And so forth. I have no objection to that.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I formally offer, in behalf of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the language suggested by the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] for the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. So far as the committee is concerned, I think we have no further amendments. I now yield the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, has the Senator from New York finished with section 303, so far as the Senator in charge of the bill is interested?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Then I should like to have the clerk read section 303 as it now stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

DEFINITIONS AND STANDARDS FOR FOOD

SEC. 303. For the effectuation of the purposes of this act, the Secretary is hereby authorized to promulgate regulations, as provided by sections 701 and 703, fixing and establishing for any food a definition and standard of identity and a reasonable standard of quality and/or fill of container: Provided, That no standard of quality shall be established for fresh fruits and fresh vegetables, and no standard of identity for fresh apples and fresh pears: And provided further, That in any regulations pertaining to fill of container the Secretary shall give due consideration to the natural shrinkage in storage and in transit of fresh natural food and to need for the necessary packing and protective material.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that I wish to offer the amendment, which I send to the desk in relation to the variation clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 14, line 23, beginning with the words "no drugs", it is proposed to strike out down to the end of the sentence on page 15, line 6, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

No drug shall be deemed to be adulterated under this paragraph if the standard of strength, quality, or purity be plainly stated on its label, although the standard may differ from that as determined by the tests or methods of assay set forth in an official compendium.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Senator from New York is familiar with the fact that there has been a great deal of argument and discussion respecting the variant section of the law, and for a long time there was insistence upon the part of perfectly legitimate manufacturers that the word "identity" should be maintained. After consultations yesterday, which I think may be said to include some of the neutral experts of the city, on the subject, it has been concluded to drop the request for the maintenance of the word "identity", and it is requested instead that the language which I have now offered shall be substituted for the sentence in question. As I understand, just two things will happen as a result, yet both those things are vital to the legitimate manufacturer.

In the first place, the physical difficulty of long definitions upon the label, which are required in the sentence proposed to be stricken out, will be eliminated. I understand the Senator from New York has no objection at that point.

The other important thing is the maintenance of the property rights which a legitimate manufacturer has in a commodity which he has perfected under a trade name.

Under the sentence, as written in the bill, the manufacturer, with his own identified commodity, must indicate upon the label that it is unofficial, and perhaps that means inferior in the event that the Board of Standards decides for itself that the manufacturer's own product should be formulated upon a different formula. The only thing in the world which is sought to be protected is the property right of the manufacturer in his own production, his own creation, his own property. Under the amendment as offered I think the Senator from New York will concede there is no possibility for any deception upon anybody in any essential situation and no possibility of an affront to the purposes of this proposed act. I wish to ask the Senator from New York if he cannot agree with me to let this substitution of this one sentence proceed as indicated?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if there is one Senator on the other side of the Chamber with whom I should like to agree, it is the distinguished Senator from Michigan. I always want to agree with a man who may sometime be President of the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I desire to say that that is one of those misbrandings which we are trying to prevent by this proposed legislation. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. I am sure it would not be an adulteration of civic righteousness if it should happen.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am confident that that is so.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I cannot agree to this amendment in its entirety, for myself I am willing to agree to a part of it, then the Senator from Michigan, if he does not get all he wishes, will at least obtain part of what he is asking. However, let me now show the Senate, or try to do so, why this is not a proper amendment. I feel sorry for Senators who have not the same technical interest in this bill that I have or that some of the others of us have, but, nevertheless, this is a matter of public concern.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I feel sorry for those who do have.

Mr. COPELAND. Well, there is something in that, but on page 14 of the original bill, the Senator proposes to strike out this language:

> No drug shall be deemed to be adulterated under this paragraph because it differs from the standards of strength, quality, or purity therefor set forth in an official compendium.

Let me say to those who perhaps are not fully aware of it that there has been in existence in this country for many years a board which is nonofficial, but which is generally recognized, the Board of the United States Pharmacopœia. This board has exercised great good sense and, in the public interest, has provided standards which are useful not only to the pharmaceutical and medical profession but to the allied professions. It is a board which has done much to protect the public health.

It is very important when one has a prescription which his physician in New York has written that if he goes to San Francisco or Portland, Maine, and desires to have that prescription refilled, it shall contain exactly the same ingredients and the same strength ingredients in the new place as in the place where the prescription was originally written and filled. That is why the official compendium is so reliable; that great standard work, the Pharmacopoeia, a tremendous volume, which is revised every 10 years and may be, by supplements, amended between the periods of full revision, guarantees uniformity in drug products.

The Senator from Michigan proposes to strike out this language:

> No drug shall be deemed to be adulterated under this paragraph because it differs from the standards of strength, quality, or purity therefor set forth in an official compendium if its label bears in juxtaposition with the name of the drug a statement indicating wherein its strength, quality, and purity, as determined by the tests or methods of assay applicable under this paragraph, differ from the standards therefor set forth in such compendium.

For that provision the Senator proposes to substitute the following:

> No drug shall be deemed to be adulterated under this paragraph if the standard of strength, quality, or purity be plainly stated on its label, although the standard may differ from that as determined by the tests or methods of assay set forth in an official compendium.

That would be false on its face.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is not that the existing situation?

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator mean in the bill?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; but the existing practice today is the set-up indicated in the proposed amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think any druggist would now dare to sell as U. S. P., which means United States Pharmacopoeia, a product labeled "U. S. P.", which is presumed to be official, unless it actually conformed to the requirements.

We had some experience with "ginger jake", which proved to be an adulterated extract of Jamaica ginger. It was sold by reputable druggists because the label was so falsely written as to indicate it was "U. S. P." Of course, I realize we cannot by law make people good, but we can protect them to a great extent, at least, and we must do it so far as we can.

The Senator from Michigan proposes that any drug may be sold as official "if the standard of strength, quality, or purity be plainly stated on its label, although the standard may differ from that as determined by the tests or methods of assay set forth in an official compendium."

In other words, let us take, for example, iodine. I think the official standard requires for iodine that for every hundred cubic centimeters of alcohol there must be 10 grams of iodine. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan—and I know he presents it in all good faith, believing it is a proper amendment—should prevail, the manufacturer could put out a product labeled "iodine" which contained only 3 or 4 grams per hundred cubic centimeters of alcohol if the label stated that there were 4 grams of iodine to each hundred cubic centimeters. How would the purchaser know that the thing he purchased was standard iodine?

I say it is utterly wrong to permit the sale in the United States of drugs which are purchased by the consuming public and which they presume to be of the same standard as drugs which they have always purchased but which may be below that standard and be sold legally if the label says, "This contains 4 grams of iodine", when properly it should contain 10 grams.

I would be perfectly willing to meet the Senator half-way.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Before the Senator meets me halfway may I ask him a question to see if he cannot meet me a little further along toward my end of the road?

Do I misunderstand the situation to be as follows, using an example: Here is a manufacturer who develops cascara sagrada. It becomes an integrated trade remedy, well known, unquestionably legitimate, and produced by a thoroughly reliable, legitimate, honest, honorable producer. The U. S. P., producing this compendium somewhere, not orginating any formulas itself, not creating any compositions itself, but merely recording the achievements of others and in some degree assuming to pass upon betterments in connection therewith, recognizes the existence of cascara sagrada, but changes in some degree the formula before it is published in the compendium. Thereupon, under the language of the bill as presented, as I understand it, the original manufacturer, the discoverer, the creator of cascara sagrada, because the U. S. P. has undertaken in its discretion to change the formula in some slight manner, no longer can produce cascara sagrada——

Mr. COPELAND. According to his formula.

Mr. VANDENBERG. According to the formula upon which it had originally gained its popularity and its justified standing in the country, except as he puts upon the label an acknowledgment that it is unofficial or different in some aspects from the U. S. P., thus carrying the psychology of inferiority into the market places.

Does the Senator think that is fair to the manufacturer who has developed this thing? I am not speaking for any fakers or impostors. I am speaking from the viewpoint of some of the most reliable manufacturers in the United States, as the Senator from New York knows. Do they not possess a property right which is entitled to be respected in this aspect, and what final harm has been done to any interest if they be permitted to proceed as indicated?

Will the Senator use my example and tell me what the answer is?

Mr. COPELAND. I want to answer the Senator, but can the Senator give me any other similar example?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes. Ephedrin. I ask the Senator from New York not to pursue me too far into the chemical laboratory.

Mr. COPELAND. This is the point I desire to bring out. I think, as regards the two articles the Senator mentioned, he is entirely right. I think the Pharmacopoeia Board has been stiffnecked. I do think these great manufacturers, who not only make money through their operations, but do great good by their experimental work and by their laboratory work, should be encouraged. I think as regards these two particular products—and there are not many others—there has been a great injustice done.

But we are not legislating for that particular manufacturer, although the establishment in question is one of the greatest in the world. It is located in my own native State. I have known about it from my early recollection, and certainly have known a lot about it since I became interested in medicine. There is no finer laboratory or more reliable firm anywhere than that one.

As regards these two preparations, I think that concern has been imposed upon by the Pharmacopoeia Board, and I say that with all consideration to a board for which I have great respect, and for a great publication which is of vital importance to every citizen. But that does not make any difference. Even though that one firm has been discriminated against by the board in the past—and I shall refer to that again if I do not forget it—even so, when the druggist in Suffern, N. Y., buys one of these products he has a right to believe that the product is U. S. P. official. The doctor who prescribes it, who is familiar with the Pharmacopoeia, has a right to know it. It is a fraud upon the public to permit the sale of an article which is not official, and, therefore, I could not be a party to accepting the proposed amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. How is it a fraud if the doctor or druggist is informed, on the one hand, respecting what the U. S. P. formulas are, and, on the other hand, if they can read what the label says and truthfully says in disclosing the contents of the box? In other words, are we not merely trying to transfer some of the responsibility of the physician and the druggist to the back of the manufacturer? Is not that what it comes down to?

Mr. COPELAND. Perhaps. These products are rarely dispensed in the original boxes. It is a common practice of the profession which I used to follow to write a prescription in some unknown language and send it to the druggist. Even though the druggist fills the prescription by giving out the original bottle, he takes off the label. The label does not go to the patient. The druggist tears off the original label, which contains the information mentioned, and put on the bottle, "Prescription of Dr. COPELAND, No. 1250"—I presume I put the number too high, because that would be a good many patients, so we will say "No. 33." When my patient takes that medicine he takes something which is different from what my training has taught me to believe should be used. The substitute is not official. It is not the article which I prescribed, and therefore it is a fraudulent transaction.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Under the practice ever since the original Food and Drug Act was passed, is it not a fact that the manufacturer of cascara segrada, even though his formula differs from the U. S. P., has not been forced so to state upon the label? Is not that a fact?

Mr. COPELAND. The advice I get from the expert from the Department is that it was the practice, at least in two or three instances, and the Department has not yet heard the last of it.

Let me present an example of what I have in mind. It will appeal to the distinguished Senator from Michigan, who I know is entirely sincere—and once more I apologize for presuming to have any technical knowledge that some of the other Senators do not possess: There is sickness in the Senator's own family. He decides to call another physician, or his family physician decides he wants a consultation, and sends to Chicago for some eminent diagnostician and practitioner.

This consultant examines the member of the family dear to the Senator, and decides that a certain drug is the needed remedy. He has learned from long experience in his practice in Chicago that that drug is a valuable drug and helpful in such a case as this critical one; so he advises the family physician to give that drug; the family physician accepts the suggestion and writes the prescription. Instead of being the drug which the Chicago doctor prescribed, however, it is another drug, or another preparation, differing in standard of strength from the drug he desired to give the patient.

I am not thoroughly convinced how valuable drugs are in the practice of medicine. I sometimes have had reason to question their real value. I do not like to make any confessions to that end; but if a doctor prescribes a drug which is universally recognized as having a certain standard of strength, that is the drug which the patient ought to get; and I should not be honest with the Senator or with the American people if I did not resist this amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator were the physician who was called in to preside over the poignant situation which he defines, and he concluded to recommend cascara sagrada, would he care at all whether it was cascara sagrada as made by the originator of it and as accepted as standard for years in this country, or would he feel he had been defrauded because it was not cascara sagrada made according to the formula of the U. S. P.? Would he feel himself defrauded, or would his patient be exposed?

Mr. COPELAND. I think both.

Once more, let me say as regards that particular product that I think Parke, Davis & Co. have been imposed upon by the Pharmacopoeia Board. I say that notwithstanding the fact that there are members of the Pharmacopoeia Board in this audience this morning. But, even so, I said long ago, and repeat now as my opinion, that the Pharmacopoeia Board ought to have recognized the fine product which was originated in that great laboratory and developed there; but the Pharmacopoeia Board has not done it. But when that product is purchased in St. Louis or Tucson or somewhere else, after the doctor has prescribed it, he has a right to expect that the official standard is met by the product dispensed. That is as it should be. Let me say now what I said I desired to say if I did not forget it. I do not know whether or not I reveal anything I ought not to reveal; but I was told this morning by a distinguished gentleman who has my full confidence that the particular articles mentioned by the Senator, and some others, are to be given immediate consideration by the Pharmacopoeia Board, and that they ought to have consideration. I am not going to trust to that, however, because I am not willing to have drugs sold, allegedly official drugs, when, as a matter of fact, they may be only half the standard prescribed by the official work, the Pharmacopoeia.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does it occur to the Senator that he may be invading a very important property right which might seriously jeopardize the authority of his entire proposition?

Mr. COPELAND. I cannot help it. This is not a property-right bill. We are not striving to invade the vested rights of people, of course. I reluctantly yielded yesterday and presented an amendment to protect certain food manufacturers who have proprietary rights in certain foods. I did not want to do that, but in the case of foods the conditions are entirely different from drugs, and there were reasons why it seemed wise to do it. I felt about those concerned that they had vested rights, but that was not the determining factor. I feel about the particular article mentioned by the Senator from Michigan that that concern has a vested right; but, Mr. President, I cannot help that. When we come to give drugs for disease we must take no chances. If drugs have a place in the relief of human suffering and in the prolongation of life, when the physician prescribes a given drug, that is the drug which must be given, and it is not right or proper that we should vary from that course.

I am sorry to have to take that position. I love the Senator from Michigan. If I had a hundred dollars, I would lend it to him or give it to him. I would do anything I could that would be helpful to him; but I cannot yield on this matter. I will go a little further, however. As I told him, I will meet him—it is not half-way——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator mean, by going further, that he is going to $150? [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. I have not that much. [Laughter.] I went further than the limit when I said $100.

I am willing to strike out, on page 15, line 2, the language "in juxtaposition with the name of the drug", so that it will read:

No drug shall be deemed to be adulterated under this paragraph because it differs from the standards of strength, quality, or purity therefore set forth in an official compendium, if its label bears a statement indicating wherein its strength, quality, and purity, as determined by the tests or methods of assay applicable under this paragraph, differ from the standards therefor set forth in such compendium.

I will do that. I will go that far, and I wish I could go the whole distance, but I cannot do it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That meets half of the objection.

Mr. COPELAND. All right. That is a good deal, if the Senator gets that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. All right; but let us see if we cannot adopt my amendment and meet all the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. Now I desire to complete the matter; and, as I said, I will concede the other part. On page 15, line 2, I move to strike out the words "in juxtaposition with the name of the drug."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 34, line 20, after the word "carrier", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That whenever in the opinion of the Secretary it is practical, he shall attempt to make the objective inspection of food packed in a Territory or possession of the United States at the first point of entry within the territorial limits of the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there is no objection to that amendment. I think it is a very excellent one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I submit an amendment, which I ask to have read, together with a statement I have prepared regarding the amendment and explaining very clearly the necessity for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, line 6, after the word "Provided", it is proposed to amend section 402 (f) by inserting the following:

That no drug shall be deemed to be misbranded, under subdivision 1 of this paragraph, by reason of failure of its labeling to bear adequate directions for use, when sold for the purpose of further processing or manufacturing, for the compounding of physicians', dentists', or veterinarians' prescriptions, or for use in the arts and sciences: Provided further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has also sent to the desk a statement which he has asked to have read. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the statement, as follows:

Under section 402 (f) a drug is misbranded "if its labeling fails to bear plainly and conspicuously complete and adequate directions for use." Large quantities of fine chemicals, chemical medicinals and drugs of the highest purity are shipped from one manufacturer to another for further processing and for use in the arts and sciences and to wholesalers and retailers which do not go direct as such to the ultimate consumer. As the bill now stands, all of these shipments would be misbranded and subject to seizure and penalties of the act unless they bear complete and adequate directions for use. The purpose of this amendment is to clearly exempt these fine chemicals from the requirement of complete and adequate directions for use which is a needless, cumbersome requirement for medicinal chemicals not going to the ultimate consumer. This amendment in no way reduces the requirement of complete directions for fine chemicals sold to the ultimate consumer.

To further illustrate, many fine chemicals have extensive use for industrial as well as medicinal purposes. Silver nitrate is used for mirrors and in photography and as a medicinal. Potassium iodide is used in photography and as a medicinal. Magnesium sulphate is shipped in carload lots for nonmedicinal use. The dosage or directions for use vary widely. Potassium iodide is employed as a diuretic, antirheumatic, antisclerotic, and in prescriptions for such uses the dosage would vary with the condition of the ailment, the patient, the type of treatment. Another example: Quinine sulphate is indicated for tonic use in dosage of 1½ grains, while for antimalarial medication the dosage varies up to 15 grains; quinine has over 30 uses in addition to its use in malaria.

It is obviously impracticable and needless to label such packages with complete directions for use in respect of all conditions in which the drug or chemical is indicated, in those cases where the sale is not to the ultimate consumer.

While it is possible that the secretary might through regulations provide for chemicals not going to the ultimate consumer, it is bleieved that this very important field should be clearly corrected by a definite provision in the bill in accordance with the proposed amendment. This amendment does not reduce the protection for the ultimate consumer as in all cases the chemical medicinal or fine chemical must be of standard required purity and the directions for use would apply for sales to the ultimate consumer.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I realize that on page 22, beginning with line 7, there is a provision to which I think my good friend the able Senator from New York will probably call attention in respect to the matter of regulation on the part of the Department of Agriculture providing exemption from the labeling provision. I feel very strongly, however, that, from the standpoint of the industry and the public, it is not nearly so safe to leave this matter simply to regulations, to be developed in the future by officials now unknown, who may change from time to time and whose duties may likewise change, as it is to have a specific stipulation in the law itself to cover the situation and provide proper regulation. I am sure the Senator from New York himself is in complete agreement with me so far as the purposes I have in mind are concerned.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if I did not feel that we have fully covered the suggestion made by the senior Senator from New Jersey, so far as I could do so, I would at once accept the amendment. The Senator has already mentioned subdivision (1), on page 22, and perhaps the Senator did not know that on line 3 we have stricken out the word "authorized" and have provided that the Secretary shall be directed. The Secretary is directed to promulgate regulations exempting from labeling such articles as those to which the Senator has referred.

I am satisfied that with this change, which was suggested by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], directing the Secretary to take such action, we are not leaving the matter to anybody. The Secretary must do what the Senator seeks to have done when the substances covered by the provision are shipped in large quantities and are not sold to the consumer. They need not be labeled, and so forth, until after they are ready actually to be sent on to the ultimate consumer. So I feel that under subsection (1) the industry in which the Senator is interested is fully protected, in view of the fact that we have not given the Secretary any option in the matter, but he must perform this prescribed duty.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, it is very reassuring to have the able Senator from New York make the statement he has just made in respect to this provision on page 22, and I feel that his statement is very helpful. Nevertheless, I should still like to have a vote on the amendment, and I hope it may be agreed to and that there will be no objection raised on the part of the able Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator is insisting on a vote on the amendment, I want to say that it would make the bill more or less of an absurdity if there were several provisions covering the same item. If, after the explanation I have made and the assurances I have given, and after a rereading of the language in the light of the change in this paragraph, the Senator still wishes to press for a vote, very well; but I ask the Senator not to press for a vote now.

Mr. BARBOUR. Very well, Mr. President; I will accede to the request of the Senator from New York and not now press for a vote.

Mr. BAILEY obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I propose to discuss the proposed legislation, having in mind the bill as amended up to the present time, and also with a view to pending amendments and certain other amendments which I shall offer and which I have been informed will be offered by others.

It seems to me the proposed legislation is of almost indescribable importance and of no less difficulty. The bill is technical. It relates to the treatment of diseases, a highly developed and yet a speculative science in which there is almost infinite difference of opinion.

The bill relates to the preparation of medicine, one of the oldest of all the arts, developing these 10,000 years, perhaps, and still developing.

The bill relates to the food which the people of the United States eat and which is sold by the merchants throughout the Nation.

The bill relates to advertisements in the press of the country, and it relates to the cosmetics with which some appear to believe that they may perhaps improve their personal appearance.

I listened this morning with interest and, I might courteously say, with illumination to the controversy between "Ginger Jake" and "Cascara Sagrada." I did not know on which side to find myself, and I do not know whether or not the lady "Cascara" defeated "Ginger Jake" in the contest which we had in this arena. But the discussion suggested to my mind just one remark to the effect that if I had to comprehend my criticisms of this legislation in one sentence I should say that it seems to me to have been conceived from the point of view of the enemies of "Ginger Jake." I do not know "Ginger Jake", but I assume from what the distinguished father of the legislation had to say——

Mr. COPELAND. Stepfather.

Mr. BAILEY. Stepfather; I thank the Senator for saying what I should not have dared to say. From what the stepfather of the legislation had to say, it appeared to me that "Ginger Jake" was a very foul and unmannerly sort of a person; and the stepfather of this legislation proposed a 49-page bill, in the nature of the law of a great republic, affecting the entire population, creating inspectors to go out into all the factories of food and of drugs and of chemicals and of cosmetics to put "Ginger Jake" out of business!

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Would not the Senator like to have a quorum call?

Mr. BAILEY. A quorum call was just had. I thank the Senator for his suggestion; but the interest in this subject, and perhaps in what I have to say upon it, is not sufficient to maintain a quorum in the Senate at this stage.

Mr. WALSH. I do not agree with the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not agree with the Senator, either; but I do wish to point out the fact that a large number of committees are in session, engaged in very important work, and Senators find it very difficult to be here. I feel sure they would like to hear what the Senator has to say.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Tennessee wishes to suggest the absence of a quorum I am content.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is the Senator from North Carolina going to discuss the bill in detail?

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I intend to compare the new law with the old by showing what is proposed in the way of expansion, and then say something of the implications involved.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, what the Senator says is always enlightening. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], caused by illness.

I also announce the absence of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] on account of illness.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] is absent on account of death in his family; and that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] are absent on official business.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senators who have come into the Chamber in response to the quorum call, which was had by way of courtesy to me—and I think it a real compliment that they should come in, for which I am grateful—will forgive me if, as I look about the Senate and see the vacant seats, I invoke the Scriptures and remark that—

We have toiled all the night and have taken nothing.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. May I make an inquiry of the Senator? I make the inquiry only for the purpose of indicating the importance of what the Senator from North Carolina is about to say. Is it contemplated that a motion will be made to recommit the bill under consideration?

Mr. BAILEY. I think it should be recommitted. I do not intend to try to defeat sound legislation; but if I succeed in exposing the difficulties of the bill, I think a great deal might be accomplished. I am going to speak generally with a view to the difficulties of the bill, specifically with a view to the character of certain features of the bill, and then with a view to not only my own amendments but others which may be proposed.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to say to the Senator from North Carolina, with respect to his remarks about the absent Senators, that none of them knew that the Senator was going to speak. I am sure there would be a larger attendance in the Senate had Senators known that the Senator from North Carolina was going to address the Senate at this time.

Mr. BAILEY. I fear the Senator from Texas misapprehended my remarks, which was said by way of humor and addressed to the vacant seats and not to those which were filled. I certainly appreciate the fact that certain Senators have come in; but, at the same time, I should like to say to them that I should not think of being offended if any one of them should feel that he could more profitably spend his time elsewhere. I understand those things perfectly, and I hope my friend understands my remark. I made it in the spirit of humor and mainly for the point of putting in a good Scripture text in the course of a few remarks on the subject of legislation.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas was not offended. He merely wanted the Senator from North Carolina to know that the Senator from Texas was not oblivious of the merits of his anticipated speech, and he was sure that if brother Senators had known it was to be made, they would have been here.

Mr. BAILEY. I am satisfied that the Senator from Texas was not offended, Mr. President, and I think everyone here knows it. I hope to be always void of offense. When the quorum call was made I was remarking that, if I had to comprehend my criticism of this proposed legislation in one sentence, I would say that we were undertaking to legislate about medicine, food, cosmetics, and advertising and trade and to determine the entire national policy with an utterly new law concerning food, drugs, cosmetics, and advertising wholly on the basis of our antipathies to "Ginger Jake."

My conception of legislation is not that we shall construct our statutes on the basis of an offender here or there, but on the basis of the national life and the national welfare, and that in order to restrain "Ginger Jake"—conceding that he is just as bad as the distinguished senior Senator from New York has said—I think that in restraining him we ought to have very careful regard—something more than a due regard—a very considerate regard for the great masses of our people who are without offense, who are touched in no way by the evil which we intend to correct. When we go into matters that deal with trade and commerce and advertising, notwithstanding we have in our minds the greater good of the public health, to which purpose I fully subscribe, we ought, nevertheless, so to construct the legislation as to respect the rights of the law-abiding; and I think we can do that and at the same time take every proper step to restrain the impostor, the evil-doer, and the lawless. This bill, however, is drawn in its present form in the light of evils which we all abhor, but, I suspect, without a proper regard to the rights of the great body of our people who are as inoffensive in matters of conduct as those of us who seek to make these laws which so seriously affect them. To put it in another way, I do not see the necessity of restraining all the American people by putting them under the supervision of bureaucrats. I say it respectfully, but they do exist; they are realities who, unlike ourselves, are not responsible to the people.

We consider this bill at the moment; in a few days assume that it shall have become a law, and it will then pass into the hands of men upon whom I do not intend to reflect but men who are not responsible to the people. They do not have to come up in elections and answer to the electors for the deeds done in their bureaus, but you and I, Mr. President, do have to answer. We have the say today, but tomorrow the people we represent are turned over to the tender mercies of men who stay in office 10, 20, 30, and 40 years, regardless of the will of the people.

I may make a remark here which I do not much like to make. We pass a law here affecting the rights of men under the Constitution, which ought to govern us. It is the law of the Senate, and more the law of Congress than even of the citizen; it is the one thing that binds us. But we cannot be unaware of the fact that there does seem to be in the departments at Washington a disposition to delay the determination of the constitutional rights of the citizen whom we represent under the laws which we pass.

So, Mr. President, I feel that on the very threshold of this discussion, realizing the vastness of the powers here proposed to be given and the sweeping range of the application of the sections of this proposed act that, at any rate, it becomes me—and I am sure other Senators here feel that it becomes them—to have a care that, while we undertake to restrain the wrongdoer and to protect the public, we also have a care that the rights of the great masses of the innocent-minded and innocent-living people whom we represent shall not be adversely affected in any respect.

In my absence, which I very greatly regretted, it was stated on the floor by friends of mine, and in the best of faith, that I was opposed to this proposed legislation. I read the RECORD and noticed that one Senator stated that I was its leading opponent in the committee. I am not an opponent of the proposed legislation; I am not an opponent of the objectives in view.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator will absolve me, will he not, from that intimation?

Mr. BAILEY. I absolve all Senators, because I understand how that idea arose, and I will take the responsibility for it. I did not say that by way of criticism, either. I did offer amendments in the committee, and I am going to speak about those amendments in the course of my remarks; and perhaps I did create the impression that I was opposed to this proposed legislation.

Let me say, Mr. President, nobody could be opposed to a proper law to insure the providing of our people with pure foods, pure medicines, and I go so far as to say pure cosmetics, although that does not very greatly concern me. My opposition is not to the bill but to certain of its trends; not at all to the objective but to the means; and I hope I may find my way to vote for the measure. No one will strive more earnestly than I will, for the passage of a properly conceived act. On that point I think I can stand precisely upon the ground laid down by the President of the United States in his message to us. He stated the principles which he had in view and which I think we have in view in these words:

> The setting up and careful enforcement of standards of identity and quality for the foods we eat and the drugs we use, together with the strict exclusion from our markets of harmful or adulterated products.

I subscribe to that principle.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. I join most heartily with the Senator from North Carolina in subscribing fully and completely to the purposes set out in the message of the President of the United States; and I should like to ask my friend from North Carolina whether, in his opinion, as a member of the committee before which this bill has been for at least 2 years, it is necessary in order to conform to the purposes set out in the President's message to wipe out all the existing fabric of law and to deprive the public of the benefit of 20, almost 30, years of decisions of courts construing the present law, in order to accomplish those purposes, or whether it would not have been better to extend and increase the jurisdiction of the Food and Drug Administration by a proper amendment to the existing law?

Mr. BAILEY. I answer the first branch of the Senator's question in the negative. I will add that I do not think the President of the United States would tolerate for a moment a piece of legislation that described crutches as "drugs" and advertising as "adulteration", carrying the English language and the law very far.

I intend to go into the bill by way of analysis after having made it perfectly clear that no man here will be found more disposed than I am to vote for a progressive and intelligent bill restraining all the wrongs that may be done by way of imposition in advertising or in drugs or cosmetics or food. But in doing that I wish to be guided by the principle which I just stated, of correcting the wrongs without impairing the rights and the liberties of the great masses of our constituents who have done no wrong and who contemplate no wrong.

So much for that. I wish to raise a question about the old law and the new bill. We have had what we may call the "Wiley pure food law" in the statutes of our country since 1906, some 29 years. As I am informed, 46 States in the American Union have founded their State laws upon that act. In addition to that there have been 28 years of judicial determination of the meaning of the statute, the words and phrases in the old Wiley law. We pay tribute to him and we pay tribute to Theodore Roosevelt for bringing forth that law. It has served the American people well.

But at this hour we are uprooting that law and undertaking to erect another. I assert that is not a proper legislative or historical procedure. The process of lawmaking, as I understand it, is a process of evolution by experience. We do not enact new statutes affecting the entire population wherever we have old statutes to which we may recur. I believe it was Blackstone who said, in his elementary but very great source of law, that in the interpretation and the construction of law it is the duty of the lawyer and the judge and the legislator to consider the old law, to consider the mischief, and then to consider the remedy with a view to making a law which is based upon the experience which has been evolved under the law that is and the law that was.

But here we tear up the foundation, we destroy the precedents, we throw ourselves out of gear with the laws in 46 States and predicate legislation upon a new basis, needlessly setting out into a new territory, creating a new body of law. What is wrong with the Wiley Act, the present Pure Food and Drugs Act? It has been amended from 6 to 10 times. As the necessities of our people demanded, it has been improved. Why should we not here take the old Wiley law and find wherein it is inadequate, find wherein it may be improved, find wherein it may meet the needs of the present time, find wherein it may accord with the principles and objectives laid down in the message of the President to us, and by way of amendment, and with the least possible friction and the most accord with the experience of our people in 29 years, why should we not take that old law for the base and build upon it in the historical process of evolution, of experience, and of legislation?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. This is to the layman a highly technical bill, and those who are not on the committee have less knowledge perhaps than they ought to have in order to legislate. May I ask just how far and to what extent the bill repeals and abrogates the old Wiley law?

Mr. BAILEY. I shall undertake to show the differences between the two in indicating how far the bill goes beyond the old law. I think that will meet the Senator's question.

Before I go into that matter I want to take up another phase, and that is the matter of the relation of the new bill to the Department of Agriculture. I can reconcile myself in some sort of way to a law that defines a crutch as a drug, and advertising as adulteration, but I have the very greatest difficulty in comprehending how the Department of Agriculture of the United States would ever get jurisdiction over drugs, medicine, advertising, and cosmetics. I understand the Department of Agriculture was created for the purpose of fostering agriculture in the United States and not for the purpose of governing advertising in the United States. It is inconceivable to me that it should take charge of medicine and of cosmetics and of advertising. Yet the bill proposes to have it do precisely that thing. There might be an argument that the Department of Agriculture has made such great triumphs in agriculture that it is seeking new worlds to conquer; but I believe that should someone make that boast in my presence, I should agree that it had exceeded Samson in the slaughter of pigs, but had fallen far, far short of doing as good work in the matter of cotton as has the bollweevil. [Laughter.]

That is said without animosity. That is said by way of illustration. The corn borer and the bollweevil and the little orphan pigs by the millions, the great interests of cotton and of wheat, the great interests involving the livelihood and the welfare of 30,000,000 farm population in great distress, in almost insuperable difficulty—those interests must be divided under the terms of the bill with the supervision of national advertising, and the sale and use of drugs, and the commerce in and application of cosmetics. I confess I do not understand it.

There is something of logic on earth. There is something of reasonableness. We have a great Department of Commerce. The bill comes out of the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate. I wonder why it was not referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Committee on Commerce is supposed not to restrain and handicap commerce, but to foster it. We restrain commerce only where it does an evil to the general welfare. For one evil that it does there are a million benefits which it contributes. Sitting as guardians of the commerce of the country and looking, as I think we should have looked, to the Department of Commerce and the Federal Trade Commission, for some reason—I suppose at the insistence of the Department of Agriculture—we abdicate commerce in favor of agriculture.

When the Wiley law was first enacted, there was no Trade Commission, but now there is a Trade Commission. While I have heard complaints since I have been in Washington of many departments and bureaus of the Government, I have yet to hear the first by way of criticism of the conduct of business in the Trade Commission. Certainly insofar as this bill relates to commerce—and the traffic in food is commerce, the traffic in drugs is commerce, and the traffic in cosmetics is commerce, and advertising is commerce—so far as the subject matter of this legislation is commercial in its character rather than agricultural, we should do the logical thing, we should do the sensible thing, and we should do the sound thing if we should seize this opportunity, now that there is a Trade Commission with well-established precedents and with direct relations to the trade of the country, to give things commercial over to Commerce; and while I should not care to go too far into comparisons, I think I am safe in saying the Trade Commission is far more qualified to deal with matters of trade than is the Department of Agriculture. I think we should do well, I think we should be constructive, I think we should be logical, if we related the bill in the first instance by proper amendments to the old law, and related it in the second instance by proper amendments to the Federal Trade Commission.

In saying that, I do not intend any reflections upon the Department of Agriculture. My difficulty lies wholly in this: I do not know how the Department of Agriculture gets any conception that it should deal with drugs, how it gets any understanding that it should control or direct advertising. They are not within the remotest conception of its functions. Nothing could be better for the Department of Agriculture of the United States than that it should be relieved of everything except the supreme need of 30,000,000 of the farm population within the borders of our Republic. It would be an aid to them, Heaven knows. If we could bring them to that, and they could master that problem, we would crown them with honor beyond the power of words to describe.

In response to the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I desire to say that the old law, the Wiley law, related wholly to foods and drugs. The new proposed law relates to foods, drugs, cosmetics, and advertising. I have made some figures here. I do not know what the food bill of America is. It might be eight or ten billions of dollars conceived of as a whole, per annum; but the commercial and packaged food and the meats, I take it, I might safely say, would involve a commerce of at least $3,000,000,000. The drug commerce of America, I am informed, amounts to $650,000,000 a year, and the cosmetic trade, I am told, comes to $200,000,000 a year; and I cannot withhold the remark that I wonder that we spend so much money and get so little done in that respect.

The old law was confined to the label and the circular included in the package. The measure before us includes legislation of a very strict and comprehensive character relating not only to the label and to the circular, but to advertising; and the advertising includes not only the newspaper advertising but also the radio and the billboard and all other forms of advertising. We propose to cast all of that into the hands of a bureau which will never again be responsible to us, and which, if it follows the example of some bureaus here, will seek not to be responsible to the Supreme Court of the United States in the matter of the rights of our constituents.

I will say to the Senator from Idaho that the old law confined its description in the matters of drugs to the words "false and fraudulent"—historical words of unquestioned legal import. The new proposed law makes the description "false or misleading"; and, of course, the Senator from Idaho, being the great lawyer that he is, realizes at once that when we expand "fraudulent" into "misleading" we get out of the age-long channels of human rights into the infinitely broad channels of administrative discretion, for what is misleading is always a matter in the first instance, at any rate, of opinion. What is fraudulent always has been and always will be a matter of law. "Fraudulent" always implies intent to deceive. "Misleading" implies nothing except that one may be mistaken.

I will agree that there is no penalty and no punishment sufficient for the man who perpetrates a fraud upon innocent people. I hate and I despise a human being who will concoct a nostrum and undertake to make money out of the misery of ignorant and helpless people. I will go as far as anyone will go to put the stripes of the felon upon that sort of man; but in this bill I am asked to leave the ancient form of sound words, on which a civilization itself rests—and that is what it rests upon—to leave that ancient form, and to throw American people on their knees before a bureau in order that they may beg for mercy against the foul accusation that they have uttered some misleading word!

Mr. President, I pause there. That is the root of the matter. There is not one of us here but misleads; not intentionally, of course. We say, sometimes, more than we mean. We are often mistaken. I just now misled my very good and highly esteemed friend from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] with a light remark. Misleading? Why, it is the history of frail humanity; and here is an alteration in a law established for 29 years in which we abandon the strict construction of the word "fraudulent", which is shot through with the intent to deceive, and substitute for it the word "misleading", which is as innocent as an angel's heart. I protest against it.

Now to go on: In each case the determination whether false and fraudulent—or, now, false and misleading—is made in the first instance by the Bureau; and the Bureau is presided over in this matter of medicine and cosmetics by a lawyer. If he were not a lawyer, he might be a doctor; and he is the judge. He sends forth his inspectors. He calls on your constituent and mine. He calls in question the American citizen with the Stars and Stripes above his head. He determines that this man has uttered misleading words. We put within the power of a man not responsible to the people of America the right of absolute destruction.

Now I go back to the beginning. I agree that we must do whatever we may do to get "Ginger Jake", but in order to get "Ginger Jake" I do not propose to have a net dragged through the entire American population, and that by people who do not have to answer at the ballot box as we have to.

Further, in the old law, when a label was false or fraudulent, it was brought before the Department and was subject to the law. Under the proposed law the label must not be misleading in any particular—in any particular whatever.

Mr. President, the pending bill is misleading in several particulars. It tells me that advertising is adulteration, and I know that that cannot be so. It tells me that crutches are drugs, and I know that that is misleading. But under the bill the label must not be misleading in any particular, and it must have medical opinion to sustain all claims, also warnings against use in pathological conditions, full and adequate directions for using; and that strict stipulation is imposed upon every human being in the United States, in the first instance, not by a judge, not by a court in which his rights can be ascertained under the law, but by the head of a bureau.

There may be need for bureaus in our Government; I would not deny that. There must be an executive department. The laws we make must be administered. But if in making the laws the Members of the Congress do not guard the rights of the people against administrators of the law who are not responsible to the people, then we not only neglect our duty, but we will reach in logical order the position in which we are responsible for what they do. I do not have to answer so much for the acts of Congress as I do for the conduct of men who administer the laws for which I vote, under which there were brought here people who could not understand what had been done to them or why.

Mr. President, I lay down a simple principle. Assuming that we ought to have bureaus and must have administrators, and knowing that the executive department must be independent under the Constitution and ought to be under all the sanctions of experience, once we make the law, knowing that it passes into the hands of the administrator, loyalty to ourselves, to our country, and to the constituents who must live under the law makes it our duty to see to it that the law under which they must live shall be administered within bounds to accomplish the intent and purpose of the law; that and no more.

There is a practice now—and it is not modern, either; it has not originated under the present administration, but has been the practice for many years—under which criminal laws are enacted in bureaus and men are indicted and brought into court not because they have violated the law of the land enacted by their responsible representatives, but because they have violated regulations which were conceived in some office down the street and published not in statute books, but in rules and regulations, or filed in filing cabinets.

Mr. President, I make my point. Here is this proposed legislation, which affects the entire population and has a relation to commerce involving billions of dollars, touching hundreds and thousands of stores, going into every dining room and every pantry, permeating the national life as few laws we could pass here would—incomparably more personal in its application than any legislation we have had before us since I have been in the Congress. I beg you, when we propose to enact a law as far-reaching as that, that we shall at the same time lay the restraining hand upon those who have the power to frame and issue the regulations in order that you and I may not be called upon to answer for deeds of which we never conceived; in order that there may be a law in the United States and that the American people may know it; in order that the rights of a great population may be protected by the ancient standards under which laws have been made from the day of Moses to the present hour, not in little cubbyholes down in some department, but from the high mount where laws should be given, and on the tablets of stone.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Although I do not find the basis for the construction in the pending measure, it has been stated to me by persons deeply interested in the proposed legislation that in a trial for the violation of a regulation the defendant must prove his innocence.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; the regulation as administered is prima facie law until held to the contrary.

Mr. BORAH. That the Government does not need to prove the guilt of the defendant, but that he must prove his innocence.

Mr. BAILEY. He must plead just as any other defendant will plead in a criminal case. The presumption is that the regulation is the law.

Mr. BORAH. I am not sure that I understand the Senator, or that the Senator understands my question. Of course, when a charge is lodged against an individual for the violation of a regulation, the Government must proceed in the first instance, must it not, to prove the case against the defendant?

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator refer to the trial, or to the arrest?

Mr. BORAH. I refer to the trial.

Mr. BAILEY. On the trial the Government, as I understand it, proves the regulation, and then the violation of the regulation. If the Senator has some light on that, I will greatly appreciate it.

Mr. BORAH. I am seeking enlightenment.

Mr. BAILEY. I am speaking out of some experience in the matter, and I speak wholly out of that experience, as a lawyer might without having the books before him now, out of a past which lies behind him, some distance behind him, and I say that the violation of a regulation is an offense justifying seizure and ruin without trial. If there is an accusation of crime, the Government must prove its case; all defendants in criminal actions come into court, under criminal laws, clothed with the presumption of innocence. Perhaps the confusion is due to confounding seizure of goods in libel with prosecution for crime.

I know the Senator from Idaho is a great lawyer. I am speaking out of my experience, and very definitely; but if he has a different impression, I should like to have the correction.

Mr. BORAH. I have no different impression, generally speaking. I was seeking to discover just what the proposed bill undertook to do in the way of shifting the burden of proof.

Mr. BAILEY. As I read the bill, there is no difference between the regulations contemplated in the bill and any other regulations. If I had time—and I hope I may turn the pages and find the provision—I could show that the regulations and the law are on the same basis with the regulations and the laws in respect to other acts, not only of this character but of other characters, enacted by Congress. But seizures are made and ruin may be wrought by them without trial.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to ask the Senator whether the provisions of the bill add greatly to the powers which are now possessed by the Bureau here in Washington.

Mr. BAILEY. I think so; but the powers are very great as to what are actually wrongs. This gives very much discretion. As I have just said, to take the word "misleading" and substitute it for the word "fraudulent" is an expansion in an infinite degree.

Mr. McKELLAR. In a practical sense, then, the bill very largely adds to the powers of the bureaus over advertising and over every other feature connected with the pure food and drug law?

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, yes; it very greatly expands the powers of the bureaus. I will come to that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say that I think they have too great powers now.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Carrying out the discussion between the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the able Senator from North Carolina, my reading of the bill answers the question propounded by the Senator from Idaho, in that it does not shift the burden of proof in any way whatever. The burden of proof remains where it was. In order for the agency having the prosecution successfully to prosecute, it must establish guilt, and it must establish it affirmatively.

Mr. BAILEY. I am looking for the paragraph referred to. I realize that this is the tenth reprint of the bill, and I am having some difficulty in finding the provision relating to the regulations.

Mr. McCARRAN. In view of the fact that I have pending before the committee a companion bill, which bears my name, I wish to say that I have followed the course of this legislation with some considerable study; and I believe the Senator may content himself with the idea, in answer to the query made by the Senator from Idaho, that nowhere does this bill seek to shift the burden of proof. In other words, the same rules that now prevail with reference to criminal prosecutions will prevail under this bill. The violation must be proven, and its intent must be proven; and the violation of the regulation must be established, to use the expression of the Senator from North Carolina, beyond a reasonable doubt. There is no question in my mind about that.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator takes the view I take, but the distinction lies in the difference between the power to seize goods, in which the burden is shifted, and the power to prosecute for crime, in which it is not.

Mr. McCARRAN. I agree with the Senator in that; and that is true all the way through all our legislation. In other words, we do delegate our authority to a large extent in the way of providing that certain bureaus may make regulations. The Supreme Court recently passed on that and commented on it severely, and I think rightfully so, because the bureaus did not file their regulations so that they might become public, and thus that the average man might know what the law was. That was the general tenor of the comment of the Supreme Court. These regulations should be filed, should become public, should become a thing to guide the public; but when that is all over, and the regulations have been established, as they must be established, the burden of proof rests on the Government or the prosecuting agency to establish the guilt of those charged with offenses.

Mr. BAILEY. The burden of proof always rests with the Government bureau in prosecutions for crime, but not in actions of seizure.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is what I desired to clarify, in view of the discussion between the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. I must confess that I do not see the difference. The burden of proof always rests upon the State to prove the guilt of the defendant. What is the distinction?

Mr. McCARRAN. The distinction is this: The Senator from Idaho asked a question, which was, if I recall it correctly, "Does this bill shift the burden of proof? In other words, must one who is accused prove his innocence?" That was the purport of the question of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not think so. I should not say that the bill shifted the burden of proof in criminal actions. I very seriously question whether that could be done, or ever thought of. Senators realize that we have a distinction here in the matter of seizures and the matter of criminal guilt; but I do not think anywhere in America, or in any regulation, it is conceivable that we bring a man into court and presume him guilty of crime.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. As I said, I myself did not find in the bill the justification for the theory that the burden of proof was attempted to be shifted.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator wishes a flat answer to that statement, I do not think the burden of proof is shifted in criminal actions. There are instances here in which, in matters of seizure, the action is wholly within the breasts of the administrators. That is assimilated in the actions in admiralty. The offense is not made a crime; it is a libel. When we come to the criminal end of it, however, I would not for one moment suggest that the burden of proof is shifted.

Mr. BORAH. I knew it could not be shifted, but I understood there was an attempt to shift it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. That was the case, I may say to the Senator, in the original bill, but not in the present bill.

Mr. BORAH. That undoubtedly explains it.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes. I am glad we have that matter made clear. I was totally unprepared for the question, because that sort of thing never entered my mind. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I knew many things might be attempted here, but I did not think that sort of thing would be attempted, and I was totally unaware of the implications of his questions.

To go on with the analysis, I now come to the procedure. Under the old law there was provision for multiple seizure in adulteration or misbranding, whether injurious or not. Under the new proposed law there is provision for multiple seizure the same as in the old law, except that there are included in the proposed law advertising and false or misleading statements in advertising or inadequate warnings and directions.

Now I desire to dwell for a moment on the matter of multiple seizures. I agree that wherever an article of food, cosmetic, or drug is imminently dangerous to health, there ought to be the power to take it out of the market. I would strike it as quickly as I would strike poison. There would be no difference between the committee and myself, or the proponents of the bill and myself, in that respect. But with that for a base, this proposed law has been spread out to the point—and I wish the Senator from Idaho to get my thought in this respect, because I think it is of the utmost importance—where advertising is described for the purposes of the act as adulteration, and under adulteration by way of publication in the newspapers there may be multiple seizures; and if the head of the Bureau finds, in his opinion, that the advertising is misleading, he may proceed to seize throughout the land. That is just as much power as Julius Caesar ever asked for. The head of the Bureau can kill and make alive.

Assume that I am selling a proprietary article in every State in the Union, and the head of the Bureau reads an advertisement printed by me in a magazine and decides that the advertising is misleading, and from that decision, under this proposed act and by its power, he forms the judgment that that is adulteration. Then he declares that I am selling an adulterated article, injurious to health; he seizes my goods in 10 States in a day, or on every day; and I am ruined and destroyed before I can get back to court.

That is too much power. That is more power than the Congress ought to have.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. TYDINGS rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the person whose goods may be seized is not given an opportunity to be heard?

Mr. BAILEY. His goods can be seized at once.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. The official can seize the article if he has reported to the Secretary that it is imminently dangerous to health. That is when he can seize it.

Mr. BAILEY. And he can seize it under the adulterated theory on the ground of misleading advertising.

Mr. COPELAND. No, Mr. President, he cannot. He can seize it if the advertising puts forth untruthful statements.

Mr. BAILEY. Or is misleading.

Mr. COPELAND. But he cannot seize it except where there is reason to believe that the article is imminently dangerous to the public health.

Mr. BAILEY. I said he could find that it was adulterated from the advertising, reach the conclusion that it was dangerous to health, and then make the multiple seizures.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, if the person who reads the advertisement in the magazine or the newspaper comes to the conclusion that the food as advertised is adulterated, he may seize the food?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; that may be done in every State, under the multiple-seizure provision, but the person must be an official with authority.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I understand.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BAILEY. I promised to yield to the Senator from Maryland; then, I will yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask whether or not—I presume it is impracticable—it would be possible to have an advertisement approved before it was used?

Mr. BAILEY. I cannot answer that question, but I should dislike to be put to that expedient; I should dislike to have to run to Washington and ask somebody here whether I could advertise a commodity in which I was interested.

Mr. TYDINGS. That would be somewhat inconvenient, I admit, but, at the same time, inasmuch as the Department has to pass on whether or not the article is pure, it strikes me that it would be no great inconvenience, because advertising is nothing more than describing the food or other commodity, and so it might be passed on at the same time. One of the evils complained of, as I understand the Senator from New York, is that misleading advertising is being used to induce people to buy commodities. If that be the case, if the commodity were not deleterious to the person who bought it, the advertising might be subjected to a fraud charge. While we do not want to cover too much scope, I was wondering just to what extent the consumer was protected from false and misleading advertising as well as from the harmful contents of a package or bottle.

Mr. BAILEY. I thank the Senator. I wish to recur to this language of section 401 on page 13, which reads in part:

A drug shall be deemed to be adulterated—
(a) (1) If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof.

That is the language of the bill. Under it we provide for a supervisor of advertising in America, and we repose in his supreme judgment the right to seize the goods of an American citizen. He says the advertising makes an adulteration that is injurious to health; I am selling my goods in 48 States; he seizes them in 40 States, and, even though I go into court a thousand times and prove he is wrong, my business is gone, for a man cannot be universally disgraced by his Government and hope to recover in a lawsuit.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that not only does the bill set up in Washington a supervisor of advertising, as the Secretary of Agriculture or his subordinate, the head of the Food and Drug Administration in Washington would be, but it sets up as many supervisors of advertising as there are localities in the United States where there are employees representing the Secretary of Agriculture, because at the bottom of page 45 appears this language:

The article shall be liable to seizure by process pursuant to the libel; but if a chief of station or other employee of the Administration, duly designated by the Secretary, has probable cause to believe from facts found by him and duly reported to the Secretary that such article is so adulterated as to be imminently dangerous to health, then, and in such case only, the article shall be liable to seizure by such chief of station or employee, who shall promptly report the facts to the proper United States attorney.

In other words, if a $100-a-month employee in the Food and Drug Administration who happens to be listening to a radio program hears an advertising claim made which he regards as misbranding, it ipso facto becomes adulterated under the definition of this bill, and, after reporting the matter to the Secretary but without being required to hear from the Secretary to get specific authority, he can go out and seize the goods and possibly ruin the manufacturer's business, or the retailer's business, as the case may be, and on his own responsibility, without any necessity for any further instructions from the Secretary of Agriculture, report the matter to the United States district attorney.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think perhaps I did not make my contention plain. Assuming that a food is pure and qualifies under the Pure Food and Drug Act, what has advertising got to do with it?

Mr. BAILEY. Assuming that the article is pure?

Mr. TYDINGS. Assuming that it is pure and is not an adulteration, what has advertising got to do with it?

Mr. BAILEY. I imagine if the Bureau head said that the advertising was misleading to somebody as to the nature of the food or its value or its character, he could proceed against it.

Mr. TYDINGS. What I am getting at is, even admitting the advertising is miseading, then the pending measure is not only a pure food and drug bill per se but it is also a bill to protect the public from misleading or false advertising about an article which per se is pure and good in itself. In other words, chopped up automobile tires might be prescribed for some disease, and, of course, that would be deleterious; but plain water might be prescribed for the disease. What if the advertisement should state that the water would cure pneumonia or whatever the disease might be, that would not affect the water; as I understand this proposed law, it is primarily to keep from the public deleterious foods and medicines; so where the advertising comes in and how it is a part of the subject matter I do not really see.

Mr. BAILEY. I am glad the Senator asked me the question, because I can explain that point to him. This proposed legislation is contrived so adroitly that whoever drew the bill—I do not mean to impute anything to anyone's motives, of course—managed to include advertising under adulteration.

Mr. TYDINGS. On what page is that found?

Mr. BAILEY. It is found on page 13, under the title "Adulterated drugs."

That was done with a view of bringing advertising under the statutes relating to adulteration, which are the strictest statutes. I have an amendment which will transfer this advertising provision to the misbranding section, and when it shall be placed in the misbranding section we will have it where it belongs, and the law will be entirely different and much more moderate. I shall offer three amendments to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator from North Carolina have the copy of the bill which I have the print of which is dated April 2? Paragraph (a) of section 401 has been stricken out in the copy I hold in my hand.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will read just below he will see what was substituted for it.

Mr. TYDINGS. The language is:

If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof.

Mr. BAILEY. That is the same language as has been stricken out.

Mr. TYDINGS. That fact has to be established, does it not?

Mr. BAILEY. Let me make it clear to the Senator. That constitutes an adulteration. If the Senator will agree with me that that is not adulteration but misbranding, and should be in the misbranding section, I shall be entirely content.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has already arrived at a solution for my dilemma if he has an amendment of that kind.

Mr. BAILEY. I have three amendments for that purpose.

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot see why food that is good, but which might be falsely advertised, becomes deleterious because of the advertising. It is simply misbranding.

Mr. BAILEY. That is a part of the logic of the bill I cannot understand.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. For the benefit of the Senator from Maryland, on the point he just asked as to procedure in the case of adulteration, and whether it has to be proved or not, I suggest that he read the language on page 13 just referred to by the Senator from North Carolina in connection with the language in the seizure section on page 44, particularly the language of the amendment starting at the bottom of page 45, which provides for the summary seizure of adulterated goods whenever an employee concludes that they ought to be seized.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. May I say to the Senator from Maryland that if he will turn to page 13, lines 19 and 20, he will find this language:

If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof.

A drug might be the purest one in the world, a perfectly proper drug when used under proper conditions, but if in the newspaper advertising of it, or in the radio advertising of it, the public should be told they might take the drug in any quantity without harm to health, that would be misleading, false, and harmful; and the object is to prevent that sort of thing.

Mr. TYDINGS. Even assuming that to be so, that is entirely different from saying whether a drug or a food is deleterious or injurious per se. What I am attempting to get at, and what the Senator from North Carolina offers, is that if it is a case of false advertising or misbranding, that does not make the article itself impure. It might be prescribed wrongly; its use might be recommended in a quantity that would make it deleterious, I agree; but that would be because of the advertisement, and the fault would not be in the article which is advertised. There ought to be a section against fraud, but there is no reason to go out and seize an article if it is all right simply because it has been wrongly advertised over the radio.

For example, let us suppose that some drug, calomel, for instance, is properly labeled on a bottle which is held out for sale; and let us suppose that somebody recommends that 25 grains of it be taken before each meal. That would not make the calomel any worse than if the properly prescribed dose had been ordered. The point in that instance is not that the medicine is deleterious but that the advertising is erroneous; and certainly we do not want the medicine seized when it is properly branded simply because somebody erroneously or falsely misrepresented its value over the radio.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator from North Carolina permit me to interrupt there?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator wants in some way to stop misleading, false, and harmful statements?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. What difference does it make?

Mr. TYDINGS. What difference does it make?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes, what difference does it make?

Mr. TYDINGS. My illustration was not very apt. Let me give a better one. Let us suppose that someone starts to produce vinegar, and it is labeled as a certain kind of vinegar; we will call it "Western vinegar", for want of a better name. Suppose someone "goes on the air", and says, "You should drink a pint of Western vinegar before each meal as a health-producing beverage"; that would not make the vinegar deleterious; the vinegar would be perfectly good vinegar; it would not do to go out and seize the vinegar because somebody had falsely advertised it.

On the other hand, the public ought to be protected against false advertising. That would be no excuse for seizing the vinegar.

Mr. COPELAND. The unfortunate thing about the illustration is that that sort of thing does not enter into food.

Mr. TYDINGS. I just took a food for illustration.

Mr. COPELAND. There is no such provision as the Senator from North Carolina is discussing that relates to food. It applies to drugs.

Mr. TYDINGS. Suppose someone, to cause a greater consumption of some drug that is not deleterious in its effects, advertises that more than a healthful dose should be used, to get fat, to get thin, to keep well, or for whatever reason; that would be no excuse for going out and seizing the article itself if it were branded properly, would it?

Mr. COPELAND. I have in my hand an article such as the Senator has in mind, for the reduction of fat. We will not name the article.

Mr. TYDINGS. What about it?

Mr. COPELAND. The radio man, the advertiser, says it is a perfectly harmless preparation and should be used. Certainly the Senator does not want the American people to be given products which are harmful. There ought to be some way to reach them, and this is the way by which we are reaching them.

Mr. TYDINGS. Suppose this preparation which the Senator has just handed me and which I hold in my hand, properly taken, two capsules before each meal, is not injurious. Let us suppose, on the other hand, that six capsules taken before each meal would be injurious. Suppose the directions on the box say to take two capsules before each meal, but some enthusiastic advertiser over the radio says, "You ought to take 6 capsules before each meal instead of 2." Would the Senator then favor going out and seizing all of the preparation in the country when the harm done has been in the false advertising rather than in the drug being injurious in itself?

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will bear with me——

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will answer my question I shall bear with him.

Mr. COPELAND. I was asking the Senator from North Carolina, who has the floor, to bear with me.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator from North Carolina will let the Senator from New York answer my question, I will bear with him, too.

Mr. COPELAND. This particular article——

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator answer my question, using the illustration I put to the Senator, where the article itself is not injurious but a dose is prescribed which is injurious. Would the Senator say the article ought to be seized in every drug store in the United States?

Mr. COPELAND. If the article is dangerous to health, under the doses prescribed on the label or the advertising thereof, it should be seized.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us suppose it is not injurious, but that the radio advertising prescribes such doses as would be injurious.

Mr. COPELAND. Then action should be taken.

Mr. TYDINGS. What action would be taken?

Mr. COPELAND. The radio licensee——

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, no! Under the Senator's bill, as I understand, the agent of the bureau would be justified in seizing every box of that article in the country, notwithstanding the branding on the box was a proper branding.

Mr. COPELAND. But it is not. Will the Senator read the language of the bill?

If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof.

This article is dangerous to health in the labeling and the advertising.

Mr. TYDINGS. With all due respect and perhaps because I have not made it clear, the Senator is evading the question I am putting to him. The article is not harmful. The article is properly labeled, but the radio program advertising is erroneous, it is false, it induces a quantity to be used greater than the amount stated on the label. What would the Senator do in that case?

Mr. COPELAND. There would not be any action then except against the man who gave the copy to the radio advertiser.

Mr. TYDINGS. What action would there be against him?

Mr. COPELAND. If it was false advertising, there would be a penalty for it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Where is the penalty found?

Mr. COPELAND. With the manufacturer and not the advertiser.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would that come under the United States district attorney or the Pure Food and Drug Bureau?

Mr. COPELAND. It would be reported by the Pure Food and Drug Bureau to the United States district attorney.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator would not want the article seized in that case throughout the entire United States?

Mr. COPELAND. Not unless it came under this provision of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what I have been trying for 10 minutes to get the Senator to say. It does come within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I will resume with a view to concluding. The point in the colloquy between the Senator from New York and the Senator from Maryland is wholly the making of a distinction between adulteration and misbranding. No one objects to proper measures to take hold of and get out of the channels of commerce adulterated articles which are injurious to health. The unfortunate thing about the bill is that it takes a misbranded article, or the advertisement by way of some inaccurate statement as in the character of adulteration, and applies to it the strict law of adulteration. My amendment would take the advertised article on the basis of the false advertisement and put it where it belongs, under misbranding, and then would permit one seizure. There is a vast difference between destroying an injurious poison or product, and a proper action to take charge and proceed in a considerate way protective of the rights of the people under the misbranding act.

Mr. President, for one reason and another I have remained on my feet and talked a great deal longer than I had intended.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator express an opinion about this point? As I gather it, the necessary result of the legislation as explained by the Senator means that every business house dealing with foods or drugs, which advertises its wares, will of necessity have to come to Washington and have its advertisements passed on by a bureau here before it can advertise.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that is the consequence. That is one of the things I hope to avoid. And there will also be wide exposure to inspection.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; that is something that ought to be avoided.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, has the Senator from North Carolina prepared his amendments?

Mr. BAILEY. I have my amendments here. I am about to conclude.

Mr. COPELAND. May I see the amendments the Senator proposes to offer?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly. Let me say to the Senator from New York that the first two amendments merely transfer the advertising feature from the adulteration section of the bill to the misbranding section. The third amendment makes the matter complete by authorizing one seizure action in cases of misbranding instead of the multiple seizures.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Carolina if the final amendment which he offers is to section 711?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; on page 45, line 7.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator will permit me, I desire cordially to concur in what he said at that point, and to urge upon the Senator from New York the utter justice of the amendment and the propriety of its acceptance.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I wish to conclude. I am for the legislation. I have spoken very earnestly against excessive powers and against certain abuses by way of confusing advertising with adulteration. I have tried to speak constructively. I do not wish to destroy the legislation. On the other hand, I wish with all my heart to accomplish to the utmost degree the spirit and the objectives of the President's message. I wish to fulfill all the fine hopes of refinement and improvement upon the Wiley Act, which has served the American people very nobly.

I shall conclude with this statement from the President, contained in his message of March 22:

> The great majority of those engaged in the trade in food and drugs do not need regulation.

He did not contemplate that we should put regulations upon them.

> They observe the spirit as well as the letter of existing law. Present legislation ought to be directed primarily toward a small minority of evaders and chiselers.

Submit such a measure, and no Senator will be found more heartily disposed to go the limit of his capacity to bring about its passage than myself.

I thank the Senate

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein, to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and for other purposes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I should like to have incorporated in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the bottom of page 51 it is proposed to insert the following new subsection:

> (h) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 876 of the Revised Statutes, subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a court of the United States in any district in which cases from various jurisdictions are consolidated under this section may run into any other district.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, to explain this amendment——

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senator on what page it is to be inserted?

Mr. AUSTIN. At the bottom of page 51 I propose to insert a new paragraph to enable the courts in districts in which cases are consolidated to reach witnesses in the districts from which the consolidations are made.

Mr. COPELAND. I am in the fullest sympathy with the amendment, and I hope it will prevail.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well, then, if the question may be put on the amendment without explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk the three amendments to which I referred in the course of my remarks. When they are considered I shall ask that they be considered together, as they are part of one whole. They relate to different sections, and therefore had to be written separately; but I should like to have them considered as one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments offered by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 711 (a), on page 45, line 7, it is proposed to insert a semicolon after the word "found", and to add the following:

> Provided, however, That not more than one seizure action shall be instituted in cases of alleged misbranding, except upon order to show cause, and then upon a showing by the Secretary that such article is misbranded in manner or degree as to render such article imminently dangerous to health, or that such alleged misbranding has been the basis of a prior judgment in favor of the United States in a criminal prosecution or libel for condemnation proceeding respecting such article under this act; and provided further, that said single seizure action shall, on motion, be removed for trial to a jurisdiction of reasonable proximity to the residence of the claimant of such article.

In section 401 (a) (1), on page 13, it is proposed to strike out all of lines 19 and 20.

In section 402, on page 16, it is proposed to insert a new subsection between lines 2 and 3, to be designated as (b), and to read as follows:

> If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling or advertising thereof.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, before giving consideration to these amendments I desire to discuss the matter somewhat at length. I ask the leader of the majority what is his wish?

Mr. ROBINSON. Unless there is objection, I shall move an executive session.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. I send to the desk sundry amendments which I intend to propose to the bill, and ask that they may be printed and lie on the table. In the case of a series of amendments having to do with the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, while they necessarily involve amendments to several different sections, I ask that they may be printed as one amendment for consideration in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first business on the Executive Calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, April 4, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 3, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Incline Thine ear, our Heavenly Father, and hear us, and may we not be ashamed to confess Thee before men. Direct us by the inspiration of that altruism taught by the Master and fulfilled in His exemplary life. This is the jewel of revelation flashed out of the mines of eternity. We pray that the passion to serve may beat in our blood; having this compulsion, do Thou shine upon our paths with heavenly luster. Give us strength to crowd out of our lives evil desire and sinful tendencies; in all things may we hallow Thy name. Almighty God, we come to Thee for help and guidance, for upon this Congress rest great and solemn responsibilities and the issues are tremendous. O be consciously near all Members, dominate our thoughts and acts, and in all things may we be wise, just, and noble. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday were read and approved.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his request for a moment that I may make an announcement?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my question of personal privilege to allow the gentleman from Michigan to make an announcement.

EDWIN F. SWEET

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes to announce the death of a former Member.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, the morning's paper carries the notice of the death, in California, of a former distinguished Democratic Member of the House, who represented the Fifth Congressional District of Michigan in the Sixty-second Congress—Hon. Edwin F. Sweet. He died at the ripe old age of 87. After his service in the House, he served as Assistant Secretary of Commerce during the 8 years of the Wilson administration. He was an honored and highly respected citizen and a capable and patriotic public servant.

REFERENCE OF BILLS

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas permit me to ask unanimous consent for the reference of certain bills before he presses his question of personal privilege?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield for that purpose.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bills—

S. 464. An act to add certain lands to the Malheur National Forest, in the State of Oregon;

S. 462. An act to authorize an extension of exchange authority and addition of public lands to the Willamette National Forest, in the State of Oregon;

H. R. 5925. A bill to add certain lands to the Malheur National Forest, in the State of Oregon; and

H. R. 1418. A bill to authorize an extension of exchange authority and addition of public lands to the Willamette National Forest, in the State of Oregon; be referred from the Committee on Agriculture to the Committee on the Public Lands, with the understanding that this does not in any way affect the general jurisdiction of the Committee on Agriculture over the question of the national forests. The Parliamentarian advises me that there was an error of reference in the first place.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understood the statement of the gentleman from Texas it was that there had been a mistake in the original reference, and that these bills should have gone to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. JONES. That was my impression from what the Parliamentarian told me. It merely involves the transfer of some public lands to the Forest Service.

Mr. SNELL. And they are bills that properly should go to the Committee on the Public Lands?

Mr. JONES. That is my understanding.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are these administration bills?

Mr. JONES. I may state to the gentleman that I am not informed; we have not gone into the merits of the bills. I understand some of them may be of interest to the administration, but I cannot give the gentleman definite information.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman know whether they are from any particular department of the Government?

Mr. JONES. Two of them, I believe, were introduced by Senators and two by Members of the House. I prefer not to express an opinion on it.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request of yesterday and ask unanimous consent that business in order on today, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with in view of the fact there are matters of pressing importance we want to take up.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell the Members what is to come up today if Calendar Wednesday business is dispensed with?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We expect to call up the McSwain bill to take the profits out of war.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the House had notice that the McSwain bill is to be brought up? Is it expected that a special rule will be brought in for the passage of the bill today?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I so understand. The Chairman of the Committee on Rules is here.

Mr. RICH. Have the Members been advised that the bill will be brought up today?

The SPEAKER. There has been a rule on this bill at the desk for some time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There is a rule on the bill, as I understand it.

Mr. KLOEB. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I may say that a rule was granted a month ago which provides for 4 hours' general debate.

Mr. RICH. But the bill will not be acted on today?

Mr. KLOEB. That is my understanding.

Mr. CULLEN. That is right.

Mr. RICH. Is that the understanding of the floor leader?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado that business in order on today, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the Washington Times of Thursday, March 14, 1935, wholly without foundation or excuse, in big box-car letters across the entire front page—and by " box car " letters I mean letters of large black-faced type about an inch high—falsely and maliciously states:

Police plot laid to BLANTON.

And follows that with a lot of other unfounded and malicious allegations.

The Washington Times in another issue of the same date, March 14, 1935, in large box-car letters falsely and maliciously states:

BLANTON police ouster plot charged—followed by other false and malicious allegations.

The Washington Star for that date in large headlines on the front page, without foundation or excuse, but with intent to injure me, states:

BLANTON accused by Bean of plot—followed by unwarranted allegations, and printing my picture with some police officials, as if I had done something wrong.

From the body of these press reports I quote the following excerpts:

Charges that Representative THOMAS L. BLANTON, Democrat, of Texas, had threatened to force Assistant Police Supt. Thaddeus R. Bean out of office unless he resigned to make way for Representative BLANTON'S friend, Inspector Albert J. Headley, was made at the District crime hearing today.

The press reports showed that there were but two Members of Congress on said committee present at said hearing, one being Mr. WILLIAM T. SCHULTE, of Indiana, who did his first service here in the last Seventy-third Congress, and Mr. CHAUNCEY REED, of Illinois, whose only service here began in this session last January, neither of whom have yet had time to learn all about Washington.

Although my office is in the same building near the committee room, on the floor just below, and between it and the post office, I had no notice whatever of any such ridiculous charge or proceedings before said subcommittee of two members, with its employed counsel, Mr. Fitzpatrick, being at the time present, until I saw the evening papers filled with such silly headlines.

Shortly after said committee had been organized I went before it to present the facts about a bill I have introduced to change the present system of police and firemen trial boards, as the present trial board is composed of policemen, who are called upon to pass upon the delinquencies of brother policemen, and it is absolutely impossible under such system to get rid of the dishonest policemen among the 1,300 police on the Metropolitan Police Force of Washington, as not a policeman can be discharged by the Commissioners until he has been tried and convicted by a police trial board composed of brother policemen, and my bill sought to change this to an impartial civilian trial board, so that we could get rid of the crooks who are now on the force, destroying its morale, and preventing proper law enforcement.

I had caused Maj. Ernest W. Brown, Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police Department, to be present, so that he could hear what I said, and I called attention to the fact that a reliable Government official had testified before my committee that there was a big gambling house running regularly within less than a block from the committee room, and had been running for over a year. As the five Washington newspapers then had their reporters all present at this executive meeting of this crime-investigating committee, they all then played up my action as an attack upon the entire police department, but, as this big gambling house was raided on February 6, 1935, and 58 gamblers arrested, I did not expect a reprisal.

From one of these Washington papers reporting what Inspector Bean said, and the way in which he made the charges, I quote the following excerpts:

Q. Do you know of any petty jealousies among the higher ranking officers of the police department, say above the rank of captain? Representative SCHULTE asked.

Inspector Bean said, No.

Q. Then why, snapped Mr. SCHULTE, are they trying to get you?

I heard last September, Inspector Bean replied, that Mr. BLANTON, of Texas, had written a letter to Major Brown asking him to retire me and replace me with Inspector Headley.

Q. Why? asked Mr. SCHULTE. Had you had trouble with Mr. BLANTON?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then why?

A. Well, Mr. BLANTON and Inspector Headley have been good friends for a number of years, Inspector Bean replied. Several years ago Inspector Headley was reduced to a captain, and had to come to Congress to get back.

Q. Mr. BLANTON did that for him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, interrupted Mr. SCHULTE, if this is true in your case, are there any other cases? Anyone else they are trying to get out of the picture?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. Isn't it true, asked Representative SCHULTE, that Mr. BLANTON is a member of the District Appropriations Subcommittee?

A. I understand that he is; yes, sir.

Q. Don't you think their conniving to get you out is lowering the morale of the police department?

A. I only know about myself. I know how I feel.

Q. It means there are others, Mr. SCHULTE said. No one knows when the cap will be set off under them.

Have you ever heard of similar tactics employed against any other members of the department, either by a Member of Congress or anyone else?

A. No, sir. Not that I know of.

Dr. John R. Fitzpatrick, committee counsel, said: "Brown sent you to the guillotine."

Representative WILLIAM SCHULTE complimented Mr. Bean and said: "It seems unfair that a man could be threatened by a conniving person or persons outside of the police department. I believe that if the people of Washington knew the true facts they would resent it."

The papers reported that Inspector Bean said that in a conversation with me in my office I had said to him that I was a high Mason, and as he is a Catholic and Representative WILLIAM T. SCHULTE is a Knights of Columbus, and the committee counsel, John R. Fitzpatrick, is also a high Catholic, he undoubtedly interjected that statement hoping to arouse some religious prejudice against me, when in my own breast I have not now, and never have had, any religious prejudice, some of my best friends in this House being Catholics and Knights of Columbus.

The whole silly hurrah and hullabaloo about nothing was stirred up by these malicious Washington newspapers. Inspector Albert J. Headley has been an honored, faithful police officer here in Washington for 39 years. He is as brave as a lion. He is absolutely dependable. He is a man of strict honor and integrity. He is a good neighbor and a loyal friend.

On account of his seniority, he was in line for promotion as assistant superintendent. Inspector Bean also was in line. When in the spring of 1934 the Senate placed such a position in the bill, one of these two men was entitled to be appointed. I was for Inspector Headley, because I had absolute confidence in him and knew that he would clean up the rotten conditions in Washington. A number of his friends who were prominent citizens of Washington, both Masons and Catholics, came to me and asked my help to get Inspector Headley appointed. Some of Inspector Bean's friends, including Major Brown, came to see me and advised that Inspector Bean was in bad health; that he did not want to spend another winter in Washington, but intended to move to Florida; that he was anxious to get this appointment, so that when he retired in a few months he could be retired on higher pay; and that he was in sore need of this, and such extra pay would mean much to him financially; and that if I would get Inspector Headley and Headley's friends to withdraw Headley's application, and all of us would get in behind Inspector Bean and help him get the appointment, he would retire in a few months, and then Inspector Headley would have an open field for the appointment. And Major Brown assured me that he would then appoint Inspector Headley to the position.

I caused Inspector Headley to step down and out, which he did gracefully, and we got in behind Bean, and did what we could to have him appointed, and he was appointed, as a result of that gentlemen's agreement.

What I did for Inspector Headley was done without his solicitation. The following letters passing between Major Brown and myself show the agreement:

ABILENE, TEX., August 4, 1934.

Maj. ERNEST W. BROWN,
Superintendent Metropolitan Police Department,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MAJOR BROWN: You will remember the gentlemen's agreement we had that the assistant superintendent only wanted to hold the office a short time and would then retire and that you would then give the place to Inspector Albert J. Headley. I am counting on you to carry out this agreement and would appreciate your advising me just how soon this change will be effected.

Very sincerely yours,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
METROPOLITAN POLICE DEPARTMENT,
August 8, 1934.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Abilene, Tex.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: I am in receipt of your letter of the 4th instant in which you refer to our conversation some months ago in connection with the position of assistant superintendent of police, in which it was our understanding that there would be a vacancy in this position very shortly, due to the retirement of one of the assistant superintendents.

In reply, permit me to advise that it is my understanding that one of the assistant superintendents contemplates retiring in the very near future, and although he has not mentioned it to me, through other sources he has made the statement that he would not continue in the service again during cold weather, and in the event this vacancy occurs our agreement will be carried out as discussed by us in your office.

It may be of interest to you to know that Inspector Headley is rendering me a most efficient service and is cooperating fully in bringing about improvements in the department.

I trust you are able to obtain a little rest from your arduous duties during the past session of Congress and your campaign for renomination.

I intended writing you before expressing the congratulations and best wishes of the membership of the police department on your renomination, which we know is equivalent to your election as a Member of Congress.

With personal best wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,

ERNEST W. BROWN,
Major and Superintendent.

ABILENE, TEX., August 15, 1934.

Hon. ERNEST W. BROWN,
Major and Superintendent Metropolitan Police Department,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MAJOR BROWN: Thank you for your letter of the 8th instant. In it you use the following language:

"It was our understanding that there would be a vacancy in this position very shortly due to the retirement of one of the assistant superintendents."

The above does not quite state the understanding. It was distinctly stated by you that the one who was to be appointed to this specific position provided for in that bill only wanted the position for a few months, as he intended to retire, anyway, and only wanted it for the purpose of increasing his retirement pay. And I was assured that he would retire in a few months, and I am counting on you to see that he keeps his agreement and does retire at an early date, because he has now held the position longer than was contemplated at the time we had our gentlemen's agreement.

With kind personal regards, I am,

Your friend,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
METROPOLITAN POLICE DEPARTMENT,
August 25, 1934.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Abilene, Tex.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: I am in receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, and before replying I have endeavored to obtain, if possible, definite information as to the approximate time of retirement of one of our assistant superintendents, and the best information at this time is that he contemplates asking for retirement in the next few months, possibly around January 1.

It was my understanding when we discussed this matter in your office that he contemplated retiring before cold weather.

I have already taken this matter up with Commissioner Hazen and advised him of our agreement in this matter, and as soon as we have the vacancy everything is arranged for the promotion of Inspector Headley to the position; and I want you to know that the agreement between us will be carried out, as I am most anxious to do something for Inspector Headley, especially in view of our many years of association together in the department; and I most certainly appreciate your interest in this, a matter of mutual interest to both of us.

Reciprocating your kind personal regards, I am, as ever,

Your friend,

ERNEST W. BROWN,
Major and Superintendent.

Mr. Speaker, the next day, March 15, 1935, all of the various Washington newspapers again attacked me with vicious articles. I call attention first to the Washington Post, which, in large box-car headlines, printed the following:

BLANTON police plot charged at inquiry.

Followed by a lot of other unfounded malicious allegations to which I will call attention later.

The Washington Herald for that date, March 15, 1935, maliciously and falsely states:

House to probe BLANTON plot—

In large headlines on the front page, as if I had been in a plot and had done something wrong, when it knew I had done neither, and when it knew that the House was not even thinking of probing any action of mine.

The Washington Star for that date, March 15, 1935, in large headlines says:

BLANTON takes fight on police plot to House.

And then it fills several columns with a ridiculous recitation of purported evidence about my endorsing a police officer for promotion.

The Washington Times for that date, I want the Speaker to note, had three separate issues, all with different big box-car headlines in each issue falsely referring to me and maligning me. One of the issues of that date, March 15, 1935, had across the whole top of the front page:

Representative BLANTON faces accuser—

As if I had done something wrong. In another issue it printed on that same day, across the whole top of the front page in big box-car letters this statement:

Crime probers rebuke Representative BLANTON—

As if I had done something wrong. In a third issue of that same day the Washington Times has in large box-car letters across the entire front page:

BLANTON screams plot denial—

With my picture taken between two police officials.

All of my colleagues here know that is untrue.

As soon as I had seen an account of Inspector Bean's statement before this subcommittee—and its two members only who were present—from the accounts given in the evening papers of March 14, 1935, I went immediately to my good friend and colleague, JENNINGS RANDOLPH, of West Virginia, chairman of it, but who had not been present when Bean was heard, and arranged with him for me to appear the next morning and answer Inspector Bean and also for me to bring with me Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, and Inspector Albert J. Headley, and let them tell the facts about it. He readily agreed.

To my great surprise, when I appeared, I found the five reporters for the five Washington newspapers present, to sit in at an executive session; and I found a bevy of newspaper photographers with the cameras, all prepared to take pictures of everybody.

I requested that Inspector Bean should be present so that he could hear all I had to say, but this request was turned down. To my great surprise objection was raised to Major Brown and Inspector Headley, whom I had brought with me, being allowed to sit in the front, where I wanted them to be, so that they could hear all I had to say. They were finally allowed to remain, but when we met back after noon the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE] objected to their staying in the room, and on his motion they were excluded.

It was nothing to me whether they were there or not, but in fairness to them I thought they were entitled to hear what I said that affected both of them.

While I appeared voluntarily, as a Member of Congress entitled to be heard regarding charges one in my absence had unjustly made against me, I was insulted repeatedly by John R. Fitzpatrick, who as counsel for said committee was receiving $225 per month from this House, and he seemed to think that he had a duty upon his shoulders to cross-question me as he would some defendant in a police court, to the glee and satisfaction of the five newspaper reporters and the newspaper photographer who were there present to witness and publish any embarrassment that could be caused me.

The first thing I did was to produce for the inspection of the committee and the five newspaper reporters who were in attendance on the "executive" meeting of this subcommittee the four letters heretofore quoted, two from myself to Major Brown and two from him to me, and to my surprise the papers stated that I had been forced to produce such letters before the committee, when they knew they were publishing a deliberate falsehood.

I want to quote from these papers of March 15, 1935, some excerpts indicating the kind of reception I had when I voluntarily appeared as a Member of Congress, and the following are quoted from the Washington Star:

Fitzpatrick, counsel for the committee, wanted to know why BLANTON should have all this interest in the Metropolitan Police force. BLANTON reached into his pocket, drew out a wallet, and threw a card onto the table.

"Here is why," he said. "On account of the work I've done for the police department and the few accomplishments I have made in their behalf, they made me an honorary member of the Policemen's Association."

SCHULTE wanted to know "why the rest of the Congressmen couldn't get honorary membership tickets to the Policemen's Association."

Fitzpatrick asked of BLANTON: "Why were you so interested in having Bean retired?"

In answer, BLANTON went over his previous testimony about friends telling him Bean could not live another winter in Washington, and explained he wanted Bean retired so Bean could get more money.

The name of Bean never figured in the correspondence between the major and BLANTON.

In asking BLANTON to explain that, a flare-up was started in the committee.

"Why," asked Fitzpatrick, "was Major Brown telling you all this?"

"Because we had a gentlemen's agreement," responded BLANTON.

"Why did you have a gentlemen's agreement?" Fitzpatrick asked.

"What are you doing here, trying to find out crime conditions in the District or stir up trouble in Congress?" BLANTON asked, looking at Fitzpatrick. "I am a Member of Congress," BLANTON shouted, and intimated that if necessary he would take this case to the floor of the House.

Fitzpatrick sallied: "You may be a Member of Congress, but you're just another witness here."

SCHULTE, who has taken a leading part in the crime investigation, resented BLANTON'S attitude and told him that he was "just another witness" even though he is a Member of Congress.

BLANTON failed to complete his statement to the committee because of a roll call in the House, which caused an abrupt adjournment of the hearing until this afternoon.

BLANTON GRILLED

SCHULTE also declared just before the committee began its afternoon session that "we are going to take this baby apart." He had reference to BLANTON, who returned to the witness stand to complete his statement. For 3 hours BLANTON was shelled with questions about his interest in the Bean-Headley case by members of the committee and John R. Fitzpatrick, committee counsel.

RANDOLPH ASKS ORDER

SCHULTE'S remarks that BLANTON was "just another witness" caused a flare-up and threw the hearing into disorder. The disturbance became so hot and furious that Chairman JENNINGS RANDOLPH arose from his seat and demanded that the hearing be conducted in a dignified manner.

"I'll treat them right if they treat me right," BLANTON shouted, at the same time glaring at SCHULTE and Fitzpatrick.

In the midst of the excitement Fitzpatrick looked at BLANTON and said:

"What are you doing here; trying to show your authority?"

"Oh, hell, no," Blanton replied.

From the News I quote the following:

JUST ANOTHER WITNESS

With visible anger, Representative SCHULTE addressed BLANTON: "I object to the attitude you have taken. You may be a Member of Congress, but remember, you're just another witness to this committee."

But BLANTON was not to be deterred.

"I insist upon my privilege as a Member of Congress to make my statement here without interference," he shrieked. "If I can't do it here I'll do it on the floor of the House."

From the Washington Times I quote the following:

Following the morning session, Mr. SCHULTE said: "That is just the beginning. We will take that baby apart" (the reference being made about BLANTON).

In the Washington News of that date, which is the fifth Washington paper to attack me, on March 15, 1935, there is at the top in large headlines the malicious statement, "BLANTON rages at crime quiz", and a lot of other silly, ridiculous allegations I shall call attention to later.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, not to interrupt the gentleman, but in an attempt to save time, may I say I think the gentleman has stated a question of personal privilige, by showing that he had his picture taken with some cops.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, each one of these attacks constitutes privilege, but I am entitled to state all of my grounds of privilege from these continuous, untrue, unfounded, malicious attacks for 3 solid weeks by the 5 Washington papers acting concertedly, and I want to show it in full. This is a matter that affects me, and it affects the integrity of the House, its proceedings, and its membership by an unwarranted interference by these avaricious newspapers that are always trying to take something out of the people's Treasury.

The Washington Post for the next day, March 16, 1935, in large headlines across the front page, stated, "BLANTON admits deal", and other matters I shall call attention to.

In the Washington Times of that date in one issue it is stated in large headlines, "Representative BLANTON fails to brush aside police accusation", as if I had been accused of doing something wrong.

In another issue of that date, March 16, the Washington Times has a large, vicious cartoon intended to be of myself, which is not stated by name, but which by its innuendoes and its editorial shows that it was trying to refer to me as "a politician who fixes things" here in the District against the people's interest, when it knew that it was a damnable libel.

In the Washington Herald for March 17, again in large headlines, there is a reference to me in a derogatory manner which I shall not take time to read.

The Washington Post for Sunday, March 17, has an infamous editorial attacking my standing and integrity here in the House as a Member and impugning my motives, when it knew it was maliciously libeling me.

The Washington Times for March 18 has another big headline with pictures and an alleged statement made in the presence of police officers, with the following statement, "Blanton deal under scrutiny", as if I had done something wrong which needed scrutinizing by police officials or those interested in enforcing the law.

The News of Monday, March 18, has another vicious editorial referring to me in a derogatory manner, and which I shall not take time to read.

The Washington Herald, on its editorial page for March 19, has another vicious editorial, occupying practically a full double column, attacking me in a derogatory manner. The Washington News of March 20 has a vicious cartoon and a statement in it attacking me in a derogatory manner.

The Washington Herald for March 20, 1935, in large headlines has this statement: "Hazen will probe Blanton deal", and the article makes derogatory remarks about my standing as a Representative in this House.

The Washington Herald for March 20 has a statement about a meeting of a so-called "citizens' association to oust me", and it says that—

At Tuesday night's meeting Mr. Arthur Clarendon Smith denounced Representative BLANTON.

The Washington Herald for that same day, under headlines printed in large type, states:

Mass meeting to ask Blanton ouster at once. Protest planned for March 28 on Capitol steps by federation of men's group.

And it states that I was excoriated at such meeting. It has this further language:

The federation intends to immediately appeal to Congress, asking the removal of Representative BLANTON from the subcommittee. Headquarters for the arrangement committee for the mass meeting has been established at the Smith Transfer Co., 1313 U Street NW. Organizations and citizens desiring to participate have been asked to communicate with the committee. Members of the committee include Mr. Arthur Clarendon Smith and Dr. F. Thomas Evans—

About whom I will tell you some very pertinent facts directly. I will also tell you some pertinent facts about this Mr. Arthur Clarendon Smith.

The Washington Post for March 20, on the front page, taking up practically the entire page, has in large headlines:

DRIVE TO OUST BLANTON BEGUN BY D. C. GROUP—DEMONSTRATION IS PLANNED TO FORCE HIM OFF THE D. C. COMMITTEE

The executive committee of the Federation of Business Men's Association last night voted to stage a city-wide demonstration to persuade Congress to remove Representative THOMAS L. BLANTON, of Texas, from the House District Appropriations Committee. The protests of Washington residents, under the plan of the Federation, of which Arthur Clarendon Smith is president, will be presented to Speaker JOSEPH W. BYRNS, of Tennesee, on the east steps of the Capitol. The presentation would be made at night so that business duties would not keep away those who wished to participate.

All of this hurrah was carefully planned and worked up by these Washington newspapers.

Then it goes on to give these silly and ridiculous plans for a public demonstration of several thousand people here at the Capitol to ask for my removal from one of the House committees to which I was placed by the House itself, and concerning which position, Mr. Speaker, only the House of Representatives has anything whatever to do under the law and the Constitution of the United States.

Then, on March 20, the Washington Post has a long, almost double-column editorial attacking me in a derogatory manner, and winding up with this language:

A more vigorous commissioner of public safety would have taken precautions to protect the police department from intolerable political intrusion. If the present inquiry merely exposed the danger of carpetbag politics in the District, it will be a blessing to the community.

Note the innuendo that I have been guilty of carpetbag efforts in this District to place people in positions.

Mr. Speaker, I have been a Member of this House for 18 years and I have never been given but one position by the Commissioners, filled first a few months ago by Mr. Howsley, and now filled by Mr. Brooks—just one in 18 years—notwithstanding the fact that for 12 years I was a member of the District Legislative Committee, the ranking Democrat on it, and for several years I have been a member of the District Appropriations Subcommittee, and yet I have been given only one position by the District Commissioners. One position only has been allowed me, when there are 1,300 police positions, 900 firemen's positions, and hundreds of other positions, and I have had one position in 18 years granted me by the Commissioners. Is not that some carpetbagging?

Mr. Speaker, the Washington Times for March 20, 1935, has another article about the move to oust BLANTON in large headlines, and again states that Arthur Clarendon Smith assailed me.

Then the Evening Star, Mr. Speaker, for Wednesday, March 20, 1935, had in big headlines, "Fight on BLANTON planned by citizens", and I want to read this article, because it shows privilege and it shows an interference on the part of these people and these newspapers with the integrity of this House and its organization and its procedure:

Fight on BLANTON planned by citizens. Plans for a proposed demonstration March 28 to request the House to remove Representative BLANTON, Democrat, of Texas, from his assignment on the House Appropriations Committee, were discussed at a meeting last night of the executive committee of the Federation of Business Men's Associations. A march on the Capitol, where petitions would be presented to Speaker BYRNS, demanding BLANTON's removal from the committee, were proposed. Every civic organization in Washington, it is stated, is to be invited to participate. Arthur Clarendon Smith, president of the federation, who initiated the move for the demonstration, criticized BLANTON, commended the Crime Committee for its courage, and pointed out that there could be no effective enforcement of the law until the police department is divorced from politics. Smith also called a special meeting of the federation in the Lafayette Hotel at 6:30 o'clock tonight to further plan for the proposed demonstration.

The Washington Times for Friday, March 29, in large headlines, states:

Business men flay BLANTON. Members of the Northeast Business Men's Association last night voted to demand removal of Representative BLANTON, of Texas, from the House Subcommittee on District Appropriations. Heated debate marked the meeting, and the matter was not decided until Dr. James J. Greeves, president, voted in favor of the measure to break a 20–20 tie. During the bitter speeches, James Farmer, association secretary, shouted, "Representative BLANTON has been the greatest detriment to Washington's progress this city has seen in 35 years—possibly longer."

And listen, Mr. Speaker. He said at this meeting:

We want him out, and we are not going to stop until we get him out.

In other words, they are not going to stop until they interfere with the orderly procedure and the organization of this House. They are going to dictate to this House of Representatives what it shall do with regard to its organization and with regard to its committee personnel. Is not that silly and ridiculous?

I call attention, Mr. Speaker, to the Washington Post for March 21, 1935, which has a large, double-column editorial against me, attacking me in a derogatory manner, and making the threat that if I did not resign from this position, they would take steps to place me in a further derogatory attitude, and would take steps to put me out of the House Appropriations Subcommittee; and they wind up by questioning my motives, and I want you colleagues to know how they attack the procedure of this House and the integrity of the House in making this statement.

His motives in opposing District measures are now open to a suspicion, as unfortunate as it is understandable. His prestige with regard to legislation for the District is irrevocably shattered. Under these distressing circumstances, Mr. BLANTON can hardly be expected to expose himself to unnecessary criticism by remaining a member of the Appropriations Subcommittee now that his constructive influence there is at an end.

I call attention to another one, and I have about four or five stacks of these attacks that have occurred continuously for almost 3 solid weeks in the five newspapers of Washington; but, of course, I am not going to inflict them on the House or take its time in reading but one more of them.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman send the editorial to the desk?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, Mr. Speaker; but I have one worse than this, where they falsely and maliciously charge me with disgraceful conduct.

As was intimated by my good friend from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], each and all of these are privileged, but I want this RECORD to show how far they went in this plot, but I will read only one more, which especially is privileged.

This is a double column editorial in the Washington Post of March 16. I will read an excerpt from it:

For years citizens of the District have suspected Representative BLANTON of bulldozing local officials. As a member of the District Appropriation Subcommittee in the House, he has used his influence to thwart numerous measures of special importance to Washington. On several occasions he has been accused of trying to force the appointment of favored constituents to District positions. Now he is exposed as the sponsor of this disgraceful "gentlemen's agreement" designed to displace a trusted assistant superintendent of police in order to make room for an officer who has a claim upon his friendship.

This sort of procedure is intolerable, regardless of who the offender may be.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take further time of the House. I submit, Mr. Speaker, I have a privilege, and I ask to be recognized so that I can tell these Washington newspapers, and those who with them are responsible for this outrage, something about what I think of them.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we ought to have a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold that until the Chair has made a ruling?

Mr. TABER. I will.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas rises to a question of personal privilege, and has presented a great number of publications of newspapers in the city of Washington, which will appear in extenso in the RECORD of today's proceedings.

It is unnecessary for the Chair to rule upon each of these publications, and the Chair will not undertake to discuss all of them. Many of them affect the gentleman from Texas in his representative capacity. Rule IX reads as follows:

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of Members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, except motions to adjourn.

Among these publications presented by the gentleman from Texas there is one which he has read from an editorial published in the Washington Post of March 16. The Chair calls attention to a portion of this editorial. It reads as follows:

For years citizens of the District have suspected Representative BLANTON of bulldozing local officials. As a member of the District Appropriations Subcommittee in the House he has used his influence to thwart numerous measures of special importance to Washington. On several occasions he has been accused of trying to force the appointment of favored constituents to District positions. Now he is exposed as the sponsor of this disgraceful "gentlemen's agreement" designed to displace a trusted assistant superintendent of police in order to make room for an officer who has a claim upon his friendship.

This sort of procedure is intolerable, regardless of who the offender may be.

As the Chair stated, he does not think it necessary to rule upon all the publications which have been presented, but the publication which the Chair had just read seems to the Chair clearly entitles the gentleman to speak on a question of personal privilege. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas for 1 hour.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RANKIN). Three hundred and forty-four Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I was present and did not hear my name called. I desire to have my name called and to answer "present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request of the gentleman comes too late, but the RECORD will show that he is here. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am not unmindful of the fact that the House of Representatives has important business to transact, and I wish that it had not been necessary for me to take the floor at this time. I shall try not to use all of the time allotted to me under the rule.

First, I call attention to the Constitution of the United States with respect to the duty that the Congress owes and the authority that it exercises over the District of Columbia. Clause 17 of section 8 of article I of the Constitution of the United States provides that the Congress shall have power—

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States.

I quote now from Watson on the Constitution, page 698:

This clause confers upon Congress absolute control and authority over the District of Columbia. It probably grew out of an unpleasant episode in the history of the Continental Congress while it was sitting in Philadelphia.

Gentlemen will remember that episode that harassed the Members in the performance of their constitutional privileges and duties.

Toward the close of the war of the Revolution Congress was surrounded and greatly mistreated by a body of mutineers of the Continental Army. This led to the removal of the seat of government from Philadelphia to Princeton, N. J., and later, for the sake of greater convenience, to Annapolis.

In construing the above clause of the Constitution in the cases I shall thereunder cite, the Supreme Court of the United States held:

By this clause Congress is given exclusive jurisdiction over the District of Columbia for every purpose of Government, national or local, in all cases whatsoever, including taxation. The terms of the clause are not limited by the principle that representation is necessary to taxation (Loughborough v. Blake, 5 Wheat. 321; Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet. 619; Shoemaker v. U. S., 147 U. S. 300; Parsons v. District of Columbia, 170 U. S. 52; Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 5; Gibbons v. District of Columbia, 116 U. S. 404).

In the First Congress of the United States, in an act approved July 16, 1790, entitled "An act for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of the Government of the United States" provided: That a district of territory, not exceeding 10 miles square, to be located as heretofore directed on the River Potomac, at some place between the mouths of the Eastern Branch and Connogochegue, be, and the same is hereby accepted for the permanent seat of government of the United States."

The above act provided for the erection of suitable buildings for the accommodation of Congress, and of the President, and for the public offices of the Government by the first Monday in December 1800, until which time the temporary seat of government should remain in Philadelphia, Pa., but that on the first Monday in December 1800 the seat of government and all offices of the United States should be transferred and removed to said district and thereafter cease to be exercised elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, so that I may have time possibly to answer questions, if my colleagues should ask them, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and insert in my remarks, by way of revision, certain excerpts to which I shall refer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that in revising and extending his remarks he may insert certain excerpts to which he may refer. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall read now the explanation by President William Howard Taft:

EXPLANATION BY PRESIDENT WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT

On May 8, 1909, leading citizens of Washington gave a banquet to President Taft, who in later years was Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. In explaining the necessity under the Constitution for preventing the people of Washington from having self-government, President Taft, in addressing said banquet, said:

This was taken out of the application of the principle of self-government in the very Constitution that was intended to put that in force in every other part of the country, and it was done because it was intended to have the representatives of all the people of the country control this one city, and to prevent its being controlled by the parochial spirit that would necessarily govern men who did not look beyond the city to the grandeur of the Nation and this as the representative of that Nation.

In an article prepared by George W. Hodgkin, which was published as Senate Document No. 653, second session, Sixty-first Congress, on June 25, 1910, he quoted the above statement from President Taft and admitted the following:

Congress exercises over the District of Columbia, in addition to its national powers, all the powers of a State, including the power to control local government. Local officials are either directly or indirectly appointed by and are responsible to the National Government.

Madison argued: "The indisputable necessity of complete authority at the seat of government carries its own evidence with it. Without it, not only the public authority might be insulted and its proceedings interrupted with impunity but a dependence of the members of the General Government on the State comprehending the seat of government, for protection in the exercise of their duty, might bring on the national councils an imputation of awe or influence equally dishonorable to the Government and dissatisfactory to the members of the confederacy."

There is no room for doubt that the Constitution, without amendment, does not permit the participation of the District in national affairs.

Several attempts have been made so to amend the Constitution as to give the inhabitants elective representation in Congress and participation in Presidential elections.

ORIGINAL CESSION OF DISTRICT BY MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA

The State of Maryland, by an act approved December 23, 1788, directed that:

The Representatives of this State in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, appointed to assemble at New York, on the first Wednesday of March next, be, and they are hereby, authorized and required on behalf of this State to cede to the Congress of the United States any district in this State, not exceeding 10 miles square, which the Congress may fix upon and accept for the seat of Government of the United States.

The State of Virginia, by an act approved December 3, 1789, provided:

That a tract of country not exceeding 10 miles square, or any lesser quantity, to be located within the limits of this State, and in any part thereof as Congress may by law direct, shall be, and the same is, forever ceded and relinquished to the Congress and Government of the United States, in full and absolute right and exclusive jurisdiction, as well of the soil as of persons residing or to reside thereon, pursuant to the tenor and effect of the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution of the Government of the United States.

It should be remembered that Mr. Hodgkins was discussing the matter from the standpoint of the citizens of the District of Columbia and he made the following pertinent admission:

Congress exercises the District of Columbia in addition to its national powers——

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the House is not in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I shall come to matters soon to which the House will be glad to listen, but I want to get these things I am quoting from in the RECORD, particularly because this morning the press reports that, concerning the District appropriation bill, the Senate of the United States, through its subcommittee, has rewritten the entire House bill and added the things that the District wanted, and has ignored the President's Budget and the House of Representatives concerning those appropriations.

In 1846 Congress ceded back to Virginia the city and county of Alexandria.

In 1871, after continual hammering of Congress by the papers of Washington, it passed an act giving the District a government of its own, and provided that the tax rate in Washington should be $3 on the $100, and provided for the District to elect and send a delegate to Congress.

It took only 3 years for Congress to recognize the unwisdom and folly of such an affront to the Constitution, and in 1874 Congress repealed that foolish act, and abolished the position of delegate.

PHILADELPHIA HOUSED BOTH HOUSES OF CONGRESS FREE

It is interesting to remember that during the 10 years the seat of our Government was located in Philadelphia the commissioners of the city and county of Philadelphia furnished to our Government without any charge whatever the building at Sixth and Chestnut Streets for the use of both Houses of Congress.

The removal to Washington of the seat of our Government from Philadelphia was completed by June 15, 1800. A building was rented in Washington near the corner of Ninth and E Streets NW., about where the south wing of the present old Post Office Department Building is situated, at a rental of only $600 per year, and the owner permitted the Government to spend half of that sum for renovations and improvements, and this building housed the Post Office Department of the United States and the local post office for Washington and quarters for the family of Hon. Abraham Bradley, Jr., the Assistant Postmaster General, all provided for an annual rental of only $600. Compare this rental in the District of Columbia when our Government first created Washington with the present average rental of about $2,000 per year that the arrogant gorged plutocrats of modern Washington are now charging the 96 Senators and 435 Congressmen for their respective apartments.

I quote the following from today's Washington Herald:

UNITED STATES LUMP SUM UP $2,600,000 IN SENATE BILL—DISTRICT SUBCOMMITTEE ALTERS MEASURE; 141 MORE POLICE AND OTHER RAISES GRANTED

With an increase of $2,600,000 in the Federal lump-sum contribution to the District, provision for 141 more policemen and other substantial increases, the District appropriation bill for the 1936 fiscal year is expected to be given the full Senate Appropriations Committee today for approval.

The Appropriations Subcommittee, under the chairmanship of Senator THOMAS (D), of Oklahoma, practically rewrote the House bill, paying little or no attention to recommendations of the Budget Bureau or the House.

Mr. Speaker, in trying to resist such assaults on the President's Budget, and upon his financial recommendtions, I have been acting for you gentlemen. What I have done with respect to District appropriations in connection with my able colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], who is my chairman and whom I follow, I have been doing for you, in holding down the clamorous demands of a money-spending District. [Applause.] When they attack me, whom you have placed in this position, and say they are going to demand that I be taken off the committee, when they demand that you rescind your action in placing me there, it is not me, but it is your authority they are questioning. Their attack is not upon me as a Representative, but it is upon your agent, and therefore upon you, the House of Representatives, in its integrity, in its capacity, in its organization, and in its personnel.

I left my home last November and came to Washington to spend the month of December in helping my colleague from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] hold hearings on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. I did not even get to attend a Christmas family reunion in Texas.

After we had spent most of December holding extensive hearings, on December 23, 1934, I wrote a letter to many of the leading citizens in Washington, and sent a copy to each of my colleagues, giving them some facts disclosed by that hearing, and if you will compare same with the printed hearings, you will see every assertion proven by said hearings, and I quote the following from my said letter:

This city has begun its annual campaign to force a large Federal contribution to its civic expenses. Living here, self-interest, without the facts, may give you a perverted view. Our District hearings will show that the District Commissioners this week admit the following: That most of the paved streets, bridges, schools, playgrounds, parks, water system, sewer system, hospitals, courts, jails, asylums for defectives, and other projects were acquired and constructed when the United States paid half of their cost; that during the last 20 years the United States has spent over $200,000,000 in Washington on its permanent buildings—a great city asset—attracting large crowds here daily, visitors spending $50,000,000 in Washington in 1934; that $13,000,000 has been spent here on relief in 1934, there being 1 of every 7 persons and 1 of every 4 negroes on relief, many refusing jobs, families receiving from $14 to $90 per month; that the tax rate is still $1.50 per $100 on real and personal property, and one-half of 1 percent on intangibles, with hundreds of millions in locked boxes never taxed; all libraries and $1,000 worth of furniture is exempt from taxes to each family; to aid citizens the assessed values have been lowered $50,000,000 this year and $80,000,000 last year; gasoline tax is 2 cents; auto license tags cost $1 for all cars, driver's permits $1; no income tax; no inheritance tax, no monthly sewer charge; all trees and their care free; trash, ashes, and garbage removed free; cost of water $7 per year per family; all school books, supplies, and clinics free; Commissioners testified that people here are least taxed and have more valuable privileges than in any other city in the United States. I cite you the above to offset city popaganda.

The officials and employees of the District of Columbia are the best paid of any in the whole world. Just to show you the kind of salaries they now receive, and what tremendous raises they have gotten since 1923, I quote the following furnished by the District Auditor to our Appropriations Committee:

[1] Created since 1923. [2] Per diem.

The Superintendent of Schools in Washington receives $10,000. The teachers, from the high schools to the lowest grades, receive better salaries than are paid elsewhere in the United States. And during all of the years of depression they have not had to wait an hour for their money, but have always received it in cash on the day it was due. The police and firemen all are well paid.

The press recently reports that there are approximately 100,000 Government employees in Washington, and that the Government's pay roll here is $200,000,000, which is a bonanza for Washington.

My colleagues will remember that a few years ago I took the floor and called attention to the fact that Hearst's vicious Herald had hired a newspaper writer named Edward T. Folliard—I designated him as "Funny" Folliard—to write an attack upon me every day. Did you know that every day for 66 days in a Washington newspaper there was an attack on me, numbered consecutively from 1 to 66, because I was doing my duty in holding down these expenses?

They tried to take out of your Treasury and build up here at Great Falls—what they said would cost $75,000,000—an electric plant. I had reports from expert engineers to show that eventually it would cost at least $125,000,000, and the most that the people of Washington could expect in benefits would be about 15 cents a year per family. I am the one who led the fight against that for 3 years, until it was killed and stopped. The Washington papers did not like it.

The RECORD for March 3, 1933, pages 5611 to 5618, inclusive, will show that after holding the District appropriation bill for weeks, the Senate placed 174 amendments on it aggregating millions of dollars, and that Senator Bingham, of Connecticut, arrogantly demanded that unless this House agreed to make a Federal contribution of $9,500,000 out of the people's Treasury to help pay the taxes of the people of Washington there would be no appropriation bill at all. He thereby, under threats, forced a conference agreement.

You will remember that I led the fight on this floor to kill that conference report, and on that last night, in the dying hours of the Seventy-second Congress, this House killed that conference report and adjourned sine die without any appropriation bill at all.

Mr. Bingham never came back to the Senate from Connecticut. The people of Connecticut found out that he was thinking more of the people of Washington than he was of the people of Connecticut. He did not come back any more. He ceased to be a Senator. When the people of the United States find out that any Member of Congress, House or Senate, is so unmindful of their interests that after they pay their taxes and are burdened down more than they can stand up under, they then will be called upon to pay most of the taxes of the people of Washington, you will hear of some more distinguished men being forgotten at the polls in some of the States.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. I appreciate the gentleman's wanting to help me, but I must get this off of my system. [Laughter and applause.]

The funny part of it was we offered them that night by way of compromise—and conferences are always compromises—we offered them a $6,500,000 Federal contribution. No. They demanded $9,500,000. When the next Congress met, the President's Budget had gone carefully into the matter. The first Budget of Franklin D. Roosevelt had gone into the matter carefully. Do you know what kind of a Budget report President Roosevelt sent to Congress? He recommended that that Federal contribution should be only $5,700,000; not even the $6,500,000 that was offered them, and not the $9,500,000 they demanded, but $5,700,000; and that has been the Federal contribution ever since.

While I do not think the people of the United States ought to pay one dollar of the taxes of the people of Washington [applause], and if I had my way about it they would not pay one dollar, yet when the Budget says it shall be $5,700,000, I have not felt like going up against the President's Budget or his recommendations, and I have gone along.

You will remember the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. McFadden, who was formerly Chairman of the great Committee on Banking and Currency in this House, was elected to this Congress the last time by 74,000 votes over so distinguished a personage as the wife of Governor Pinchot. Mr. McFadden rose to his seat on the floor of this House on May 23, 1933, and filed impeachment charges against Eugene Meyer and others, and in those charges he alleged that they had defrauded the Government and the people of the United States out of many millions of dollars.

You will remember that in the magazine Fortune a few years ago it showed that Eugene Meyer, when he was 21 years of age, did not own a dollar; never had a dollar to his name.

During the years from 1917 up until the time the Hoover administration went out of office, look back at all the Government positions he held, even up to being in charge of the great Federal Reserve System. Holding those Government jobs from 1917 on, he is now worth his millions.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, I cannot just now.

Now he is worth his millions; and, of course, with the nearly $2,000,000 that he schemed and squirmed out of the McLean heirs when he took over that Washington Post by a dummy arrangement, though once a young fellow owning nothing, he is able now to be a member of the great, influential Metropolitan Club, a member of the great Cosmos Club, a member of the great National Press Club, a member of the Washington Golf and Country Club of Washington; and he is also able, with all the money that he has gotten since he has been holding these Government offices and since he got this $2,000,000 property from the McLean heirs, to belong to such influential clubs as the Players' Club, the great Lotus Club, the Grolier Club of New York City——

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not now; I will yield directly; I will never refuse to yield to my good friend from California; I will yield after a while, when I get through. Please do not interrupt now.

You remember he kept attacking me in his Washington Post, attack after attack, because I was doing my duty here as a sworn representative of the people until he forced me to take this floor on June 15, 1933. Look at my remarks. I notified him then that if he did not stop maligning me I was going to let the country know something about his record. Now I am forced to do it.

Were the McLean minor children swindled out of their birthright? Let us see. About the time Eugene Meyer cast his covetous eyes on the Washington Post following his amassing a fortune by manipulating the Government it then belonged to the McLean heirs, the McLean family having established it and cherished it as a family heritage for many, many years. Edward McLean was then sick in a sanatorium, unable to attend to business. A tentative sale of the property had been arranged for $3,000,000 and the proposed purchaser had posted a forfeit, but the sale was not consummated because it was not arranged for Mr. Eugene Meyer; it was for somebody else. Then arrangements were entered into through Julius Peyser to sell the Post, and a tentative agreement of sale for $2,800,000 was arranged to a distinguished newspaperman of this country than whom there is no better journalist in the world; and he was willing to make the deal, but those in authority refused to consummate it.

Through influential friends Eugene Meyer learned that the Washington Post owed the International Paper Co. about $100,000. Then it dawned upon him how he could take it over. On March 24, 1933, his friend, Harry Covington, filed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a bill in equity, no. 55485, styled "International Paper Co. versus Washington Post", alleging that on March 21, 1933, the latter owed the former $103,263.96, that the Post's assets were in excess of $800,000, and that its liabilities approximated $625,000.

Paragraph 7 of that bill in equity admitted that the Post was solvent and that its assets exceeded its liabilities and requested that a receiver be appointed. The Supreme Court of the United States in both the Jones case (261 U. S. 491) and the Lyon Bonding Co. case (262 U. S. 491) held that a simple contract creditor could not have a receiver appointed for a debtor where solvency existed; yet on the identical day, showing collusion, on the identical day that the suit was filed, Mr. Corcoran Thom, the executor of the McLean estate, through his attorney, Mr. Flannery, on March 24, 1933, immediately filed an answer admitting the bill and consenting to the appointment of the receiver—right in the face of the decision of the United States Supreme Court to the contrary.

Promptly the next day, Benjamin Minor was appointed receiver, on March 25, 1933. Even though sick and incapacitated, Edward McLean, through an attorney, tried to intervene on April 14, 1933, but objection to his intervention was filed on April 19, 1933, by Harry Covington, and on May 9, 1933, he was denied the right to intervene. He was denied the right to come in there and protect the interests of his little minor children who owned the assets of the estate, and concerning that newspaper which once tentatively had been agreed to be sold for $3,000,000!

On May 17, 1933, Harry Covington filed a supplemental bill asking that the receiver be authorized to sell the Washington Post. On that identical day, showing collusion, May 17, 1933, Corcoran Thom, through his attorney, Flannery, filed his consent to such sale. On that identical day, May 17, 1933, the order of sale was issued empowering the receiver, Benjamin Minor, to sell the Washington Post.

That was pretty fast action, was it not? Thereafter, on account of Edward McLean, being sick in a sanatorium and incapacitated for business, Mrs. Edward McLean made arrangements to protect the interests of her children in an attempt to buy in the Washington Post and thus saving the family heritage.

She knew the debts against it totaled only $625,000 and that the bill in equity alleged it to be worth over $800,000. She knew it really was worth about $3,000,000, but she never dreamed that any outsider would bid more than the $800,000, so she arranged for enough money to enable her to bid up as high as $800,000. She knew nothing of Eugene Meyer's scheme; she knew nothing of his plots; she did not know about his conspiracy; she did not know that he was going to have a dummy at said sale representing him; she did not know that Eugene Meyer was all prepared to defraud her and her minor children; but Eugene Meyer had George Hamilton at said sale as his secret dummy, and she realized that it was being run up on her, so finally she was forced to bid her entire $800,000, but she had no more money.

Then Eugene Meyer's dummy, George Hamilton, bid $825,000, and on June 5, 1933, the sale of the Washington Post was approved to George Hamilton at $825,000. On June 12, 1933, said sale was ratified by order of the court, and immediately on that identical day George Hamilton, Eugene Meyer's secret dummy at said sale, assigned and transferred the Washington Post to the Eugene Meyer Publishing Co., and Eugene Meyer immediately incorporated it for $1,250,000.

Thus did Eugene Meyer swindle the little McLean minor children out of about $2,175,000 besides taking their family heritage away from them.

On August 2, 1933, the court allowed Benjamin Minor a fee of $40,000 in payment of his services as receiver, which service consisted mostly in his having signed his name a few times. On the same day, August 2, 1933, the court allowed a fee of $12,000 jointly to the two attorneys, Mr. Covington and Mr. Flannery, and yet with that kind of indelible stain upon his dirty hands Eugene Meyer for 3 weeks has filled his purloined newspaper with malicious, lying, contemptible articles libeling me in every one of them, simply because I wanted to have a faithful, dependable officer who has been a policeman in Washington for 39 years made assistant superintendent of police so that we may have a chance to stop crime in the District of Columbia.

As I told you awhile ago, I was for 12 years the ranking Democrat on the District legislative committee. God knows how much work I did during those 12 years. Did you know that I did not go home lots of summers? I worked the entire 12 months. I made it a point to know just as much about every single part of the District's business in Washington as anybody else knew, and I did. I checked up every single department of the District government. I conducted many investigations. For several years I have been under the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] on this committee that makes appropriations for the District. God knows how hard both the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and myself and our other colleagues on that committee have worked. Not a newspaper has said a word about all of the hard work that I ever did for Washington and the District of Columbia. I helped it in its progress. I helped it construct its various enterprises, its hospitals, schools, and playgrounds. I helped to procure its now more than 1,200 parks in this city, big and little. I helped it all the way down the line in a constructive program to build for the people, not of Washington, but for the people of the United States, under the Constitution, the most beautiful city in the world, and it is the most beautiful city in the world. [Applause.]

When I first came here the policemen got only $1,400 a year. They could not maintain their families on that salary, they could not educate their children, they could not do the things for their families that other families had done for them. They could not pay their doctor bills, their dental bills, and all of the charges that come on a family. I was one of those who for weeks and months, with my good friend Clyde Kelly, of Pennsylvania, and others, worked to get a bill through which would pay them a reasonable living wage. We finally got the bill passed that provided them not a basic salary of $1,400 but a basic salary of $1,800 a year, with an additional $100 a year for 3 years' service, which gives them now a maximum of $2,100 a year. I helped do the same thing for the firemen of the District. We have 1,300 policemen and 900 firemen here.

They talk about me being a carpetbag politician. They play me up to the Washington people in all of these damnable cartoons as a carpetbag politician who endeavors to put friends in the employment of the District of Columbia. Not a man have I ever asked to be appointed from Texas on the police force with its 1,300 men. Not a man have I ever asked to be appointed on the fire department force with their 900 members. In all my 18 years' experience here I have had just one single position allotted to me by the District Commissioners for someone from my district. One position! Mr. Howsley filled it for a few months, but he saw such a rotten situation here in Washington, that he became disgusted and homesick and he did not want to stay here any longer. He resigned and went home. Then the Commissioners let me put Mr. Brooks in his place. That is the only position that has been given me, and these damnable Washington newspapers have been crucifying me ever since because the District Commissioners saw fit to allot me one measly little position.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], in all fairness and justice, took this floor the other day to keep them straight, and you know I have loved him ever since I have been serving under him. He is God's nobleman. There is nothing I would not do for him. He took the floor the other day, when they were talking about me having put this position of assistant superintendent in the bill in order to get one of my friends appointed, and stated that I had nothing to do with that matter, that I was against it. It was a legislative committee that had passed a law that authorized that position, and the Senate of the United States put the money in the bill for it. Mr. CANNON told you it was over my objection that they did that. However, it is one of those compromises that is forced on the conferees of the House. The position was included in the bill.

What would you have done if you had been in my place, representing the House of Representatives in a representative capacity? What would you have done? I knew that in this District among the 1,300 policemen there were some of the finest men in the world—honorable, upright, Christian gentlemen; but among those 1,300 there are some of the biggest crooks in the world, who sell out the people's interest.

I wanted to see a man placed in charge of them on whom we could depend to enforce the law. Whom did I recommend? A man who had served as an old Washington policeman and who honorably served the police department for 39 years—Albert J. Headley, inspector. When ERNEST GIBSON, from Vermont, who is now a United States Senator, and myself were on a committee investigating conditions in Washington, he was the one man who went down the line for us to help us clean up the rotten conditions existing in Washington. He was the man whom GIBSON and I learned to depend on. We found out that he was truthful, that he was honest. He was a perfect gentleman. He was reliable. He was dependable all the way down the line, and with all that he was a splendid neighbor to those living around him, and he is a faithful, loyal friend. Without even saying a word to him, some of his friends came to me when they learned of the situation. My office was filled with them one evening. It has been mentioned here that religion crept into the case. In that bunch of business men who came to my office were Knights of Columbus and Knights Templar Masons, both working for Headley. There was no religious question entered into the matter.

It was the man they wanted, because they wanted the law enforced, and it was the office seeking the man, and I got Major Brown up there at the office and asked him about appointing him. I had him put in an application. He never asked me to do it for him. I and others were doing it for him and for the people of the District, and we found out that he was in line, but another man was in line also, Inspector Bean. Both of them were in line for the position, both of them had served 39 years and we found out that Inspector Bean just wanted the position for a few months. He was fixing to retire. He was in bad health and these friends represented to me that he did not intend to spend another winter in Washington. He was going to Florida, and they said, "If you and Headley's friends will withdraw his application and get in behind Bean, he will retire in a few months, and then Mr. Headley will be the only man in line for the position, because he will be the man who has the seniority." I asked Brown what he would do about it and Brown said, "Why, certainly", if we would take Headley out of the way that Bean's friends had assured him he would retire in a few months and he said, "I will appoint your friend, Albert J. Headley, who is also my friend, to the position", and we had a gentlemen's agreement with him about it.

Of course, I cannot expect anybody connected with the Washington papers, especially the Herald and Post, to understand a gentleman's agreement. It would be impossible. It is beyond their comprehension. [Laughter.]

We took Headley out of the way and we helped to get Bean appointed, and he would have retired—because I believe he is honest—if these infernal Washington newspapers had let him alone.

Then a good friend of mine met me in Washington, a good business man, who told me that one of the representatives of a Washington paper had gone to him a short time before Congress met and said:

BLANTON has just got out a statement that he sent to the people the last of December calling attention to all the things that Washington enjoys, and the Members are not going to give us anything more than the Budget in the District bill. BLANTON is in our way. We can get anything we want put in the bill in the Senate, but we cannot get it by BLANTON on the House Appropriations Committee, because he works with Mr. CANNON, and Mr. CANNON knows these conditions, but BLANTON is the one who takes the floor and fights like he did when he killed our conference report back in March 1933. We must get him out of the way.

This friend said, "How are you going to do it?" and they said, "Through continual hammering." He said, "There is not any man on earth who can stand continual hammering. If you will just continue hammering him, you will finally get his nerve, and we are going to continue to hammer him until we get his nerve and get him out of the way."

Dick, do you believe those sons of guns can get my nerve?

Mr. KLEBERG. They have not yet.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Some 2 years ago I was attempting to defend myself on the floor of this House against a newspaper attack, and my friend from Texas came to my rescue with the statement that he used to dread newspaper attacks when he was a young Member of the House, but he had learned later that if a man continued to do his duty newspaper assaults or nothing else would ever bother him. I should like to say to my friend from Texas that I do not think he need worry himself about the high regard that the House of Representatives has for him in connection with this charge. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I am grateful from the depths of my heart to my friend from Kentucky and to my colleagues for their hearty applause; but I want to get back to my subject, because my time is fleeting. [Applause.]

Hearst newspapers have been maligning me ever since I have been in Congress. They have caused opposition to come up against me, and have cost me about $2,500 every election year since I have been in Congress. I still owe about $2,000 to a bank for my last campaign, and am still paying interest on it. I want to give these newspapers this much satisfaction. They at least put this burden on me. They have filled my district with their infamous attacks.

I took this floor on April 24, 1934, after repeated and continued attacks on me by Hearst and his papers here, and I warned Hearst that if he did not quit maligning and lying on me in his papers I was going to take this floor and give his life record. I ought to do it. [Cries of "Go ahead!"]

But I am not going to punish innocent people or the victims of his wrongs by mentioning now all the things he has brought about on the Pacific coast and in New York City, concerning which I have a stack of affidavits by some of the best women both in California and New York; but it affects some little children, innocent children, who are not responsible, and I am not going to allow myself, in justly punishing Hearst, to punish them unjustly.

I will show just a few things about what the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, during the history of Congress, shows about him. These are facts which Hearst's former attorney knew about him, a man who had been his attorney. And who is closer to a man than his attorney? Who knows a man better than his attorney?

When Hon. Grove L. Johnson, the father of the present United States Senator, HIRAM JOHNSON, of California, was a Member of this House, he made a speech on January 8, 1897, page 593 of the daily RECORD of that date, picturing William Randolph Hearst as he then existed back in 1897, from which speech I quote from the RECORD the following:

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Of this literary coyote, William Randolph Hearst, much could be said. He is a young man, rich not by his own exertions but by inheritance. He became possessed of the idea that he wanted to run a newspaper. Like the child in the song, "he wanted a bow-wow", and his indulgent parents gave him the Examiner.

At first we Californians were suspicious of "our Willie", as Hearst is called on the Pacific coast. Daily editorials written by "our Willie's" hired men praised his motives and proclaimed his honesty.

We knew him to be a debauchee, a dude in dress, an Anglomaniac in language and manners, but we thought he was honest.

We knew him to be licentious in his tastes, regal in his dissipations, unfit to associate with pure women or decent men, but we thought "our Willie" was honest.

We knew he was erotic in his tastes, erratic in his moods, of small understanding and smaller views of men and measures, but we thought "our Willie", in his English plaids, his Cockney accent, and his middle-parted hair was honest.

We knew he sought on the banks of the Nile reliefs from the haunts of vice, and had rivaled the Khedive in the gorgeousness of his harem, but we still believed him honest, though low and depraved.

We knew he was debarred from society in San Francisco because of his delight in flaunting his wickedness, but we believed him honest, though tattooed with sin.

We knew that he was ungrateful to his friends, unkind to his employees, unfaithful to his business associates.

We knew he had money not earned by himself—for he knew that he was unable to earn any money save as a statue for a cigar store—but given him by indulgent parents; we knew he needed no bribes with which to pay his way; hence, while we knew all these things, we did believe "our Willie" to be honest.

When C. P. Huntington told the truth about "our Willie" and showed that he was simply fighting the railroad funding bill because he could get no more blackmail from the Southern Pacific Co., we were dazed with the charge, and as Californians we were humiliated.

We looked eagerly for "our Willie's" denial, but it came not. On the contrary, he admitted that he had blackmailed the Southern Pacific Co. into a contract whereby they were to pay him $30,000 to let them alone, and that he had received $22,000 of his blackmail, and that C. P. Huntington had cut it off as soon as he knew of it, and that he was getting even now on Huntington and the railroad company because he had not received the other $8,000 of his bribe. He admitted by silence that the Southern Pacific Co. was financially responsible, but that he dared not sue it for the $8,000 he claimed to be due because of fear that his blackmail would be exposed in court.

With brazen effrontery only equaled by the lowest denizens of vice "our Willie" knows so well in every city of the globe, he unblushingly admitted he had blackmailed the railroad company, but pleaded in extenuation that he did not keep his contract, but swindled them out of their money.

He showed himself to be the correct exponent of a scoundrel as defined by Bill Tweed, namely, "A man who wouldn't stay bought." I cannot tell how sad I felt to learn of this phase of Hearst's life. I had been his attorney. I had regarded Hearst as honest.

To learn "our Willie" was nothing but a common, ordinary, everyday blackmailer—a low highwayman of the newspaper world—grieved the people of California, myself included.

I regret it. For the honor of California I wish this exposé had never been necessary, but it is true, sadly true. We grieve over a wicked newspaper.

People read the newspaper because it gives the news in large type, but they say while reading it, "Isn't it too bad Hearst should have sold himself. He must be wicked at heart, for he didn't need the money." He has intimidated men. He has intimidated people. You do not know the terrorism he has exercised in California with his paper. You know how it has abused and maligned and caricatured people in this House, the honored chairman of our committee, and other members of our committee, and our honored speaker. He has carried it on for years. He has debauched the public mind in California by terrorism. He has terrorized over everyone. He has issued his edicts that men shall be driven from public life, shall be ruined in private life, and shall be disgraced before the people. I am willing to stand for what I believe to be right, even if this blackmailing paper does continue to assault me.

The above was a cross section of what William Randolph Hearst and his Hearst paper was 38 years ago, expressed by Hearst's former attorney, Congressman Grove L. Johnson, father of United States Senator HIRAM JOHNSON, in his speech from the floor of this House on January 8, 1897.

ENTERED POLITICS IN NEW YORK, NOT CALIFORNIA

A few years thereafter William Randolph Hearst was elected to Congress from New York. As to his service and standing then, I will quote from one of his colleagues, Congressman John A. Sullivan, of Massachusetts, who from the floor of this House on February 13, 1905, concerning Hearst and his newspapers, said:

Where the proprietor of a newspaper is also a Member of Congress, he owes a double duty to his colleagues to be fair and impartial in his newspaper criticisms of them. A breach of these obligations is offensive to the law, to justice, and to the proprieties. It affects the dignity of the House and of every one of its Members. The right to publish must never be permitted to degenerate in a mere license to slander. The gentleman from New York must not seek to coerce others into agreement with him by wrongful and cowardly use of an unscrupulous press.

It is surely a grievous misfortune not to be able to appreciate the value of the legislative services of the gentleman from New York. It covers the case of the moral degenerate who insolently casts his lecherous eyes upon the noblest of women whose virtue places them beyond the contamination of his lust. It covers the case of the unclean, unproductive, shiftless member of society and includes the man who, totally bereft of the senses of proportion, raises his profaning eyes toward the splendid temple of the people's highest gift—the Presidency of the United States—blissfully unconscious of the woeful contrast between the qualifications requisite for that high office and his own contemptible mental and moral equipment.

It is well known that the gentleman is the most notorious absentee in this body and does not attend 1 day in 10, and has never been known to remain for an entire legislative day even upon those rare occasions he condescends to grace us with his presence. Has any Member heard his manly, sonorous voice once upon this floor in the discussion of a subject, in the asking of a question, in the making of an amendment, in the offering of a motion? Not once! Silent, inarticulate, wrapt in impenetrable gloom, this legislative sphinx sits enshrouded in the majesty of his fancied greatness.

The magnificant advantages of distance have never been more fully demonstrated than in our system, which unites in a common scheme of government territories situated at opposite ends of this great continent.

Thus while this man may by his conduct on the borders of the Pacific Ocean make either his nomination or election to office impossible in a community of self-respecting persons, he may by fleeing from the sources of his reputation as far as the Atlantic Ocean permits, secure election to high office. From California to New York measures the scope of this continent. Any less distance would be fatal to his ambition. If by my remarks I have checked the scheme of political assassination which has been marked out by this Nero of modern politics, I have performed a service to the House and to the country. [Prolonged applause.]

HEARST TOOK IT AND LIKED IT

Immediately following Congressman Sullivan's speech Mr. Hearst took the floor, and from his few remarks I quote the following excerpts:

Mr. HEARST. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan] has very largely exaggerated the article which appeared in my newspaper. * * *

The gentleman from Massachusetts apparently criticizes my action, or lack of action, on the floor of this House. * * * I have heard the ablest speakers deliver the most admirable addresses on the floor of this House without influencing legislation in the smallest particular.

Therefore, according to Mr. Hearst, there is no use whatever for Members of Congress to attend sessions or take any part in proceedings, but should go back to their homes and attend to private affairs when Congress is in session.

Mr. Hearst then made an attempt to attack Mr. Grove L. Johnson concerning something he had done when a young boy, when he was interrupted as follows:

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a suggestion. If Mr. Johnson is to be criticized by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hearst], we ought to have what Mr. Johnson said. I am for fair play; let us have both sides.

Then Mr. Hearst attempted to slander Mr. John A. Sullivan concerning what he had done as a young boy many years before, and from the floor of the House Mr. Sullivan was warmly defended the next day as follows:

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan], my colleague, came to Congress, I suppose that I was his greatest friend politically and personally. I have known him for many years. I served in the Massachusetts Senate with him. There is no man in politics in Massachusetts today, be he Republican or be he Democrat, for whom I would more quickly personally lay down my life on the proposition that he is entirely honest, absolutely above reproach, and almost too good a man to be in politics. [Prolonged applause.]

WHAT THE HERALD AND POST SAY ABOUT EACH OTHER

The following front-page editorial, or personal letter, appears on the front page of the Washington Herald for February 14, 1935:

YOU ASKED FOR IT, EUGENE

Mr. EUGENE MEYER,
Publisher the Washington Post.

DEAR EUGENE: I wonder if you know that the photographs reproduced Monday and Tuesday in full-page announcements in your Washington Post were taken by a Washington Herald photographer in the presence of a representative of the Audit Bureau of Circulations?

Could you imagine that copies of these photographs, and similar ones, have been locked in my desk since December 19, 1934?

Do you know that the papers represented are all Washington Posts? Would you be surprised, Eugene, to learn that probably none of these papers were ever put into the racks, nor were they ever distributed to the public?

Are you so innocent that you believe that papers stolen singly, as you infer, "corrupting the youth of Washington", collect themselves all by themselves into bundles of hundreds, neatly bound up with twine?

Would you be terribly surprised to learn that none of these papers were ever stolen by the Washington public, in whom you have so little faith?

But, as a matter of fact, were they ever intended for the public? Has the thought not yet occurred to you that they were probably never out of the hands of your own employees?

You have so little faith in human nature, Eugene, that you may not believe me when I tell you that thousands of other copies of the reliable Washington Post were "dumped" at the same time in other localities. We have photographs of these other copies also. Would you like to see them?

Were these thousands stolen by the Washington public, as you have said, Eugene, or were they "dumped" papers which the Washington Post, in its circulation figures, claimed as net paid? I wonder if you have as yet discovered that the Audit Bureau of Circulations will not permit you to call this "paid" circulation.

I'm not very old in the newspaper business, Eugene, but you are even younger than I. Possibly when you are a little more experienced, you will learn to have as real a faith in the Washington public as I have always had.

Sincerely yours,

ELEANOR PATTERSON.

P. S.—And will you please, Eugene, turn to page 6?

Then on the sixth page of the Herald, to which the Herald asked Eugene Meyer to turn, is a reproduction from the Washington Post giving the Hauptmann jury verdict, headed "Scoop", and stating that Hauptmann had escaped the death verdict, and with the following comment by the Washington Herald, to wit:

WRONG AGAIN!

One of the most astonishing performances in local newspaper history was given to the people of this city last night by a Washington newspaper—not the Herald. (See above.)

An edition of this paper, which calls itself "Washington's reliable morning newspaper", was on sale on the streets before the jury brought in a verdict in the Hauptmann trial.

The paper made a slight mistake. The headlines read:

"Hauptmann is guilty, but escapes death."

The paper said that the jury recommended clemency.

EUGENE MEYER IS TOO TIMID TO CALL NAMES

When Eugene Meyer in his purloined Washington Post falsely told his cheated readers that the jury in the Bruno Hauptmann case had given him a life sentence instead of death his no less prevaricating contemporary, Hearst's Washington Herald on its front page denounced him by name.

But when Hearst's scandal, crime-distributing Washington Herald on February 3, 1935, in its 6 o'clock a. m. edition falsely gave its cheated readers the death facts about the electrocution of the two gangsters Mais and Legenza, specially fabricated and manufactured 2 hours before the electrocution, Eugene Meyer, squirming and trembling for fear more would be told on him, had his Washington Post, Sunday, February 3, 1935, on its front page, tell all about the same being printed in a "Washington newspaper", but for fear somebody might take him across her knees and spank him, he did not dare state that it was the Washington Herald that had perpetrated this fraud. The following is the way his Post carried it, which, by not naming the Herald, fraudulently left his readers to believe that it might have been some other newspaper:

SCOOP

One of the most astonishing performances in local newspaper history was given to the people of this city yesterday by a Washington morning newspaper—not the Post.

An edition of the paper appeared at 6 a. m. carrying a detailed "account" of the deaths in Richmond of the gangsters Mais and Legenza, 2 hours before the men were executed! Chevy Chase readers got the "news" at 7. The men actually died at 7:50 and 8:06, respectively.

An unnamed witness of the execution was quoted as telling how Mais died; how he was carried to the execution room with "legs paralyzed by fear", although Mais was still alive when the paper was printed. Actually, he walked to the chair. Legenza was taken to death, according to the same paper, "cursing law, himself, and God." Legenza had not been executed then, either.

The slogan of the newspaper in question is "Truth, justice, public service."

If the Washington Post had been alert, and keeping up with the news, it might have mentioned that on the day the bill to provide an additional judge for the Court of Appeals in Washington was killed in the House, one of Hearst's papers reported that the bill had been passed by the House.

Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining, I desire to refer to some criticism that has been made. Did you know that the Washington newspapers caused this crime committee to be organized? Two months before we met, in the District Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Proctor called on the United States district attorney to come down to his court, and in open court he said, "Mr. District Attorney, your assistant here, Mr. John Fitzpatrick, has been impudent and insolent to this court, and I demand that you take action about keeping him out of here."

Mr. Garnett told Mr. Fitzpatrick that he could not use him in that court any longer, and that in Judge Luhring's court he had another district attorney who was ably performing his duty and getting along with the court, and he would have to put him in a civil court.

Mr. Fitzpatrick had never been an astute lawyer. He had been secretary to one of the judges down there and had not tried cases when he was made assistant district attorney.

Mr. Garnett told him that he was going to have to take him out of that criminal court, and Mr. Fitzpatrick got mad and quit. Immediately he reported to the newspapers. Instead of sending his resignation to the district attorney he sent it to the newspapers here in Washington. Mr. Garnett first found out that he had resigned, from a newspaper, and then when it was created, he was selected for a position on this crime committee. My good friend JENNINGS RANDOLPH knew nothing about what these newspapers had been doing. He would not have been a party to it if he had, and I am afraid that they put one over on him. I am going to read you a statement directly that will show how it was done. The newspapers did it all. Did you know that the Washington Post made one of their reporters, Mr. Seals, an investigator before that committee, and Mr. RANDOLPH tells me that he has been drawing a salary of $225 a month from the Government.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Was not that what the gentleman told me?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to suggest——

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, please, just answer me.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I will reply in my own time.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well. The gentleman told me that he was drawing $225 a month, didn't he?

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is right.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, I have not misquoted the gentleman, and he told me this fellow Fitzpatrick, who is insolent and insulting in Judge Proctor's supreme court, is drawing $225 a month from the Government as the committee counsel. And the first thing Mr. Fitzpatrick did was to bring your district attorney up there before him and grill him and insult him, like he tried to insult me in that committee. All because of pique and spite. Why, JENNINGS RANDOLPH knew nothing about all that. He would not have stood for it if he had.

The papers came out and said that I was going to be crucified by this Mr. Arthur Clarendon Smith, who was getting up this march on the Capitol, and by this Dr. Thomas S. Evans. Did you know these Washington newspapers went to the Speaker of this House and tried to get him to take part in having me removed? And you all doubtless know what JOE BYRNS told them, do you not? They went to my colleague Judge BUCHANAN, Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and tried to get him to take action; and you all doubtless know what "Buck" told them, do you not? They went also to another one of the finest men in the Government employ, Col. James G. Yaden, and all of you know Jim Yaden, one of the finest citizens of this city. He is president of the Federated Citizens Association—not this little gang of two-bit, second-class merchants that Smith is president of, but the real citizens of the city of Washington.

Jim Yaden is the president of the entire Federated Citizens Associations of the city of Washington. They went to him and tried to get him to take charge of this newspaper-inspired march on the Capitol against me, and I wish you could have heard what Jim Yaden told them. Jim told them they could not work him into anything like that, and then they got this fellow Smith, this cheap guy, among the cheap little merchants here, not the big merchants—and let me show you something about him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Could I get 10 minutes more to finish?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be granted 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may have 10 additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. About October 1, 1916, on Bladensburg Road, Mr. Smith's car was in an automobile accident in which John William Shaffer was killed. On October 4, 1916, Arthur Clarendon Smith was held by the coroner's jury for the grand jury, and on October 26, 1916, the grand jury ignored the case. The case was no. 32229 down in the coroner's court. I will not tell you anything about the circumstances of that accident, because it involves some other people, but you ought to find out something about it.

Dr. Thomas F. Evans was going to help Smith organize the thugs of Washington against me, not the good people. Why, he could have gotten 2,000 hoodlums here under the domination of these newspapers to have marched on the Capitol against me if he could have gotten any recognition from anybody. But it all fell flat. People would not respond.

Dr. Thomas F. Evans was indicted in 1924 for procuring an abortion. I will not mention the lady's name. It was case No. 42063. At that time Dr. Evans lived at 1347 L Street NW. On April 21 his bail was fixed at $3,000. This case was nolle prossed on November 9, 1927. The district attorney said that the complaining witness had changed her story and had since married the man who was responsible. That is the "son of a gun" who is after me. [Laughter.]

I do not blame those boys in the press gallery. They have to write what their newspapers tell them to write. Lots of them are good fellows; lots of them are good scouts. They would not malign me at all if they did not have to do it to hold their jobs.

Did you know that these Washington newspapers after me have had some reporters here who have been charged with serious crimes, attending this executive meeting of the Crime Investigating Committee, with two fellows sitting there at the time I was attacked on the 14th of March, when I did not know anything about this fellow coming there at all? They did not tell me he was coming. Just two new Members, not any of the older ones were there. If they had been I would have been notified. Did you know that some of the reporters, with 2 Members of Congress conducting an investigation, with 5 newspaper reporters present in an executive session and 5 photographers present were taking a picture of Members every 5 minutes? [Laughter.] Let me tell you about one of these reporters. He is now called "Lester Sumners." His alias is Lester Stanley Simmons.

That is the name he went by once. Lester Sumners is now a reporter for the Washington Herald, or he was when this crime committee first met, and was present before the Subcommittee of the District of Columbia on Crime Conditions. This man was a partner in the bootleg business with one John E. O'Hearn, going by the name of Lester Stanley Simmons. Let me quote you his police record. In the case of the United States of America against him and this other fellow and some others in Equity No. 53454 I am going to show you the order of the court if I have time. Here is his police record.

Case No. 6121: He was charged with possession of liquor. The complainant was Holmes. The officer was F. O. Brass, precinct no. 14.

Case No. 61531: He was charged with possession of liquor; Holmes, complainant; Holmes, officer; eighth precinct.

Case No. 9131: Charged with possession of liquor; Holmes, complainant; McBerry, officer, headquarters; verdict of not guilty.

Case No. 9231: He was charged with maintaining a nuisance; Officer Holmes, complainant; McBerry, officer, headquarters precinct. In that case he got a verdict of not guilty.

Then he was mixed up in cases nos. 343024 and 985965 with other defendants. In that case there was $10 forfeited.

John J. Sirica is counsel for Sam Beard and 12 other gamblers charged with conspiracy to violate the gambling laws now pending in the District of Columbia. I have been trying to get from the committee a copy of the statement I made there. I have not yet been able to get it, and I am a Member of Congress.

A party tells me, who says he knows it is true, that copies of the evidence taken before the Crime Committee have been made available to this man Sirica, who is counsel for Sam Beard. I will put in this record, showing that the Government has charged Beard recently with maintaining and operating gambling houses in about 12 different places in Washington, and I will give you the places by name and number:

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 24, 1935]

BEARD RECEIVES SPECIFIC DATA IN GAMING CASE—UNITED STATES SUPPLIES LIST OF 18 PLACES HERE ALLEGEDLY INVOLVED IN "PLOT"

Forced to reveal its hand through a bill of particulars, the Government has furnished Sam R. Beard and his 13 codefendants with a list of 18 places where it is alleged they conspired in "the setting up and keeping of gaming tables, gaming devices, and gaming places."

The list was revealed when Roger Robb, assistant United States attorney in charge of the prosecution, was directed by Justice James M. Proctor to draw up a list of the specific offenses that would be shown in his trial.

In accordance with the order, Robb has given Beard's attorney, John J. Sirica, a list showing the addresses where alleged offenses either occurred or were about to occur.

The addresses are: Room 508, Mather Building; 605 Pennsylvania Avenue NW.; 718 Eighteenth Street NW.; 1319 Wisconsin Avenue NW.; 1319 F Street NW.; 833 Fourteenth Street NW.; 804 North Capitol Street; 10 H Street NE.; 1405 L Street NW.; 519 Ninth Street NW.; 742½ Ninth Street NW.; 722 Thirteenth Street NW.; 939 D Street NW.; 702 O Street NW.; 522 Eighth Street NW.; 514 Tenth Street NW.; 1417 New York Avenue NW.; 922 F Street NW.; and divers other places to the grand jury unknown.

INDICTED ON THREE COUNTS

Beard and the others were indicted on three counts, the first two charging the setting up of a gaming table and the setting up of a gaming place, and the alleging a conspiracy to violate the gaming laws.

Beard was arrested several months ago. His trial has been postponed numerous times because of attacks on the indictments, the defense claiming it was illegal because a woman on the indicting grand jury was serving unlawfully. Following that another indictment was returned, and it, too, was attacked.

The latest move, one to force the Government to acquaint Beard with the nature of the charge against him so he could properly prepare his defense, has resulted in the removal of his case from the trial calendar.

WAS ARRESTED IN RAID

This was brought about by the necessity of investigating all of the places listed.

Beard was arrested in a raid on the Mather Building, where police claimed they seized 60 phones, each with sufficient outlets to make possible 1,600 simultaneous calls. Mr. Robb said he hoped to be able to show that race-track information was sent out throughout Washington over the telephonic system.

Removal of Beard's trial from the calendar means he probably will not be brought to face the charges until after the Easter recess. He is at liberty on a $9,000 bond.

John Kenny was employed by the Washington Herald. I do not know whether he is still employed or not, but he was employed by them as a reporter. He was indicted July 2, 1934, for gambling, case no. 57437. On October 29 he entered a plea of guilty, and on November 19 he was sentenced to the penitentiary for a period of from 1 to 3 years, to take effect upon arrival. The sentence being suspended, Kenny was put out on probation. I do not know whether he is still working for the Herald or not. [Laughter.]

Now, I want to call the attention of my good friend from West Virginia to a thing that he should have corrected himself. The paper said that not only did I try to put Headley in a position but I had endorsed a man by the name of Lieutenant Varney for promotion and that Mr. RANDOLPH'S committee was going to hail me back there and probe me for having endorsed Mr. Varney. Jennings, why did you not tell them that before I endorsed him you wrote the first letter that was ever written asking that he be promoted? I have your letter here, a copy of it, and I am going to put in the RECORD a copy of the reply. You should have told them that, Jennings.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to say that the letter is proper in every way.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. Now, in this connection, I will put in other letters written by other Congressmen for Lieutenant Varney:

MARCH 30, 1934.

Hon. MELVIN C. HAZEN,
District Commissioner, District Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HAZEN: This letter is written in behalf of Mr. Frank A. Varney, who is a lieutenant of the police force, but wishes to become a captain for the vacancy which I understand will exist. I trust he can be given most careful consideration.

With kind personal regards, I am, very sincerely yours,

JENNINGS RANDOLPH.

APRIL 2, 1934.

Hon. JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
Member of Congress, House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN RANDOLPH: Referring to your letter of the 30th ultimo, written in behalf of Lieut. Frank A. Varney for promotion to the grade of captain, Metropolitan Police, District of Columbia, permit me to advise that the recent vacancy occurring in the rank of inspector was filled by the advancement of an acting inspector to the full pay of an inspector, in keeping with the economy program, and resulting in but one promotion instead of four, and assuring the District of Columbia of the same measure of patrol service as heretofore.

Major Brown further informs me that in the event of a vacancy to be filled in the grade of captain, every consideration possible will be given Lieutenant Varney, your interest in him being kept in mind.

Thanking you for writing me concerning this officer, and reciprocating your kind personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

MELVIN C. HAZEN,
Commissioner, District of Columbia.

APRIL 7, 1934.

Hon. ERNEST W. BROWN,
Major and Superintendent Metropolitan Police,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MAJOR BROWN: I understand that Lieut. Frank A. Varney stands first on the civil-service eligible list to be made a captain in your department. I would appreciate your seeing that he is given due consideration and made a captain at the earliest date possible.

With kind regards, I am,

Your friend,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

APRIL 14, 1934.

Mr. GEORGE E. ALLEN,
Commissioner, District Government,
District Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR GEORGE: Perry Howard has spoken to me about Lieut. F. A. Varney, of the twelfth precinct.

From what Perry tells me, Lieutenant Varney is in line for a promotion to a captaincy and if the superintendent of police recommends this promotion, I sincerely hope that you will do everything you can to have it effected.

With best wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,

PAT HARRISON.

Hon. MELVIN C. HAZEN,
President of Board of Commissioners,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COMMISSIONER: I understand that Lt. Frank A. Varney is first on the eligible list for captain in the Metropolitan Police, Washington.

Many of my friends here in Washington have told me of Mr. Varney's record and excellent work. If opportunity presents itself, will you not give him serious consideration?

Very truly yours,

D. LANE POWERS.

APRIL 13, 1934.

Hon. MELVIN C. HAZEN,
Commissioner, District of Columbia,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HAZEN: I understand that a vacancy exists in the police department in the office of captain of police.

My attention has been directed to the qualifications of Lt. Frank A. Varney who, I believe, is first on the eligible list of the civil-service applicants. From authentic reports, which have come to me, I feel warranted in presenting the claims of Lieutenant Varney to you for consideration for promotion. I am persuaded that this promotion will be for the benefit of the service.

Thanking you for such favorable consideration as you can give to this subject, with kind personal regards, I am,

Very truly yours,

J. W. DITTER.

The following is a dirty little dig, wholly untrue and uncalled for, made by Paul Mallon, under his column for a Washington newspaper, and which was sent into my district:

PAUL MALLON

NOTES

The irrepressible BLANTON, of Texas, spoke so often on the bonus bill that House Members finally openly joined in a chorus inviting him to "sit down", and he did.

The following letter, voluntarily written by my colleague, Hon. WRIGHT PATMAN, author of the bill, and who managed it on the floor, shows just how unreliable these digs are:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 23, 1935.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIEND AND COLLEAGUE: Since I am acquainted with your activities in behalf of the full cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates, permit me to personally thank you for your cooperation and support in the passage of H. R. 1.

It is not my victory; it is our victory. The veterans all over this Nation owe you a debt of gratitude. You have also performed a useful and constructive service to the country.

As one who knows and realizes your worth and service to this great cause, permit me to extend to you my sincere thanks and appreciation.

Judge, you are entitled to greatest recognition for your very effective service to the cause. I am personally indebted to you for your splendid help.

With kindest personal regards and very best wishes for your future success, I am,

Your friend,

WRIGHT PATMAN.

The following letter explains one part of the testimony:

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
METROPOLITAN POLICE DEPARTMENT,
March 30, 1935.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: I am in receipt of your letter of the 27th instant, in which you request information as to the issuance of a courtesy card to one Tony De Janeiro.

In reply, permit me to advise that as I recall it was in the evening of the day on which you had testified before the Crime Investigation Committee that the Honorable WILLIAM T. SCHULTE, a member of that committee, came to my office at these headquarters and introduced to me Mr. DiGenaro, and referred to him as one of his good friends, and requested that I issue Mr. DiGenaro a courtesy card, as well as a courtesy card for myself.

This is the first time that I had ever met DiGenaro, and while my secretary was engaged in making out the card I remarked to DiGenaro that I did not recall ever having met him before, and he stated that I had known his father some years ago when I was in the sixth precinct, and his father was engaged in the grocery business in that precinct, which I did not recall.

The record kept of the courtesy card issued in my office indicates that card, no. 980, was issued to Anthony DiGenaro, at the request of Congressman SCHULTE.

Trusting this is the information you desire, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

ERNEST W. BROWN,
Major and Superintendent.

The Washington newspapers have played me up as an enemy to the police department. I introduced a bill and helped to pass it that gave the policemen in Washington their uniforms and equipment. I introduced a bill that gave both policemen and firemen 1 day off in lieu of Sunday; and I showed a card they had given me making me an honorary member of the policemen's association for life. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE] said, "They have not furnished me one."

Then I showed them a courtesy card; they had issued a number of these cards which allows us to park our cars, and so forth; and that very evening, as soon as the committee adjourned, my friend from Indiana brought a "dago" named Tony de Janiero down there and wanted them to issue one of these courtesy cards to both of them, permitting them special parking privileges. Major Brown's letter shows it. Tony runs a joint down here, a restaurant and saloon downstairs and a place upstairs where people may have wild parties.

Now, just one thing further and I am done. One of my friends in Congress told me that I could depend absolutely upon anything that one of the newspaper reporters he happened to know told me. I wrote him a letter, told him about it, and asked him to please give me a statement about what he knew of this transaction, and here is what he said——

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is what he said:

UNIVERSITY CLUB,
Washington, D. C., March 20, 1935.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Member of Congress, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: I do not like to be mixed up in any local matters here, but in the interest of common justice I am willing to tell you what I know. I was a reporter for the Chicago Tribune for a period of 10 years.

At the first and subsequent meetings of the subcommittee of the District Committee investigating crime conditions in Washington, I represented the Washington Herald.

At the first meeting of the Crime Committee, I was introduced to a Mr. Seals and he informed me that he was a reporter for the Washington Post. Subsequently, at the time of the appointment of Mr. Fitzpatrick as counsel for the committee, Mr. Seals became investigator for the committee. At the time of my assignment to cover the Crime Committee activities for the Washington Herald, in a conversation with one of the reporters who evidently enjoys the confidence of the city editor, I was told to stay away from BLANTON because he was extremely unfriendly to any of Hearst's representatives.

With reference to the appointment of Mr. Fitzpatrick as counsel for the subcommittee, at the time I knew nothing of the arrangements or what brought it about, except I was informed by Mr. JENNINGS RANDOLPH at a press conference in his office, with other reporters present, that Dr. John R. Fitzpatrick was the man the committee had decided upon as counsel, and asked if he was acceptable to all of the papers. I concurred as the others did, assuming that in view of the high praise of him by the others present, he was the man for the job. At a later date, a Sunday evening, in casting about for a follow-up story on the Crime Committee, I phoned Colonel Yaden and one other member of a local civic body to get their comment on a crime address made over the radio by Representative RANDOLPH. During my conversation with Colonel Yaden he informed me that he had a very high regard for Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. Fitzpatrick, and Mr. Seals, of the Washington Post, and for their activities in the functions of the Crime Committee, and added that Mr. Seals, of the Washington Post, had talked with him about the appointment of Dr. Fitzpatrick as counsel for the Crime Committee.

About February 5, at the close of a meeting of the subcommittee, Representative SCHULTE had a conversation with me, in which he said, "George, they killed poor Tommie", having reference to Tommie Malloy, head of the Motion Picture Operators' Union, in Chicago. We discussed Malloy momentarily, and I remarked from my observation of Tommie Malloy's activities that he had simply overstayed his leave. Mr. SCHULTE indicated to me his fondness and great friendship for Tommie Malloy.

He was a much-feared man, and the newspaper clippings in the morgues of the various Chicago papers tell many vivid stories of his alleged activities. Malloy was shot to death at the wheel of his Packard sedan while on the outer drive in the vicinity of Soldiers' Field, Grant Park, Chicago, February 4, 1935.

One day following the reported death of Tommie Malloy I was in Mr. SCHULTE's office. Mr. SCHULTE wasn't in, and I had a conversation with Harry Gallagher, SCHULTE's secretary, during which he expressed comment on the death of Malloy, saying that Tommie had been in Washington and saw Mr. SCHULTE just a day or two before his death.

The evening following the afternoon testimony of Chief of Detectives Burke I was called at the Herald office by a friend of mine who informed me that a detective from the office of Mr. Burke was talking about the efforts Mr. Burke was about to make to discredit Mr. SCHULTE in retaliation for his (Burke's) embarrassment at the hands of Mr. SCHULTE during the Crime Committee session of that day. He informed me as follows: That Mr. Burke had detailed a couple of his men to watch Mr. SCHULTE and his activities very carefully, and at the moment Mr. SCHULTE was in the New Haven Grill, 45 H Street NE., and two detectives were watching the place, and at the first opportunity to embarrass

Mr. SCHULTE they were to do just that. Immediately upon receiving the information I consulted with the assistant city editor who was in charge at the time on the Herald, as to what course to take. He suggested either to permit the police to do what they saw fit, and I be an observer and record the event, or contact Mr. SCHULTE with a view to having him submit to the frame-up and the Herald would expose the situation. I contacted Mr. SCHULTE on the telephone at the New Haven Grill, advised him he was in a precarious position, and suggested he meet me immediately so I could inform him of what I had been told. He suggested that I come to his office, room 1018, New House Office Building, which I did. This was at about 10:30 in the evening—the exact date I do not at the moment recall. I met him there, told him what I had been informed of, suggested that he exercise extreme care in his conduct while in this place, and he suggested that I go back there with him. Before doing so, however, he called Tony De Janeiro, the alleged proprietor, on the phone and ordered him to remove some photographs of his (Mr. SCHULTE) and others which were hanging back of the small service bar of the main room of the New Haven Grill. He also asked Tony if there were any policemen about the place. Tony informed him that there were two in the place at the time, but that they were friendly. Mr. SCHULTE then suggested that I go back to the place with him. He drove me over in his Packard sedan, parked the car in the gasoline filling station parking lot on the corner of H and First Streets NE., and we entered the place by the side entrance. I was taken upstairs on the second floor to a private dining room facing H Street, where I was introduced to Tony De Janeiro. I infer from the manner of introduction and the conversation that transpired that Mr. De Janeiro and Mr. SCHULTE were on the friendliest of terms. I was introduced to several men and women, friends of Mr. SCHULTE. We had several bottles of beer, some lunch, and Mr. SCHULTE and I left the place alone at 2:30 a. m., he driving me to the University Club.

It is a combination saloon and restaurant. Frank Waldrop, a reporter on the Herald, and myself visited the New Haven Grill one afternoon, Mr. Waldrop taking me there for the purpose of showing me Mr. SCHULTE's autographed picture taken with Tony de Janeiro, the alleged proprietor of the place. The picture and two others adorned the wall of the back bar of the small service bar. I have already related that I heard Mr. SCHULTE ask Tony over the phone to remove the pictures.

I interviewed Mr. SCHULTE late the afternoon of the day the report of his car being stripped was given to the police. I knew nothing of my own knowledge of it, except that Mr. SCHULTE said the window of the door and lock on his Packard sedan was broken, the car was entered, and papers and things in the pockets and compartments were disturbed as though someone was in search of some papers. Mr. SCHULTE inferred that he had some idea who was responsible for the breaking into his car. The inference I got was that it was the police. The stripping of the car incident took place sometime after the night I had been to Tony's place.

Trusting this complies with your request, I am

Very sincerely yours,

GEORGE E. REEDY.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for sufficient time to finish.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman's time is extended 5 additional minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I regret to have taken this time, but I want the Washington newspapers to know that this House of Representatives is going to be the judge of its own committees. Nothing the newspapers may do can disturb the action of this House. This House does not belong to the Washington newspapers. This House has shown that it does not honor their infamous and despicable influence; this House does what it pleases.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I should like to make the observation that I do not think the gentleman should feel any regret at having consumed the time he has taken to make answer to these charges that have been made against him for weeks in the effort to undermine his standing and position here with his colleagues. He should be very happy in the consciousness that his colleagues still believe in him and are standing with him. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I thank my good friend the gentleman from Georgia.

I want to say, my colleagues, that since I have been in public office I have given the best that is in me and have been getting poorer and poorer every year. I am $30,000 poorer now than I was when I entered public life. Above a bare living for my family it is the honest truth that since I have been in public life I have spent every bit of my income in trying to bring about better conditions.

Why, I was the man who first started the crime committee doing anything worth while. I went to them with a bill to reorganize the trial board here. You cannot have good policemen as long as you have a trial board made up of policemen themselves; they will let the crooked policemen stay and sometimes convict innocent men. You have got to take that crime board out of the hands of the police. Incidentally, I thought it was an executive session, but there was a bunch of photographers there.

I told the chairman of the committee, JENNINGS RANDOLPH, that I would not make any statement as long as the photographers were there and asked him to forbid them taking pictures of me during the hearing. He ordered them not to take pictures of the committee that afternoon. I told them, incidentally off the record, that there had appeared before the committee of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] a responsible, reliable Government employee who said that within a block of that committee's room there was a regular gambling house going on day and night, with lots of tables filled with all kinds of gambling devices, openly defying the law. I told them and I insisted that the superintendent of police stay there and hear me, which he did, over the protest of one member of the committee, my good friend from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE]. But he stayed there, the committee let him stay there to hear me; and the next day there was staged a raid. He said he did not believe there was any gambling house there, that they would not find anything; but he told them to make a raid. They found nothing, because the gamblers had been tipped off.

The following is the account of the real raid:

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 7, 1935]

POLICE STAGE GAMING RAID NEAR CAPITOL—AXES USED TO SMASH INTO HOUSE; 56 MEN TAKEN IN CUSTODY—CONGRESSMEN WHO SEE VICE SQUAD AT WORK PRAISE EFFORTS

One week to the day after fifth precinct police had made a visit and found only "vacant rooms", vice squad police late yesterday swooped down on a three-story building located near the Capitol and within a block of the House Office Building, where hearings on District crime conditions are now under way, and discovered an elaborate gambling establishment, where they seized 56 men.

Eight of the men taken into custody were booked on charges of setting up a gaming table and ordered held for arraignment in $2,000 bonds. The others were released after police had put them through the line-up, searched them, and ordered them to hold themselves in readiness to appear as witnesses.

EIGHT PRISONERS CHARGED

The eight gave their names as follows: Charles Turner, 45, 1300 block of East Capitol Street; John M. Cornell, 31, 900 block of East Capitol Street; Edgar J. Behrle, 39, 900 block of E Street NE.; Fred A. Stillman, 42, 1700 block of P Street NW.; Kenneth T. Pumphrey, 29, 400 block of Fifteenth Street NE.; John E. Goetz, 36, 1600 block of Q Street NW.; Wilmer M. Long, 28, 700 block of Nineteenth Street NE.; and Frank E. Lyon, 51, 500 block of Fifth Street NW.

Both police raids on the building came on the heels of charges made several days ago by Representative THOMAS L. BLANTON, Democrat, of Texas, before the crime investigating committee that a gambling establishment "which everybody knows about" is operating within the shadow of the Capitol.

CONGRESSMEN SEE RAID

The police activities attracted the attention of hundreds of persons, including Members of Congress, their secretaries, employees of the Capitol, workers in the Library of Congress, and ordinary residents—and many who stood in the street and watched the police corral their prisoners into patrols looked over their shoulders at the dome of the Capitol looming against the western sky and grinned.

Several of the Members of Congress attracted to the spot praised the work of Lt. George Little, vice squad chief, and the six men who helped him in the coup. Among these was Representative JOHN J. MCSWAIN (Democrat), South Carolina, Chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee.

Lieutenant Little announced that $2,127 was taken off the eight men booked, including marked money for a bet made earlier in the day by a member of the squad.

KNEW OF PREVIOUS RAID

The vice squad chief, asked about the previous raid by the fifth-precinct detail, admitted that he knew about it. Asked specifically if the equipment seized was new, Lieutenant Little said: "Well, the beams supporting the backs of the blackboards were new lumber."

The fifth-precinct squad made the raid last week and the raiding squad at that time consisted of Lt. John Flaherty, Sgt. A. S. Bohrer, and Privates T. Smithson and W. Salkeld.

Private Salkeld, speaking of that raid last night, said: "We battered our way in. I wielded the ax myself, but we found nothing but vacant rooms and a lot of dust."

The vice squad members also had to smash their way in, but Lieutenant Little was confident that no patron or alleged operator had been permitted to escape.

PARAPHERNALIA SEIZED

While occupying the entire building, the gaming establishment was centered on the third floor where police found a blackboard containing racing results and a quantity of numbers slips.

Loud speakers for dissemination of race track results and mutuel totals were found, as were a trough in which discarded numbers slips were thrown, two tables covered with green baize, ostensibly for dice games, and a cashier's cage where police said the race and numbers bets were made and where the winners collected.

Police records showed the following equipment seized: One cloth table (used for dice), 1 pool table (used for dice), 1 radio, 1 radio power pack, 2 telephones, 1 set of ear phones, 1 stool, 1 electric heater, 1 fan ventilator, 1,200 numbers books, 2 barricaded doors, an uncounted number of poker chips.

Several members of the vice squad reported to Lieutenant Little that they saw people in the establishment turn back the dice blankets from the tables when the police axes crashed through.

Police, armed with axes, came in from the rear and gained entrance to the third floor by smashing in a heavily reinforced door in the rear of the second floor.

Automatic locks were used on both front and back doors, and persons entering, according to police, had to identify themselves before being permitted to get into the gaming room.

That the place had been expecting a land-office business, police said, was evidenced by the fact that the third floor had been reinforced from the second floor by 4-inch joists. Police who had been in the place some time previously said that partitions on the third floor had been torn out to make one big room. In addition, it was pointed out that stairways leading from the top floors in the rear had been encased in composition wall boarding to make detection from that sector impossible.

This same man Headley ordered that captain to close up this joint. The records show it; Captain Morgan admitted it before this committee, that Headley had ordered him to close it up. These real raiders headed by Captain Little went there, cut those doors down, and arrested 58 gamblers there and took charge of that gambling paraphernalia within a stone's throw of the House Office Building and the Committee on Crime. The committee had ignored it for about 2 weeks and spent 8 days investigating my endorsement of a policeman.

In conclusion, let me say, that Bob Taylor, in Paradise of Fools, said:

God deliver us from the fools whose life work is to cast aspersions upon the motives and character of the leaders of men. I believe the men who reach high places in politics are, as a rule, men of sterling worth and intelligence, and upon their shoulders rest the safety and well-being of the peace-loving, God-fearing millions.

I thank you kindly, all of you colleagues, for your kind attention and consideration. [Prolonged applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the Chair will recognize the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I may say that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE] has very kindly yielded his time for the present in order to take up the McSwain bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in fairness and justice, my colleague the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] is Chairman of the Crime Committee, and he indicated a desire to make some remarks. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, of course, I have neither the strong language nor the inclination to attempt an answer to my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Texas. I do not desire to go into the matters which he has consumed most of his time discussing in his address today. They are matters with which he is personally interested, and, of course, he has explained them to you. My remarks, of course, are extemporaneous, but they will be directed only to the honesty and to the devotion to duty of the eight members of the Crime Committee, acting under a resolution of this body to investigate all conditions of a criminal nature existing in the District of Columbia. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has told you that years ago he was engaged in a similar task as a Member of the House of Representatives in connection with an investigation of crime conditions in the District of Columbia. I am certain that he gave his very best efforts at that time in the discharge of his duties as he saw them. Now, we are saddled with worse situations than in those years, and there was created, because the District of Columbia Committee asked that there be created, a special committee to investigate the alarming crime conditions in the District of Columbia. It was upon the unanimous request of the District of Columbia Committee that this House was asked to pass upon a resolution which gave to the Special Crime Committee the sum of $1,500, to be used for the employment of a counsel, an investigator-secretary, together with the other needed help in order to conduct hearings and investigate the criminal activities and the functioning of law-enforcement agencies at the Nation's Capital.

Mr. Speaker, it so happened that the Chairman of the District of Columbia Committee selected me as Chairman of the Special Subcommittee to Investigate Crime in the District of Columbia. I am a comparatively new Member in the House of Representatives, serving my second term. I am not familiar with all the workings of this body nor of the Federal Government to the extent which my friend from Texas is; however, I yield to no Member of the House in the energetic service to the task to which I am appointed nor devotion to duty and in the obligations that are presented before me in any capacity which I have been chosen for or selected to perform by the Membership of this House. [Applause.]

The Members of this body voted for the resolution and power of investigation which gave us a small fund of $1,500 for this important task. Mr. BLANTON supported and spoke for it. I may say to you that when the final report of the Special Crime Committee is made to this House—I trust within the next 18 days—I hope the committee and its work will be judged solely upon its findings and recommendations for remedial legislation brought here at that time. Regardless of the fact that our counsel received $225 per month for his services or that the investigator for the committee receives a like amount, we are going to return to the Committee on Accounts perhaps $300 of the amount of $1,500 which was given to us to investigate criminal activities in the District of Columbia. This investigation might have been a long, drawn-out affair, drifting into the summer or fall and a report made after the Members came back here next year. But I determined, and the rest of the members of the special committee determined that they should work hard, that they should be honest and fair to all concerned in conducting this investigation into criminal conditions in the District of Columbia during the weeks which we were to serve. I say now that I have labored long hours at the hearings held by this committee. We met in the morning and we had sessions in the afternoon because we had the permission of the House to sit during its sessions and we have also met as a committee at night.

At this time I want to thank the membership of the special committee who have served with me in the investigation of criminal activities in the District of Columbia. I take this occasion to thank them publicly, as I am going to do when the final report is made, on behalf of myself and also on behalf of the Membership of this House, for, after all, those eight Members who serve on this committee acted for a standing committee of Congress, the District of Columbia Committee, and thereby, I trust, they have served you as well.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House long. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] appeared before our committee—and let me say to the Membership of the House at this time that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] was never called before our committee to testify. He came upon the first occasion and he came upon the second occasion as a voluntary witness. We were glad to have him, just as we would have been glad to have had any Member of this body who felt that he or she had been in position to contribute something to this committee in the conduct of its hearings in reference to crime conditions existing in the National Capital.

Mr. Speaker, I have no desire whatsoever to go into personalities at this time. However, as chairman of this committee I do desire to stand 100 percent by the choices of this committee in its selection of counsel, investigator, and secretary for the committee. I shall take that blame upon my own shoulders, not asking even the other members of this special committee to stand with me as those selections are gone into.

Dr. John R. Fitzpatrick was secretary to Justice Frederick L. Siddons, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, from 1925 to 1929. It was from Justice Siddons, who was formerly police commissioner of the District of Columbia, that Dr. Fitzpatrick received his later ideas concerning the necessary educational equipment for policemen, and other matters pertaining to police work in the District of Columbia.

In 1929 Dr. Fitzpatrick was appointed by Leo O. Rover as assistant United States attorney, and he continued in that capacity under Mr. Garnett when he took over the duties of the office. It was in November of last year, 1934, that Dr. Fitzpatrick resigned from his assistant district attorneyship in protest at what he believed to be unreasonable continuances in the Buccoli murder case.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. As assistant United States district attorney, Dr. Fitzpatrick was in charge of the district attorney's office at police court, in charge of grand jury work and, finally, was elevated to active prosecution in criminal cases. As a prosecutor, he won prominence in this work in the District of Columbia. He prepared and successfully prosecuted a large number of difficult cases. Among these were the Brinkler, Wampler, Bowles, and Du Benque-Gormley cases.

Because of his experience in the district attorney's office and his earlier training under Justice Siddons, Dr. Fitzpatrick applied himself to seeking a solution of the problem of equipping police officers in the District of Columbia so that they would be of assistance in the prosecution of criminal cases. His experience had impressed upon him the great weaknesses that exist because the average policeman knows nothing of evidence, it is said, and the manner in which it should be presented. As a result of Dr. Fitzpatrick's concentration upon this problem he conceived the idea of the establishment here in Washington, D. C., of a school in which members of the police department would be given sufficient legal and criminological training so as to increase their efficiency. Dr. Fitzpatrick enlisted the support of the District Commissioners, the officials of the Metropolitan Police Force, and the officers of Columbus University; and in January 1932 this counsel for your subcommittee investigating criminal activities in the District of Columbia was placed in charge and established the Metropolitan Police School of Criminology here in the Nation's Capital at Columbus University. The university donates its facilities and Dr. Fitzpatrick donates two evenings a week without pay to the instruction of the police officers and the privates of the force in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Do I understand the counsel only receives $225 a month?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; that is true; and I know of the salary that the gentleman's committee paid its counsel, of course.

Mr. McCORMACK. My committee started out to pay its counsel $500 a month, and I did not think it was high enough. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. I do want to say at this time that of all the witnesses that came before our committee from the very opening until the closing session on this past Friday, so far as I was able to conduct the hearings, and I missed only two of them, once on account of being out of the city and the other time on account of meeting with a group from my own district upon an important matter at one of the departments, I gave to every witness every courtesy of which I personally am capable.

Mr. MAVERICK. If the gentleman will permit, I think the House feels about the matter in this way, although I do not know—just exonerate everybody, make TOM BLANTON the mayor of the District of Columbia and keep the gentleman at the head of the committee and we will call it square. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman.

Other professors have since been added to the courses which are being given at Columbus University at night by Dr. Fitzpatrick.

When the school was announced, 300 members of the Metropolitan Police force made formal application for enrollment. From this list 100 police students were selected by Major Brown, the superintendent of police. The course is absolutely free to members of the police force, and in addition to the men in the Metropolitan Police, women from the Women's Bureau and members of the United States Park Police are now enrolled in the school.

The subjects which Dr. Fitzpatrick presides over include evidence, criminal law and procedure, correct method of obtaining and presenting evidence in court, public speaking, so that an officer will be at ease before a grand jury or on the witness stand, and such practical criminological subjects as handwriting, fingerprinting, photography, ballistics, and allied matters. The school at this time has 150 men enrolled. They range from private to captain, and many members of the detective bureau of the District of Columbia are studying at this school 2 nights a week.

It is the only school of its kind in the United States, and it has added materially to the efficiency with which its student policemen present their cases in court. Dr. Fitzpatrick has devoted himself to this work purely out of a sense of obligation, as I see it, as a citizen of this community, and in the feeling that those who are so fortunate as to have acquired education and learning should endeavor to improve the educational status of their fellow men. It is to his credit that he has performed this task quietly, without any attempt at praise, without seeking publicity, and without thought of personal gain, because through his unusual concentration upon police problems in the District of Columbia he has not only gained an intimate knowledge of the police situation but he has an unusually broad acquaintance in the department and is well known by the membership of almost the entire force; and these men, I may say, hold him in the highest regard. In addition to this he has ideals for the raising of the standards of police work. He has courage and he has ability to achieve these ideals.

I may also say that he is under obligation to no one and he seeks no favors or special consideration from any individual or any group. He has been hard-working and painstaking as counsel for this committee, and I may add at this time that we had about 100 attorneys in the District of Columbia who applied for the position of counsel for this Special Committee on the Investigation of Crime.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from West Virginia may have 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Dr. Fitzpatrick was one gentleman who never made an application to me or to this committee to serve as its counsel.

I made a careful investigation, as I understood the needs, into the type of attorney which could serve the committee best. I went to the heads of the District of Columbia law group, and there I found the highest recommendations of Dr. Fitzpatrick. When I asked the president of the District of Columbia Bar Association about the man the committee had under consideration I found the same high recommendation.

Now, I believe that is all I want to say in behalf of Dr. Fitzpatrick. I hold him in the highest esteem. I have the highest confidence in his ability, his devotion, and his service for the committee, which is now preparing its report after 2 months of hearings.

I should like to speak a moment about Mr. Seals.

It has been said that Mr. Seals was connected with the Washington Post, and at the very time that we were considering the hiring of an investigator for the committee to act as secretary.

I want to say that I knew Mr. Seals—not a few weeks ago—but I knew him personally more than 2 years ago.

Why did I suggest Mr. Seals for the position? Because, ladies and gentlemen of the House, Bill Seals, my friend, was executive secretary of the United States Flag Association 2 years ago at the time the country fixed its attention for the first time on the solution of and the grappling with crime conditions not only in the District of Columbia but in the Nation at large.

The United States Flag Association had many eminent men upon its official board and at the meetings of the first criminal conference in the history of the United States to be held in Washington. The Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Cummings, addressed the group, and there were other distinguished men who addressed the delegates. The President of the United States sent a special message to it. It was from that crime conference, sponsored by the United States Flag Association, of which Mr. Seals was the executive secretary, that we began to face the crime problem and work for its solution.

Mr. Seals was a man who had studied the problem, made careful investigation of it. He served at one time as secretary of the committee over which Grover Whalen presided in the city of New York, and which rendered great service.

Now, I am about through, and I notice my time is nearly up, but before I sit down I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that these things that occurred between the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and the officials and Mr. SCHULTE and other Members are things that always occur at such hearings.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has again expired.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, throughout all the heat and discussion, I never asked the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] a single question while he was upon the stand, because I considered him, as I know that he would consider me, as a Member of Congress in his own right serving a certain district of the United States. This committee must be judged not by something unpleasant that happened along the route as it went toward its goal to better crime conditions in the District of Columbia, but this committee, charged with responsibility under a special resolution of bringing in a report to this Congress, must be judged by its final report upon which you gentlemen as Members of Congress shall solemnly pass. [Applause.]

APPORTIONMENT OF THE WATERS OF THE COLORADO RIVER

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, a Representative from the State of Colorado, to the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter, dated April 2, 1935, to Hon. Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, from Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, the distinguished and beloved dean of the Colorado delegation, earnestly protesting against the Secretary of the Interior entering into any contract with the State of Arizona for the storage or delivery to Arizona of any water from the Boulder Canyon project reservoir unless and until that State ratifies the Colorado River compact.

For 50 years Mr. TAYLOR has been recognized throughout the West as one of the leading authorities on the law of irrigation and water rights. In 1887–89, as referee appointed by the State district court, Mr. TAYLOR took testimony, adjudicated and established the irrigation water rights of all northwestern Colorado. None of the 1,000 water-right decrees prepared by him has been reversed. Throughout the years since 1909, during which he has served continuously as a Congressman from Colorado, he has taken a most active part in the negotiations and in the framing of legislation for equitable apportionment of the waters of the Colorado River. No one is more familiar than he with the details of this complicated question so vitally affecting the welfare of the seven States of the Colorado River Basin. He writes as a leading authority both on the facts and on the law of this question.

The views expressed in Congressman TAYLOR's letter are shared by all the Members of the House from Colorado.

The letter is as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 2, 1935.

Hon. HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: At the time of the hearing before you of the representatives of the seven Colorado Basin States, December 17 last, on the application of Arizona to you to execute a contract for the free and perpetual delivery to that State of 2,800,000 acre-feet of water per annum from the Boulder Canyon project reservoir, I was too ill to attend the hearing, and you may recall that I expressed my disappointment, and requested the privilege of writing you a letter on the subject.

At that time you declined to execute the contract presented by Arizona and suggested that the representatives of the seven States should get together and, if possible, agree upon a contract.

I understand that the representatives of those States met at Phoenix, Ariz., on January 14, and again at Salt Lake City, on February 25, and that Arizona has prepared a revised contract that may be presented to you soon.

In this letter, when I use the name "Arizona" in any critical sense, I mean no reflection whatever upon the great State, or her splendid population. I refer only and collectively and impersonally to the 13 years' perpetual relay of her marvelously energetic, persistent, alert, shrewd, astute, and supersubtle Colorado River compact representatives.

They would richly deserve the highest commendation if their energies were expended in a more commendable enterprise.

I do not at all intend to in any way question the serious earnestness, great ability, or entire good faith of any of the official representatives of the six Colorado River compact States; and certainly would not in the slightest way reflect upon the Colorado members of that commission.

I am not a member of Colorado's Colorado River Commission; but I am the official home representative of the western half of Colorado, and I have not only a right but an imperative duty to speak, as best I know how, for the 150,000 people now residing there, as well as for the protection of all succeeeding generations in that "great western slope empire."

My home is on the bank of the main stream of the Colorado River; and that main stream and 12 of its greatest tributaries arise on the western slope of the main range of the Rocky Mountains—the highest part of the Continental Divide of our country—in my congressional district; and 20 of the 24 counties of my district that are within the Colorado River Basin furnish two-thirds of all the gigantic flow of that marvelous stream.

For over 50 years the people of western Colorado have very greatly honored and trusted me; and I have spent a large part of my time and energy during that half century in trying to establish and protect our water rights.

So that, regardless of any individual or personal considerations, and in view of the very serious and far-reaching importance of this matter, I feel I would not be performing my full personal or official obligation to the Colorado River Basin in my State if I remained silent, or did not candidly write you my judgment concerning the proposed Arizona contract.

As you are fully aware, this matter of the fair division of the waters of the Colorado River is a long, complicated, technical, and conflicting controversy that has been carried on by the State of Arizona against the other 6 States ever since the 24th day of November 1922, when the representatives of all those 7 States, including Mr. W. S. Norviel, of Arizona, officially approved and signed the Colorado River compact at Santa Fe, N. Mex. There have been hundreds of conferences on this matter since then. I have attended some of them.

As you are also aware, the waters of that great "Nile of America" are worth untold billions of dollars to the inhabitants of those seven States for this and all succeeding generations for thousands of years to come.

The Colorado River is the only great river in the world entirely within an arid region, and it is intrinsically the most valuable stream on this planet.

The waters of that stream are worth a thousand times more to the Colorado River Basin than all its minerals and everything else.

In fact, a large portion of each of those States would be an utterly uninhabited and barren waste, were it not for that river.

The population of those seven States is about 10,000,000. About 5 percent of them live in Arizona.

The waters of that river belong absolutely to those seven States, and they imperatively must be equitably apportioned between them.

That was and is the express object and purpose of the Colorado River compact. It required more than a year to prepare that compact. It is the final composite result of the long and earnest efforts not only of the seven official representatives of those States but also of a large number of other splendidly capable and honest men. It is a great, statesmanlike document; and, frankly, I have never been able to appreciate the reasoning of Arizona or any other State in refusing to join her sister States in making an equitable, rightful, and practical division of those waters under the terms of that compact.

I cannot believe that any State has any legal or moral right whatever to be singled out and given any exclusive rights or special privileges at the expense of and to the detriment and future injury of the other six States.

If any State should have a preference right it would be my home State of Colorado, that furnishes the larger part of the water. My constituents have always felt that we ought to have a preference right to the first use of those waters on the western slope of our State, because our use within that basin would not really consume much of it.

Much of the water used by us would always run off and seep down into the hundreds of tributaries and gradually stabilize the flow below on the main stream.

However, Colorado has not reserved a claim of this kind in that compact, and we are willing to join our sister States in a division of that water under the provisions of that compact and also the division and apportionment of the waters in accordance with the requirements of the Boulder Canyon Project Act of December 21, 1928; and, in my judgment, that is all that any of those States is entitled to.

From the standpoint of the four upper basin States we are very much interested in the matter of the surplus waters unapportioned by the compact upon which the burden of supplying the Republic of Mexico may first fall. If the users in the lower basin States acquire large legal rights to these waters ahead of us, the upper four States may be called upon to supply most or all of the demands of Mexico.

I feel that you have no more right to contract that water to Arizona than you have to contract to any one of the other States the exclusive right to the first use of all the waters that rise in or flow through her borders. All those States have a joint interest in the ownership and fair use of those waters.

Those States should have reserved to them forever the sovereign right to the first and consumptive use of their share of the waters that is allocated to them by the Colorado River compact; and that right should never be taken away from them or diminished or jeopardized by any contract or otherwise.

I received a tentative draft of the present proposed contract a few days ago, and I have read it; but have not had time to give it the intensive study it deserves. However, from this and former drafts I know generally what it is; and while it is polished off some, yet it means just the same as all the former drafts. It seems to me that there is nothing whatever in it for anybody except Arizona.

I am not going to attempt a detailed analysis of this contract, because it may be amended several times before it reaches you. I am writing you concerning the water-right situation in the entire Colorado River Basin, and the Colorado River compact, and Arizona's application for a contract, as I individually look at it.

Section 5 of the Boulder Canyon Project Act provides:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such general regulations as he may prescribe, to contract for the storage of water in said reservoir, and for the delivery thereof * * * upon charges that will provide revenue, etc."

But that does not give the Secretary any authority to unjustly and grievously inflict an utterly unwarranted and irreparable outrage upon six States for the benefit of one.

The Secretary has a very wide discretionary authority in this matter; and I am appealing to you upon the old-fashioned principle of "right or wrong", between seven sovereign States; and the untold millions of present and future residents of all of those States, who are so vitally affected by this matter, and whose very lives and property rights and all hopes for the future are, as I believe, in most serious jeopardy by this proposed contract.

The contract refers to the regulations by the Secretary of the Interior of April 23, 1930, as amended September 28, 1931, authorizing the extension of delivery contracts. The contract also states that the vested rights of the other States shall not be affected thereby—except as in this contract provided. But what those exceptions and provisions are, or really mean, I am very apprehensive of.

It also refers to the contract between the Imperial Irrigation District, of December 1, 1932, for the construction of the Imperial Dam; and the contract of February 10, 1933, with the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California, for the construction of the Parker Dam; and also to the contract of the Government to the city of Los Angeles, of April 26, 1930; and to some Arizona statutes, and to many other matters that seem rather irrelevant to me.

The contract provides that the United States shall each year deliver to Arizona not more than 2,800,000 acre-feet of water, and at a price of not more than 25 cents per acre-foot.

Whether or not the State can take whatever amount she needs, or wants, less than the full amount, or she can resell it, or let it run down to Mexico, or just leave it in the reservoir, the terms of the final contract will determine.

There is no reference whatever to the limitation in the Colorado River compact in relation to the computation of the average flow of the stream over a 10-year period, or the average of 7,500,000 acre-feet per year, to which the upper basin States are entitled and are subject to.

It provides that Arizona shall get all her demands every year, whether the other States get any or not. If this contract had been in force in 1934, Arizona would have been entitled to demand all the waters of that stream during that entire year for her sole benefit.

And yet Arizona expressly reserves the right to hereafter apply for more water—if there is any more left in the river.

The contract says that the vested rights of the other States shall not be affected—except as in this contract provided. But what the effect of the provisions are, or will be, is exceedingly ambiguous.

The contract provides that no charge shall ever be made by the Government for the free storage, or free delivery to Arizona of the 2,800,000 acre-feet of water, including also the use thereof on the Indian reservation or the Yuma project in Arizona, and no charge of any kind shall ever be made in excess of 25 cents per acre-foot.

As a consideration, that is about the limit of absurdity. They might as well have made it $1 a year.

The quantity of water in a reservoir is measured in acre-feet. An acre of land is nearly 209 feet square. An acre-foot of water means the quantity of water necessary to cover an acre of land 1 foot deep. That means about 43,600 cubic feet of water. That is the quantity of water for which Arizona agrees to pay not more than 25 cents. The amount of water that is flowing in a stream or canal is measured by the number of cubic feet passing a given point on the stream or canal each second. So that 1 cubic foot of water flowing in a stream or canal each second would be 60 cubic feet a minute, or 3,600 cubit feet an hour, or 86,400 cubic feet each 24 hours, which is approximately 2 acre-feet of water.

In eastern Colorado a first priority, that is, a perfect water right, to a cubic foot of water per second of time for irrigation purposes is valued at $24,000. In Colorado, the irrigation season is ordinarily only about 6 months in the year, while in Arizona and California, within the Colorado River Basin, the irrigation season is approximately 12 months in the year; and the climate is such that they can raise crops every month in the year, and they are much more valuable than can be raised in the higher altitudes. Moreover, water for domestic or municipal use is many times more valuable than it is for just irrigation purposes; and it is very much more valuable when it is used first for power and then also for irrigation or domestic purposes. Therefore, in Arizona and California the waters of the Colorado River are undoubtedly very much more valuable than they are in the upper four States. But because the water is much more valuable to that part of the lower basin than it is to the upper basin, is no reason whatever why the upper basin should be deprived of their rights.

I am only making this comment to show, what seems to me, the ridiculous inadequacy of 25 cents per acre-foot of water for a perfect water right in that climate, to be forever delivered by Uncle Sam as, and when, and where, Arizona wants it.

I assume the Secretary has the authority to fix the price at 5 cents, or at any other sum less than 25 cents per acre-foot, if he so desires.

Arizona also very condescendingly agrees in consideration of this contract to abstain from litigating Uncle Sam, except under certain conditions that are likewise problematical.

Arizona also reserves her right to an additional equitable apportionment of the waters of the Colorado River, if there are any left to apportion.

Arizona also reserves the right to litigate with any or all of the other States, as much and as often as she wants to; to establish the relative priorities and use of the waters of the entire Colorado River Basin in accordance with her wishes.

The contract also includes a very valuable exemption for the benefit of New Mexico, Utah, and Navada. But they hold their grip on Wyoming and Colorado, where the water mainly comes from. In fact, it is the Colorado water that Arizona is after all the way through the contract. If it were not for the water that comes from my congressional district, Arizona would have very little to be fighting over.

The contract provides that the United States shall not even be permitted to transfer any interest in or under the contract without the written permission of Arizona.

They sew the United States up in a bag all right, along with the other six States.

It may be presumptious for me to criticize this contract, because seldom has there ever been a document prepared that has had so long and so much and so many different conferences and considerations as this one has. It is the tentative compromise result of years of intense and exhaustive study by many very exceptionally bright, alert, and capable gentlemen, and every little wording has a meaning all its own.

I imagine the genius who conceived some of the language of that compilation could take three live rabbits right out of a lady's thimble.

I confess it is a kind of weird, guileful, and insidious crosswork puzzle to me.

It begins with eight lengthy "whereases"; then there are about a dozen paragraphs of generalities, followed by about a dozen "provisos", and "nothing herein shall", etc., and "subject to's", all amplifying, modifying, or nullifying something.

As an illustration of my impression of the "now you see it and now you don't see it" character of this uncanny document, I will quote in full the last paragraph, which is given the appropriate number of "23." It is as follows:

MEMBER OF CONGRESS CLAUSE

"23. No Member of or Delegate to Congress or Resident Commissioner shall be admitted to any share or part of this contract, or to any benefit that may arise therefrom. Nothing in this paragraph, however, shall invalidate this contract, if made with a corporation for its general benefit."

If it is deemed necessary in the first sentence to broadcast to the world that there is to be no graft in this deal for any Senator or Representative, why do they immediately follow it with the suggestion to those officials and everybody else that if they care to incorporate themselves for their "general benefit" they will be eligible for a rake-off?

That appears to me a fitting finale for that kind of a "contract."

Where in that contract is there the slightest benefit or consideration, whatever, inuring to either Uncle Sam or any of the other six States? Not a thing.

A contract without a consideration ought to be void.

Where in that contract is there any positive language saying: "That nothing in this contract shall be understood or ever construed to in any way injuriously affect or diminish the rights of any of the other six States under the terms of the Colorado River compact"? Even if it did so provide, it would not protect the upper States.

Where in the contract is there any provision saying: "That this contract is based wholly upon, and only as authorized by and in compliance with, the Colorado River compact; and that the Federal Government shall, under no circumstances, ever be obligated to store or deliver any water to Arizona, or any subdivision thereof, or any organization, corporation, or anyone else, that would in any way or at any time injuriously affect the use of said waters or the rights of any of the other six States under the provisions of that Colorado River compact or otherwise"?

As I read it, there is not a line to that effect or any valid or enforcible protection whatever either to the Federal Government or to any of those six States in all of those 11 pages of ingenious, ambiguous, and skillful phraseology. It is purely a "heads I win, and tails you lose" contract.

Moreover, it seems to me that if you execute the contract proposed you will be overcontracting the entire 8,500,000 acre-feet of water allocated to the lower basin by that compact, which is inclusive of the Gila River.

If I understand the situation correctly, Arizona, Nevada, and California now have acquired, or claim to have acquired, or initiated rights to, practically the full amount to which they are entitled under the allocations by that compact, and that this proposed contract seeks to obtain an additional gratuitous donation to Arizona of 2,800,000 acre-feet in excess of the total amount that the compact provides the lower basin States may jointly have for her use, primarily for power and commercial purposes and wholly at the expense of the upper States.

If I am correct in that, it would not only deprive the upper basin States of any part of their just share of the surplus waters, which cannot, under the compact, be divided until October 1, 1963, but would forever deprive them of all future development, or hope of irrigating any more land than they now have under irrigation. It would also effectually prevent any appreciable amount of water from ever hereafter being diverted out of the Colorado River Basin. Because Arizona would compel it all to flow down to that reservoir to perpetually supply her 2,800,000 acre-feet, there would be no spare water left to divert.

The drought in recent years very forcibly brings these matters home to us, and makes us extremely apprehensive of any special privileges being granted, like Arizona is endeavoring to obtain.

The average annual flow of the stream (exclusive of the Gila River) is now estimated to be about fifteen and one-half million acre-feet.

The entire recorded flow of the stream, during 1934, was only about 4,000,000 acre-feet.

In Arizona's brief in the case of Arizona v. California et al., the Arizona attorneys assert very positively that of the total flow of the Colorado River "9,000,000 acre-feet were appropriated and put to beneficial use in the United States prior to June 25, 1929, and said appropriated water has ever since been, and is now being, used and consumed."

If that statement is true, and I think it is substantially, what possibility is there of the other States ever hereafter acquiring any additional water, if Arizona now obtains 2,800,000 additional acre-feet, and secures a clear title to it, and a preference and exclusive right, to have it delivered to her practically free of charge, and when, and where, and as, she wants it, in addition to the amount she really owns, and the further amount she already claims?

It would simply apportion to her exclusively much more than the entire flow of the river some years, and probably during many years.

I cannot see the slightest semblance of any justice, reason, common sense, fair dealing, or even good faith toward the other States in that kind of an application.

As long as Arizona refuses to sign and approve the Colorado River compact, she has no legal or moral right, in my judgment, to any contract for any amount of water whatsoever, especially when such water as she seeks is impounded by, and is to be delivered from, and through the facilities created by the Boulder Canyon Project Act, which act expressly approved and makes vital the Colorado River compact—the very compact that Arizona always has and still does defiantly repudiate and denounce.

To give Arizona this gratuity would be permitting her to reap a very great benefit on account of the compact, and yet to wholly escape its restrictions, joint liabilities, and proper regulations to the incalculable injury of those other States which are signatory to the compact.

What semblance of right, or justice, or decently fair dealing between States is there in that?

If Arizona does not hope to induce the Federal officials to grant that permission and also donate the money to enable her to obtain a fabulously valuable advantage over the other States by this proposed contract that she never could obtain by, and has no right to, under the compact, she would not be so persistently determined to obtain this contract and get it signed as quick as possible.

To my mind, the whole course of Arizona in this matter is so amazingly selfish and utterly without any appreciable benefit or consideration whatever therefor inuring to either the Federal Government or to the other six States; so wantonly without regard for both the present and future undetermined rights of the other States, as authorized by that act of Congress; so ruinously injurious and destructive of the rights of the other States, and so palpably unwarranted and unconscionable that I believe the United States Supreme Court would enjoin the enforcement of any contract of that character; and I have earnestly advised the representatives of those States to take that course.

That Court will never put that burden upon the present and blight the entire future of six States, to heap unjust and untold riches on their recalcitrant sister.

The States of California and Nevada are not so seriously affected or in such grave jeopardy by the proposed contract as are the upper basin States.

That 2,800,000 acre-feet, plus the Gila River, and plus Arizona's actual appropriations, and her additional claims, would amount to one-half of the entire flow of the stream throughout an average 10-year period.

That would not only greatly jeopardize and seriously diminish even the amount of water that those States have now adjudicated to them and in actual use and to which they are rightfully entitled, but it would outrageously prevent practically all future irrigation and domestic use and all further development in those States.

There are millions of additional acres of good land in those four upper basin States that some day can be profitably irrigated if we are permitted to retain our right to the use of a sufficient quantity of water for that purpose. But if you sign this contract, and your authority to do so is sustained, those States might as well give up all hope of future or further development within the Colorado River Basin.

Of course, you would not for a moment consider inflicting any such an outrageous injury or any injury upon those States of Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, and New Mexico.

But, Mr. Secretary, next to the President of the United States, at this time you have more arduous official duties and gigantic matters in your hands than any other human being in the United States, and it is a human impossibility for you, not being an irrigation lawyer, to give these matters the detailed study and investigation that is necessary to comprehend the enormity of this matter. And the Solicitor of your Department, being a splendid New York lawyer, cannot possibly give this contract the attention it deserves, with all the thousands of other matters on his hands.

From long and serious experience, the West, generally speaking, with all due respect to our friends in the East, North, and South, has a feeling that it is practically an utter impossibility for a nonresident of the arid region to ever fully grasp either the law or the facts of the water-right situation in the Colorado River Basin, or the importance and purport of the relativity of the rights and necessity of those States to coordinate the use of the waters of the Colorado River as between them.

Pardon my presumption in making this statement, but the law of irrigation and water rights is the most important branch of the law throughout the arid regions of the West. It is exceedingly intricate, and rests upon the many different constitutional provisions of the Western States, and hundreds of different statutes and thousands of different decisions of the various courts of those States. And a different condition prevails throughout the vast Colorado River Watershed on account of the Colorado River compact and numerous acts of Congress. That is my reason for writing you as extensively as I am doing.

I say to you, with the utmost deliberation, that if you sign that contract and the upper States do not prevent its execution, Arizona can forever confidently rely upon the Federal courts to compel the four upper States to perpetually send down to her an abundant irrigation and domestic water right, in addition to fabulously valuable power rights, for centuries to come, to the everlasting injury and outrageous wrong of the other six States.

No contract whatever of that kind, no matter how adroitly it may be worded, should ever be given by any Secretary of the Interior to any one of those States.

I hope and believe the 6 Governors, 6 attorneys general, 6 State engineers, and 6 Colorado River Water Commissioners, of those compact States will never be induced to even give a tacit acquiescence to what I look upon as a bold and plain robbery and promotion scheme, and that they will emphatically repudiate it, and make every possible effort to prevent its execution.

If that contract were executed in its present form, some years Colorado would have to pay rent to Arizona for the use of the waters in our own streams.

Frankly, it seems to me that contract would be giving Arizona a billion-dollar bonus for brazenly buccaneering her six sister States for 13 years; and a reward of merit for her persistently refusing to join in a fair apportionment of those waters for the mutual benefit and orderly development of all of them.

As long as that State persists in refusing to enter into the Colorado River compact, she should never have any separate contract of any kind. That State has acquired more than she is entitled to already.

On the 25th of February 1927 I delivered over an hour's speech and answered 60 questions on the floor of the House on the subject of the Boulder Canyon bill and the filibuster against the Colorado River development.

That speech appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 68, part 5, second session, Sixty-ninth Congress, pages 4832 to 4840. I also delivered another extended speech on The Rights of Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming in the Colorado River, on May 24, 1928, which speech appears in volume 69, part 9, Seventieth Congress, first session, pages 9763 to 9766.

I made, I think, a very elaborate and accurate presentation of this entire Colorado River situation and the rights and obligations of those various States, and the damages that are being inflicted upon those States by Arizona's carrying on this long controversy, and I earnestly advocated, as I have many times since, the bringing of a suit in the United States Supreme Court to determine and quiet the respective rights of all the seven States in that stream. If Arizona continues to persist in her present course, I still feel that that is the only effective, honest, and fair way of determining and adjusting the respective rights of all the States and terminating this appallingly ruinous controversy.

In my opinion, Arizona is defiantly determined to get a gigantic portion of that water exclusively assigned to her, to be used for commercial purposes, to the frightful detriment and expense of the rights of the other States; and I cannot believe that you will, knowingly, inflict or tolerate any such irreparable and appalling injury upon this and all succeeding generations of the other six States.

Candidly and with the utmost respect, I feel that no one human being has, or ever should have, the sole power of unalterably determining the limit of the future destiny for all time of those four great upper-basin States of the Colorado River Basin; yet that is exactly what Arizona is desperately trying to obtain before the separate rights of those States to the waters of that stream can be in a legal and orderly manner determined and adjusted, as is specifically provided for by law.

As I said to you in a telegram last summer, when I first heard of this scheme, "that a relay of Arizona politicians has been carrying on and capitalizing this infamous racketeering game against her sister States for 13 years, trying desperately by every conceivable pretext to grab off an enormous amount of water and power rights to which that State has no right whatever."

Arizona's representatives, both in and out of Congress, fought the passage of the Boulder Canyon project bill with a terrifically raging fury for 6 years, day and night; and from the date of its passage to this they have all fought with an equal determination to not only get the benefits of it but to grab off all the benefits of it as near as they can.

Figuratively speaking, they have been precipitately ejected from the United States Supreme Court in Arizona v. California, and the other five States; in 283 U. S. 423; and also in 292 U. S. 341; and the Federal Government now has her hailed into that Court in United States v. Arizona, no. 18, original, October term, 1934, and will probably discipline her some more when that case is decided.

Arizona has also frequently been rebuffed by both Congress and the Secretary of the Interior, but nothing, apparently, phases her remarkable persistence or amazing audacity.

This year in and year out perpetual harassing, jockeying, and juggling with the destiny of six States and the lives of untold millions of people and billions of dollars' worth of property rights is a frightfully expensive and disturbing outrage that should not be tolerated any longer.

Personally, I frankly acknowledge my genuine admiration for the ability, shrewdness, ingenuity, and persistence of those Arizona attorneys. But it is time they should be permanently enjoined and suppressed as an intolerable nuisance and a perennial menace to the peace, comity, and orderly development of her neighbor States.

Section 15 of the Boulder Canyon Project Act of December 21, 1928, is as follows:

"The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to make an investigation and public reports of the feasibility of projects for irrigation, generation of electric power, and other purposes in the States of Arizona, Nevada, Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming for the purpose of making such information available to said States and to the Congress and of formulating a comprehensive scheme of control and the improvement and utilization of the water of the Colorado River and its tributaries. The sum of $250,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated from said Colorado River Dam fund, created by section 2 of this act, for such purposes."

The Reclamation Service has spent over 6 years in that investigation and consumed that $250,000, and has received $100,000 more to complete this investigation. It ought to have been completed sooner, because it is very important and must be completed before any special allocations of the waters of that stream can be rightfully or safely made to any State or for any purpose.

That investigation and report is necessary so that each State may learn what its respective rights, allocations, and obligations are in relation to each of the other States for their mutual benefit in formulating a comprehensive scheme of control and utilization of those waters.

The upper States never will or can know what their rights or liabilities are, to either the lower basin or to Mexico, as long as Arizona is running at large.

The fact that the other States are not a party to that contract does not at all, in my judgment, protect them from the evil effects of it.

The legal status of this matter, I think, in brief is this:

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the Arkansas River case of Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S. 46), held that the waters of an interstate stream should be divided between the two States on the principle of an "equitable apportionment."

In the South Platte River case of Wyoming v. Colorado (259 U. S. 419) the Supreme Court held that the doctrine of "equitable apportionment" was applicable where one of the States held to the common-law doctrine of riparian rights and the other State adopted the policy of the right of priority of appropriation of the waters of the stream for irrigation purposes; and that throughout the arid regions of the West the latter doctrine of priority of appropriation, giving the superior right to the waters pro tanto, applied to all streams in that region from their ultimate sources to their mouths, regardless of State or county lines, topography, or anything else. And that is the law at the present time.

Therefore, from its ultimate source near the northwestern corner of the Rocky Mountain National Park in my congressional district, 1,700 miles down the Colorado River to the Gulf of California, it is one stream, including the Gila River and all other tributaries, from all seven States; and the doctrine of priority of right applies up and down the stream and to all those tributaries within the 244,000 square miles and 156,160,000 acres of that great watershed.

My judgment is that Arizona, not being a party to or bound by the Colorado River Compact at all, and expressly and repeatedly repudiating it, no matter what language you put in that contract, if you expressly give that State your official permission and authority to acquire rights-of-way over the public domain and the use of other Government property and the use of the Boulder Canyon Government-owned reservoir to initiate and perfect that right and bind the Federal Government to forever deliver from that reservoir that amount of water to her as and whenever and wherever she wants it; and that State goes ahead and makes expenditures in pursuance thereof, in reliance thereupon, and in compliance therewith, and diverts, applies, and beneficially uses that water, she will thereby perfect an absolutely lawful appropriation of it; and nothing either in or outside of those 11 pages of involved, adroitly, and ingeniously worded language will ever estop Arizona from consummating and holding that appropriation; and it will always be prior and superior in point of time and right to any and all subsequent appropriations on that stream in the entire upper basin States, regardless of the contract or the compact or anything else.

To me that is as clear as the noonday sun.

You cannot by that contract change the law or the doctrine of priority of appropriation. It required the Colorado River Compact and the approval of those six States and of Congress to change that law; and Arizona is not at all bound by that compact. She has a right to invoke and is invoking and will rely upon not your contract at all, but upon the doctrine of priority of right that is assured to an appropriation, which she expects to make by your permission and assistance and with Uncle Sam's money.

In other words, if, as the Secretary of the Interior, you have the authority to, and do officially, enter into a contract with a State, expressly permitting her to do all the acts and things that are necessary to constitute a valid appropriation of water; and, in pursuance of that authority, she does all those acts, and also complies with the laws of the State in relation to the acquisition of a valid water right, how can the upper States invoke that compact, or contract, or anything else, to nullify that appropriation?

For that reason I say that under the Wyoming-Colorado case, and many other decisions, no matter what language you use, if you sign any kind of a contract, or otherwise permit the doing of the things necessary to constitute a legal appropriation of that amount of water, and the acts are fully performed, it will be a legal appropriation of that amount of water, and that will practically destroy all hope of the upper basin States developing millions of acres of good land that is not yet irrigated.

The six States, not being or becoming a party to the contract—I do not believe they can be estopped from asserting their rights in court, or otherwise, by reason of their merely holding friendly conferences and trying to come to an amicable understanding with Arizona. Nevertheless, I am apprehensive of the grave possibilities of these long-protracted and many negotiations. We are all losing more water all the time.

I do not charge, or mean to imply, any collusion by any citizens of Arizona. But I do feel that there are some other people who are, and have long been capitalizing this long controversy, to their own very large financial advantage, by bringing in large tracts of land in old Mexico under irrigation with our water; and they now are hiding behind the skirts of the Republic of Mexico; and that this long delay in the adjustment of the water rights upon that river has encouraged and made possible the creation of enormous "claims", and the instigation of vast alleged "right of Mexico", which will inevitably greatly injure all of the Colorado River Basin States, including Arizona, for all time to come.

The upper Colorado River Basin States can never be blamed for this 13 years' controversy that has made possible and encouraged the creation and magnifying of those fabulous so-called "claims of Mexico", and those States should never be penalized for it.

No one can estimate the enormous value of the water rights that this long controversy has made possible for Mexico, and some shrewd individuals to acquire from that stream—to the corresponding damage forever to the other six States. Our country and those injured States will have to settle that as best they can hereafter.

Notwithstanding this, Arizona is apparently very industriously endeavoring to make the upper States stand practically all of the Mexican burden; except that she offers to graciously donate a little alkali waste water down near the mouth of the Gila River that she cannot use any more.

In this connection, I understand that some clever individuals are insidiously and indirectly (of course, out of "purely patriotic motives") urging that this contract should be executed as quickly as possible, and give all the remaining unappropriated waters there are, if any, both in the reservoir and the river, to Arizona, to prevent Mexico from acquiring any further rights.

If this be true, in whole or in part, it is a cunning deception, so far as this contract is concerned. This contract is not written for that purpose and will not accomplish that purpose. It is written expressly to prevent the other six States, and more particularly the four upper basin States, from acquiring any further rights in that stream; and giving all the waters of the entire stream, including all its tributaries, as well as the entire remaining storage capacity, absolutely to Arizona, and enabling her to acquire an absolute title to it, and thereby and thereafter forcing all the other six States to pay tribute to her, if they are ever permitted to make any further developments.

If Mexico could be prevented from acquiring any further rights in that stream as against the United States by any contract that you could execute, it seems to me that it would be eminently appropriate for you to immediately execute such a contract, giving all the waters there are available from all sources, storage or otherwise, jointly to the six compact States, to hold in trust, to be apportioned between them in accordance with the terms of the compact.

The House of Representatives, on yesterday, April 1, 1935, passed a bill authorizing the Secretary of State to enter into agreements and to investigate the respective rights of Mexico and the United States to the waters of the Colorado and the lower Rio Grande and Tia Juana Rivers, "for the purpose of obtaining information on which to base a treaty with the Government of Mexico relative to the use of the waters of these rivers."

I hope that bill may become a law and the respective rights of the two nations in those three rivers may be speedily determined and adjusted.

Arizona works on this Colorado River game while the other States sleep. Her very ingenious geniuses have devised a wide variety of schemes for getting away with the Colorado River. This is the worst, boldest, and rawest of any of them.

Of course, Arizona, naturally, wants to obtain as advantageous terms as possible with the Federal Government. But in this legerdemain I cannot believe she really cares very much about the terms of the contract as it affects the other States. I think she has been doing a good deal of "shadow boxing" over the terms of this present proposed contract. All she wants is to persuade the other States into keeping still, while you sign on the dotted line, and she will very quickly do the rest.

I feel that I need not assure you that this letter is not in any way whatever any personal reflection upon you. I have repeatedly and publicly expressed, and now repeat, my genuine admiration for your absolute honesty, very great ability, marvelous energy, and supreme courage. You are rendering a great service to our country, and there is nothing personal in this appeal, and I intend no reflection whatever on my Arizona colleagues in either the Senate or the House.

I am making this individual appeal because of my duty to western Colorado, as I see it, and my half-century of active experience in water-right matters, and my personal knowledge of the enormous value of the waters of that great river, and what its unfair division means to the present and all future residents of those four States. In my judgment, they never should agree to or acquiesce in any contract at all, or even remain silent in this matter. They should at once all join in a most emphatic and determined protest against Arizona's obtaining any contract at all, or any further concessions or recognition, so long as that State refuses to come into the compact and cooperate with each other in a mutual adjustment of the most beneficial and economical use of those waters under the terms of that compact.

For the reasons set forth in the foregoing letter, and in my official capacity as the Congressman from the Fourth Congressional District of Colorado, and on behalf of all the residents within the Colorado River Basin in Colorado and for their protection, I hereby formally and most emphatically object to and protest against your entering into any contract whatever with the State of Arizona in relation to any of the waters of the Colorado River.

If you feel impelled to sign that or any similar contract, I respectfully ask you to withhold its delivery until Colorado, and such other States as may so desire, have an opportunity to apply to the United States Supreme Court for an order restraining its execution.

In conclusion, Mr. Secretary, I measure my words when I say to you, with all the earnestness I can, that no person or power on earth can justify enabling one State to destroy the future development of her sister States; and if you try to take from those six States a very large part of their inherent birthright—property rights that no human being can estimate the value of—and give it to the least deserving one of them, by executing a contract that will enable that State to thereby establish a vast appropriation of water, and acquire a prior right thereto, and also obligate the Federal Government to guarantee that special and preferred privilege by perpetually delivering that water to that State, which can, by no possibility be otherwise than ruinously injurious to and a flagrant violation of their honest rights, you will precipitate interstate ill will, appalling losses, and outrageously expensive litigation that will last until long after you and I have reached the end of the trail down the western slope of life.

I have the honor to remain,

Very respectfully yours,

EDWARD T. TAYLOR,

Member of Congress from the Fourth District of Colorado.

COTTON CONFERENCE

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein an address delivered by my colleague, Mr. CASTELLOW, before a cotton conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by my colleague [Mr. CASTELLOW] before the Cotton Conference held in Washington, D. C., in September 1933:

THIRD DISTRICT CONGRESSMAN PRAISED FOR LIBERAL STAND—REMARKS OF HON. B. T. CASTELLOW AT OPENING SESSION OF COTTON CONFERENCE IN WASHINGTON, SEPTEMBER 1933

As I understand, the object of this convention is primarily to correct the disparity existing between the prices received by the cotton producers for their commodities and the prices they are required to pay for necessities. The enhancement in price of those things which the farmer must buy is entirely out of proportion to the increase in value of the products of his labor. He not only needs relief from this unbearable and unjust situation, but he needs it now. In my section the cotton and seed are rapidly passing from the hands that toiled in their production, and even now is too late for complete equity to be accomplished.

While this convention seems to be in perfect accord in the opinion that expansion of the currency would immediately enhance the price of all commodities and thereby place the producers in better position to liquidate their obligations, this alone isn't the only relief needed; for, unless they can realize a net profit on their products, they would have nothing with which to make a credit on their indebtedness. Credits on past obligations must necessarily be made from the net profits of the present or future. To be sure, if cotton is selling for 40 cents per pound and the farmer could have a bale clear as profit, he might receive a credit therefrom of $200 on his debt instead of a credit of less than $50, as at present prices. But if it cost him 41 cents per pound to produce that cotton, he would have not a single pound to place on that debt. So I therefore contend the farmer not only needs but is entitled to more at this time than a general advance in prices. The detrimental disparity must be corrected.

The handicap under which the farmer has been forced to labor for these many years is the fact that he has been forced to sell in a competitive market and to buy in a protected market. The object of the processing tax was primarily intended to correct this very condition by giving to the producer the benefit of this tax levied upon the consumer. The producers of raw materials constitute a large percentage of the consuming public, and as such have borne their part of a protective tariff levied upon them for the benefit of the manufacturers. So the processing tax was devised for the purpose of giving this unprotected class a similar benefit. But what is the practical result of its functioning? The raising of prices to the consumer logically reduces consumption, and, in addition thereto, the farmer necessarily bears directly his part of the burden incident to the increase. Not only this, the tax so collected is not being applied as originally intended—to increase the prices received for his cotton—but is being used in reimbursing him for the loss sustained in the actual destruction of his property in the production of which he not only labored, but in most instances incurred further indebtedness. Property in the form of cotton has been destroyed, and I understand as clearly as any that if the farmer is reimbursed therefor the burden must rest somewhere, and it does appear that, as usual, it has been placed upon the shoulders least able to bear it, for it seems that the amount estimated as necessary to pay for the destroyed cotton has simply been deducted from the price to be received from the remainder of the crop. To afford the farmer real relief, this burden must be transferred, and the only logical place would be to the common treasury, which means the general public, for a government as such has nothing. It has not a single dollar to give any man or set of men which it does not take from some man or set of men. In the physical world it is impossible to prize anything up without prizing something down. It is likewise impossible to prize up a single ounce more than is prized down.

So it is, therefore, equally essential to determine where the weight will rest as where the lifting shall be applied. This principle, equally true in government, is, I fear, sometimes overlooked. In this particular instance it appears we have committed the error of resting the fulcrum on the very sill we would prize up, and to my mind, there is no cause for surprise that its course has not been definitely upward. For more than a century cotton has maintained the balance of trade in our favor though the producers thereof have received an inadequate share of the benefit. As was so well said recently by the distinguished chairman of this convention, that if the monopoly in the production of this most useful staple had been enjoyed by the people of the North and East, they would have gotten far more profit out of the seed than we have received from both cotton and seed.

Is it, therefore, asking too much that the burden of this tax be transferred as suggested? Our farmers have been and are being called upon to pay their part of tremendous sums contributed to other causes of no direct benefit to them. In my judgment, no better investment could be made by our Government than to assume this obligation and for once give a substantial benefit and render a definite service to that class of our citizenship which has never failed our Government in a time of need and has contributed possibly more than any other to the stability of this great Nation. If it is asking too much, let's not ask it—but, in my opinion, it is not requesting a gift, but seeking a right!

A NEW DEAL IN RADIO REGULATION

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio interview the other evening in which a former Member of this House, now Chairman of the Federal Communications Committee, Hon. Anning S. Prall, participated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following text of radio interview with Hon. Anning S. Prall, chairman Federal Communications Commission, by Martin Codel, Saturday, March 30, 1935:

Mr. CODEL. A few days ago many of you undoubtedly read in your newspapers that President Roosevelt had designated a new chairman to the Federal Communications Commission. This seven-man agency of the new deal, as you know, was created to displace the former Federal Radio Commission and to regulate not only the radio but all forms of interstate and international wire and wireless.

I have been asked to introduce to you the man picked by President Roosevelt as a sort of generalissimo of the Nation's civil communications. He is Anning S. Prall, until recently a Member of the House of Representatives from New York. To be barraged by questions is no new experience for Mr. Prall, who is seated beside me in the studio, for as a leader on Capitol Hill he had that experience with reporters almost daily. My interrogations, however, will be aimed at making you of the radio audience better acquainted with the man who is sworn to serve you.

A glimpse into the public service rendered by Mr. Prall tells quite eloquently why President Roosevelt selected him to head the F. C. C.

Of Dutch origin, Mr. Prall is a native New Yorker. In 1918 he had his first taste of public service, being appointed as a member of the board of education of New York City. For 3 years he served as president of that board. In 1921 he became commissioner of the department of taxes and assessments. Two years later he was elected to Congress, where he served continuously for 12 years. On January 17 the President honored Mr. Prall with an appointment to the Federal Communications Commission, successor to the old Radio Commission. Then on March 11 the President designated him as chairman of the Commission.

That, in brief, is the public service "Who's Who" of Anning S. Prall. He is slightly above average height, has a high forehead with hardly a furrow on it, wears a neatly trimmed moustache that is a mixture of black and gray, has clear blue eyes that twinkle with his ready smile. Always well groomed, he is, in a word, a handsome figure of a man.

Perhaps his outstanding characteristics, noticed by those of us who have frequent occasion to see him, are his quick grasp of the subject at hand and his ready wit. I don't know a readier raconteur in Washington, and from his generous stock of stories he seldom tells one that isn't pat.

Now I am going to initiate Mr. Prall, an old newspaper man himself, having served on the old New York World, into the realm of ultra-modern journalism—the radio interview. This is his first broadcast appearance since becoming chairman of the F. C. C.

Mr. Chairman Prall, let us talk about radio broadcasting first, for it seems to be the subject that touches our listeners most intimately. After your experience as chairman of the Broadcast Division and now as chairman of the full Commission, you must have some definite ideas about broadcasting?

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Codel, aside from my experience as a Congressman and as a member of the New York City Board of Education, I really bring to the Commission the point of view of a layman and business man. I think radio broadcasting is an industrial and social phenomenon quite aside from its scientific aspects. Its progress as an art and an industry has eclipsed anything we might have imagined a dozen years ago. On the other hand, I do not think it has taken the fullest advantage of its cultural, educational, and public-service possibilities.

Mr. CODEL. We seem to be getting into something. What do you mean, Mr. Chairman? Would you suggest some changes in the program menu now being served to radio listeners?

Mr. PRALL. Yes, I would. The bulwark of America is the American home. The success of radio broadcasting depends very largely upon its reception in American homes; therefore if broadcasting is to continue successfully it must present clean, wholesome programs which will be acceptable in, and receive the support of the average American home. My feeling is that we have made more definite progress under our peculiarly American system of private competitive radio programs than has any other country in the world. There is full freedom of speech on the air in America. That is not the case in other countries where the government, and of course the party in power, controls the radio.

Mr. CODEL. But the fault of radio, Mr. Prall, you said you would change some of its programs?

Mr. PRALL. Mr. Codel, long before I had any idea that I might become identified with the Federal machinery that administers radio, I took an interest in certain aspects of its programs. While I was head of the New York board of education, I was in daily contact with young people and the teachers who guide them. I had to deal with every imaginable kind of juvenile problem. There were underprivileged children who required special consideration, and there were youngsters with the spark of genius who likewise required special consideration.

Sometime ago I took a fancy to certain children's programs on the air. While in Congress I frequently visited this very studio of WRC to observe the children's hours. I have always thought that among these children might be a Galli-Curci or Barrymore, whose opportunities are negligible because of family circumstances. Radio offers an avenue for the development of new artistry and talent that has never before been available. The amateur hours now prominent on radio schedules may bring some of this out, but there's even more to the juvenile situation than that.

Mr. CODEL. Have you evolved any new ideas in this regard, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. PRALL. Yes, Mr. Codel, though I must say they are more general than specific, and the actual working out of the problem must be left to experts. While I believe that radio presents an unequalled opportunity for the new development of juvenile talent, I am not sure that it is entirely meeting its obligations with a regard to the effect it is having on the child mind of America. In some cases I am certain that it is having a deleterious effect because of some of the programs that are being presented. I refer to the blood-and-thunder programs so prevalent in the late afternoons. I am not condemning all of them, for I know many that are distinctly educational. I do condemn, however, those that can be compared to the dime novels of the "Deadeye Dick" or "Boy Smuggler" variety.

Mr. CODEL. Well, Mr. Prall, why can't your Commission do something about them?

Mr. PRALL. It is my view that the radio people themselves would do well to eliminate programs that arouse the imaginations of children to the point where they cannot eat or sleep. Good, clean adventure programs can be made educational, and even their commercial messages can be helpful. Now, as to what the Commission can do: Under the Communications Act, as under the old Radio Act, we may not exercise any direct control over radio programs. We cannot censor what is said on the air. That is right and proper, for you can readily see the political consequences if any governmental agency were invested with such bureaucratic powers while any one party is in the ascendancy.

What we can do is maintain a general surveillance over radio stations and networks under our broad authority in the public interest, convenience, and necessity. We can take into account the public interest as a whole, or in part, of the general program structures of the radio stations. If they are consistent violators, we can refuse to renew their licenses. As you know, about a half dozen stations have been taken off the air in recent years because of their failure to live up to proper standards of public service.

Mr. CODEL. Yes, Mr. Prall; but I recall that they were eliminated for quackery or for actually vilifying people and institutions. Isn't education by radio another thing—a matter of seeing that the proper people with proper character do the educating?

Mr. PRALL. Yes, Mr. Codel; but the fullest possible use of radio as an educational medium has not yet been found. I have studied the records of the hearings before our Broadcast Division last fall, and both educators and broadcasters, as I interpret the record, freely admitted that they have not cooperated to the fullest extent. Whoever is to blame, the fact remains that they must get together for a unified program of action. It is our plan to get them together for a national conference under our auspices beginning next May 15.

In my opinion, radio cannot supplant the classroom, but it can supplement classroom instruction very appreciably if properly handled by proper persons.

Mr. CODEL. Well, now, what about the Commission's other activities, Chairman Prall? After all, you have the telephone and telegraph fields under your jurisdiction, too.

Mr. PRALL. I find myself in the position of being a jack of all the communications trades, so to speak, yet I am not an expert in any of them. As you know, I sit as a member of all three divisions—broadcast, telephone, and telegraph. Broadcasting regulation dates back to 1927, but the Federal regulation of the interstate telephone and telegraph is something entirely new. We are moving slowly in the telegraph and telephone fields, for our jurisdiction is supplementary to that of the States, and our fact-finding job may take years. Even now we are going into the telegraph structure thoroughly, and Congress has ordered a complete investigation of the telephone industry.

Eventually we will get to the matter of fair rates for interstate services, for our duty is to the consumer first. Contrary to some views, we are not aiming to hurt the industries that come under our jurisdiction. Together with them, we hope to be able to assure the American people continued efficient and perhaps cheaper methods of communication, whether by wire or wireless.

Mr. CODEL. The newspaper said something about a "new deal" on the F. C. C. with your appointment as chairman.

Mr. PRALL. Yes; I believe they did use that popular term. When I assumed the chairmanship this month we did reorganize somewhat. My distinguished colleague, Judge Sykes, who has been one of the mainstays of radio regulation since he came here with the old Radio Commission in 1927, asked to be relieved of the chairmanship of the full Commission and simply exchanged places with me, as chairman of the broadcast division. Then we shifted former Governor Case, of Rhode Island, over to the broadcast division, and he simply exchanged places with Col. Thad H. Brown, who took Governor Case's place on the telephone division.

Mr. CODEL. What was the purpose of these changes? Are some radical reforms in view?

Mr. PRALL. Oh, I would not say we are going to do anything especially sensational. We all agreed that bringing fresh viewpoints to the several divisions might be helpful all around.

Mr. CODEL. We hear reports every now and then that big reallocations are going to turn the broadcast band topsy-turvy and put stations on different dial settings with different powers. Is there anything in that?

Mr. PRALL. Of course, there are many proposals put before us constantly for this shift and that, and they might affect listeners locally or regionally, but these all have to go through due forms of applications, hearings, arguments, recommendations by our examiners, and the like before we render decisions. That doesn't sound very radical, does it? I will say that we have decided to tighten up broadcasting regulation and enforce our rules more rigidly. That means that radio stations must toe the mark if they want to earn their license renewals. We will not brook any trifling with our regulations. The radio people who disregard them—and I include the broadcasting of harmful and manifestly fraudulent material—are going to be made conscious that there is a board in Washington to whom they must render an accounting. We will punish the malefactors, even if it means their extinction from the wave lengths.

To maintain the high standards of radio programs, to render the most efficient and satisfying service to the people of the country, to aid the broadcasting industry in every possible legitimate way, and to bring to the administration, to which we are responsible, honor and credit in this particular field of its activity, is the purpose of the seven members of the Federal Communications Commission.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As I understand the order of business today, it was for the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE] to address the House; but I am informed, in order to hurry along a bill that is to come before the House, the gentleman from North Dakota very kindly stated that he would make his speech at another time. Cannot the gentleman from Ohio do the same thing?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I have tried three or four times to get a little time on this subject. In view of the time that has been spent here today on other matters, I do not think my request for 10 minutes is unreasonable.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is not my place to object, and I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the deluge of criticism which has been heaped upon the administration during the last few weeks, it does seem a little out of order for anyone to arise in this body and say anything in defense of the administration, but at the risk of wasting some time, I feel that possibly some Members of the House might be interested in some of the facts that indicate that the Government has not quite gone to the dogs. I am not going to make an effort to weed out this entire crop of propaganda. I merely want to talk on a few subjects—the administration's financial policy, the industrial and agriculture recovery agencies, and the foreign-trade policy.

The administration is accused of violating its platform pledge on economy. They quote from the Democratic platform:

> We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent.

They then combine our present normal with our emergency expenditures and declare that we have broken faith. This platform clause was written in 1932 to criticize the kind of Federal Government that existed in 1932. That Government was not engaged in human relief, in saving homes from foreclosures, in salvaging the morals of our young men, or any similar activity. It was indifferent to any human obligations and unconscious of the deluge that was imminent. Its extravagance in this limited field was a national scandal, wholly indefensible in the light of decreasing revenue. In the last Hoover fiscal year the cost of this type of alleged government was approximately $4,000,000,000. In the first Roosevelt fiscal year the cost of these same activities was approximately $3,000,000,000.

The administration is chided because it has not abolished governmental commissions and bureaus. The platform promise was definitely limited to "useless commissions and offices", such, for example, as the commission investigating prohibition, and the Farm Board; one carrying an appropriation of half a million and the other one of half a billion.

The fact that additional governmental agencies and wholesale new expenditures would be inevitable under Democratic control was frankly declared by other clauses in the platform which our opponents, charging bad faith, like to ignore:

> We advocate the extension of Federal credit to the States to provide unemployment relief, wherever the diminishing resources of the State make it impossible for them to provide for the needy; the expansion of the Federal program of necessary and useful construction, effected with the public interest, such as adequate flood control and waterways.

Again:

> We advocate continuous responsibility of Government for human welfare, especially for the protection of children.

Economy in government; liberality in necessary relief. This is the Democratic promise and performance, and no amount of confusion or smoke screen can obliterate this common-sense distinction.

You may talk extravagance if you wish, but you cannot honestly charge bad faith. Before we bewail extravagance too much, let us consider the condition of the country in March of 1933. States, counties, and municipalities that had been carrying on relief were financially exhausted. The great heart of human sympathy had pumped almost dry the reservoir of private charity. When the Roosevelt administration took over this work it took from the citizen local tax and charity expenditures and added to his Federal tax.

Furthermore, is it fair to look at our bonded indebtedness alone, without considering the cash in our Treasury or the value of our investments? No bank or industrial concern would be so foolish. A statement of this character made from the United States Treasury records appears as follows:

Statement of the public debt of the United States

[On basis of Treasury statement, in millions of dollars]

	Last administration		Present
	Feb. 28, 1929	Feb. 28, 1933	Feb. 28, 1935
Gross public debt	$17,345	$20,935	$28,526
Less (cash in Treasury)	74	221	2,081
Net debt	17,271	20,714	26,445
Proprietary interests in Government corporations and securities owned (exclusive of foreign obligations)	520	2,504	[1] 4,474
Debit balance	16,751	18,210	21,971

[1] As of Jan. 31, 1935.

Thus we see that the real primary indebtedness of the United States, instead of being twenty-eight billion, is less than twenty-two billion. A debit balance less than we have carried for many years in the past and nothing to get hysterical about.

Mr. HALLECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. Does the two-billion item represent the profit on the gold transaction?

Mr. HARLAN. About $700,000,000 of that represents profit on the gold transaction. The rest of it is independent of that.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARLAN. I will.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman put in a list of those proprietary interest items?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes. The Treasury report shows that. I will put that in.

[5] Preliminary statement.

[6] In liquidation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does this chart show contingent liabilities?

Mr. HARLAN. This chart does not show contingent liabilities except as reflected by the subtraction of those liabilities from the assets. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. By referring to the contingent liabilities the gentleman refers to the liability of the home owners' loan bonds and the farm bonds. Gentlemen, the homes and farms of this country are the bone and sinew of this Nation. If the time ever comes when the Government of the United States has to pay the bonds secured by those homes and those farms, then it will not make any difference to you and me whether the contingent liability is four billion or four hundred billion; this Government will never pay it, because the Republic of the United States will not be here any more. That is a charge against the homes, and the Government that you and I represent, if it continues, will never pay it; and if it does not, then we do not need to worry about it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] has expired.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Reserving the right to object, and I am not going to object, but the members of the Committee on Military Affairs have been waiting here for over 3 hours, since 12 o'clock, to take up the war-profits bill. I shall not object to the gentleman having an additional 5 minutes, but I should like to ask if the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK] is seeking some time?

Mr. BUCK. I want recognition to make a unanimous-consent request, and that is all.

Mr. MOTT. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire whether, when this oratory is concluded, it is the intention that the House proceed with the war-profits bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes so.

Mr. HARLAN. In view of the delay that has been had on this bill, I will extend my own remarks in the RECORD anyway, and so I will defer the privilege of addressing the House further.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the four billion you mentioned as contingent liabilities, have you included therein or in these figures the service certificates due in 1945?

Mr. HARLAN. Does the gentleman mean the adjusted-service certificates?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. HARLAN. Yes. That has been taken care of in a special sinking fund, unless the Congress makes an appropriation to increase our present indebtedness to the veterans, in which case new bonds will have to be sold.

While speaking of bonds, let us consider interest. The average interest rate of the Hoover term was 3.71. We are now refunding our indebtedness at an interest charge of 2.875. We can now carry a fourth greater bonded indebtedness with the same interest charge to the taxpayer.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] bemoans the lack of confidence in industry. Mr. Speaker, a little more genuine frankness, a few less half truths, a diminution of calamity rumors and ghost stories, and a little less thought to Republican success in '36 might just now be helpful.

Republican propaganda fails to disclose any affirmative program along with its criticism, unless it is to build even higher our present Chinese tariff wall. In 1930 they told us that with the Smoot-Hawley addition to this wall we would "forget that there was a depression in 90 days." The gentleman from Minnesota at that time said:

I believe that with the operation of the new tariff law employment conditions will rapidly become normal and the unemployment slack will be taken up * * *. It will stimulate business by opening factories that will make work for everyone.

On March 11, 5 years later, the same gentleman told us that if we would just give these import duties another general raise "you can end the depression in 60 days." If it were not for the very high personal esteem that I have for all of the gentlemen that have presented these arguments, I should recall that an ancient wise man once said:

As a dog returneth to his vomit, so a fool returneth to his folly.

Their negative program is to wreck the industrial and agricultural organizations. They say that the N. R. A. has injured the little business man. If we define a small business man as one who could not continue in business when his liabilities exceeded $5,000, then the facts do not carry out this contention. From 1928 through 1932, 2 years of prosperity and 3 of adversity, bankruptcies among this class amounted to 10,000 per annum. In '33 this dropped to 7,000, and in '34 to less than 5,000. A decrease of 54 percent under the N. R. A. With the large business men the decrease was less than 46 percent. Among the very large firms with liabilities of a hundred thousand and over, the decrease was but 11 percent.

A recent report of the Envelope Manufacturers Association of America discloses that under N. R. A. big companies in their organization have dropped 7 percent in volume of business, small companies have gained 8 percent, and very small companies have gained 20 percent.

If the N. R. A. is abolished, do the gentlemen propose to return to the good old days when we were cherishing our rugged individualism at the expense of our civilization, or will they adopt a policy of imposing code provisions by law rather than by voluntary contract? Do they favor industrial chaos, or a much more severe system of regimentation? The issue between the N. R. A. and its critics is not a new one with this administration. Senator Beveridge's keynote speech in the Progressive Convention of 1912 contained these words:

We stand for a broader liberty, a fuller justice. We stand for social brotherhood against savage individualism. We stand for an intelligent cooperation instead of a reckless competition. We stand for mutual helpfulness instead of mutual hatred.

Woodrow Wilson commented upon this proposal to control competition through voluntary contracts, as follows:

I said not long ago that Mr. Roosevelt was promoting a plan for the control of monopoly, which was supported by the United States Steel Corporation * * *. The Roosevelt plan is that there shall be an industrial commission charged with the supervision of the great monopolistic combinations which have been formed under the protection of the tariff, and that the Government of the United States shall see to it that these gentlemen who have conquered labor shall be kind to labor.

Woodrow Wilson relied on law. Franklin Roosevelt relied on contract. Neither was wholly successful. But they both progressed. Wilson was followed by the great ice age, when our governmental milk of human kindness was frozen harder than the Rock of Gibraltar. When, in the words of Emerson, "Things were in the saddle and they rode mankind."

The only question before us today is, Shall we use the experience and knowledge which we have gained by our mistakes, if you will, for further advance, or shall we repeat the tragic mistake of 1920, turn our backs on all progress, and invite another devastating panic to awaken us to our human responsibility?

Similarly, our destructive critics tell us that many farmers have not prospered under the A. A. A.; that the processing tax has worked some injustices and interfered with our foreign trade. The party to which most of these critics belong had 12 years to evolve a solution, and their answer was to throw the Government into the grain-gambling business. Their Secretary of Agriculture, at the end of 12 years, publicly stated repeatedly that crop limitation was the only way, but the imagination and courage to put this recommendation into force was lacking.

With sanctimonious fervor, we are told of the unpardonable sin of flaunting Divine bounty by plowing under the crops.

When we reduced the labor day from 12 to 10 hours about a century ago, that same devout intellect was doubtless then abroad talking about the sin of wasting God-given time. Industry, in the interest of efficiency, abandons factories and throws employees out on the streets by improved machinery. In fact, it plows under everything that interferes with its own profits, but we hear no pseudo-religious clamor on that subject. The tariff itself is nothing but a means of plowing under all foreign manufactured produce that might find access to our market. Yet the Democratic Party is taking us all to damnation because we have enabled the farmer to survive by doing what all of his exploiters have done for years.

The A. A. A. is nothing but the farmers' tariff. It is just as abhorrent economically as the tariff. Just as the tariff drives capital abroad and destroys exports, so will the process tax and the crop limitation policy drive agriculture abroad and strangle our export trade. Yet as long as we have this indefensibly high tariff, we will never escape some system answering the purpose of the A. A. A. unless we are willing to accept a pauper peasant class, kept in constant subjugation by a rigorous police power. To argue for a tariff and criticize the A. A. A. is an absurdity fit for the archives.

This brings us to the critical attitude of the opposition on our reciprocity policy. The speech of the gentleman from Minnesota opens up with a wail by a number of Maine potato growers, who are selling potatoes at 50 cents a barrel that cost three times that much to produce. Potato producers have been blessed for years by a tariff of a dollar and twenty cents per barrel, and yet are now selling their product at less than half of the tariff. This is a shining example of the benefit which agriculture gets from our tariff system.

Such schedules have been established solely to jolly the farmers into thinking that they were getting a piece of the mellon, and to keep them voting properly while the industrial interests picked their pockets. A tariff for any industry, either agriculture or manufacturing that produces for export, is nothing but a burden. The only protection so far devised for the farmer is the A. A. A.

Mr. KNUTSON asks us why we have not repealed or radically reduced the Smoot-Hawley tariff if it is so obnoxious. That is exactly what we are trying to do through these reciprocity treaties, but we must consider the capital that has already been invested in tariff-created industries. Stocks and bonds have been sold to innocent people and must not be ruthlessly destroyed. Import quotas and a gradual reduction in duties will allow that capital to drift into other channels to be profitably employed. If we are ever going to escape from this war-provoking, poverty-breeding tariff system, either as a nation or as a world, reciprocity is our only salvation.

Mr. KNUTSON apparently can see no connection at all between the amount of our exports and imports. He insists that there are only two things necessary to enable us to sell in any foreign market—"price and necessity." The fact that the purchasing nation must also have some means of paying our price, no matter how low it is, does not appeal to him as sound economics. He also says:

Under the Democratic theory Colombia should buy as much from us as we do from her, but such, unfortunately, is not the case.

This is not the Democratic theory, nor is it an economic fact; but if it is any Congressman's conception of the Democratic theory, it is no wonder that the people throughout the country have been so consistently and easily misled to their own destruction.

The Democratic theory and the economic fact is that no nation can buy the produce of any other nation unless the purchaser has the wherewithal to pay the bill. There is not enough gold in the world to pay for even an appreciable fraction of the world's purchases. We must have an exchange of commodities, either from one nation to another or in a circuit through many nations.

One of the letters read by the gentleman from Minnesota, protesting against the Cuban reciprocity treaty, says:

The Canadian transportation system and their banking arrangement make it possible for Canada to do the Cuban business in spite of American or Cuban tariffs, and they would do it while we would get in the United States what they have to export, Canada none.

This gentleman had probably read one of Mr. TREADWAY'S earlier speeches. However, we might ask what created the Canadian transportation system? Any sailor can tell you. It was full cargoes going both ways. What gave them their effective banking system to handle Cuban trade? Any bank messenger could tell you. It is the balancing of credits of import and export that makes this kind of banking possible. And no country can have such banking facilities unless there is a current of trade flowing both ways.

The gloomy prophecy that Cuba would not buy our commodities, when she could get Canadian goods, no matter what concessions we made, does not seem to be borne out by a recent Associated Press dispatch:

HABANA, March 16.—The Cuban Government, in a sweeping decree manipulating tariff, set the United States apart yesterday as a privileged trading nation and took from such countries as Japan gains made at the expense of American interests in recent years. * * * American cotton textile interests were handed back one of the choicest of foreign markets.

Nor is this prophecy borne out by the report of our State Department. Taking the period from September to December in 1932 and 1933, and striking an average of these 2 years and comparing that average with the same period of 1934 is most interesting:

The gentleman from Minnesota, who has such a deep interest in Maine potatoes, will be pleased to note that, using the same system of averages over the two preceding years, our exports to Cuba amounted to 16,500,000 pounds; while in 1934, our exports amounted to 30,700,000 pounds, an increase of 86 percent. During much of this period our concession to Cuban growers was in full force, and not one pound of potatoes was sent to the United States. They were only too glad to buy and consume our potatoes and pork if we would let them sell us sugar. When the Cuban Treaty was under consideration the State Department received a larger number of requests from potato growers from Maine and elsewhere urging a reduction in the Cuban tariff. A mutual reduction was arranged, which, in the light of trade developments, ought to be pleasing to all growers having more intelligence than the potatoes they produce.

Mr. KNUTSON cites the fact that Brazil sells us more tangible goods than we sell her, and gives this as a complete refutation of the fact that imports of goods and services must balance exports of goods and services. The facts as to Brazil are obvious to anyone who will take the time to examine international trade balance and take the interest to draw the necessary conclusions.

Brazil has a so-called "favorable balance of trade" with us. We had a favorable balance of trade with England. England had a favorable balance of trade with Brazil. Brazil sold us coffee. We sold England raw cotton. England sold Brazil cotton goods. In this way our cotton that went to England paid for the coffee which we bought from Brazil. In addition to that, the last available figures show that American investment in Brazil amounted to about one-half a billion dollars. Much of that coffee and other imports into the United States constituted dividends to American citizens on that investment. On the other hand, a great deal of our imagined favorable balance of trade with England was paid for by the transportation of our commerce in British bottoms and by money spent by American tourists in England.

The ideas of the gentleman from Minnesota about the effect of the depreciation of our currency upon tariff is fully as interesting as his apparent conviction that a nation can continue to sell indefinitely and buy nothing. He says:

Before we went off the gold standard the American dollar was worth 100 cents, but today the dollar is worth only 59 cents abroad; and as a result the 14-cent tariff on butter, given under the Republican Hawley-Smoot Act, has been reduced to 8¼ cents per pound, and that is the reason that we are having such tremendous importations of butter.

His remedy, as usual, is to increase the tariff. In the Seventy-second Congress England went off of the gold standard, as did a number of foreign countries. We remained safe and secure on the 100-cent dollar and watched foreign countries take our trade from us. At that time a bill was vigorously debated on the floor of the House as to whether or not we should raise our tariff, radically and quickly, to neutralize the effect of foreign currency depreciation, while our currency remained high. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that the gentleman from Minnesota was very ardent for an increased tariff, because our high currency had neutralized protective tariffs. Now he tells that because of our low currency we have wiped out tariff benefits. Apparently it does not make much difference what happens to a country, the sole and only remedy is bigger and better tariff.

Possibly a little common sense might be helpful. When both England and the United States were on a gold standard, the British pound was worth $4.84. If an American wanted to buy English woolens to the value of 20 pounds, obviously he would pay $968. When America left the gold standard, our currency depreciated until the pound was worth $5.50. The same American, to buy his 20-pound value of woolens, would have to pay $1,100. Obviously it is much more expensive for Americans to import foreign goods when our currency is depreciated than when it is high. That is, it is obvious to any but a hopeless tariff addict.

Secretary Roper on this point says, and, so far as I know, his statement has never been controverted by any outstanding economist except the gentleman from Minnesota. I quote:

With the recent devaluation of the American dollar to 59 cents, it now takes nearly 69 percent more dollars to pay for any particular foreign import shipment than it did a year ago, assuming that the foreign price has not changed. There has thus been brought into operation an additional all-around tariff protection or handicap on imports, which has been in only small measure offset by increased costs of production, or prices of produce resulting from the N. R. A. or other recovery measures.

In other words, prices in this country could increase to approximately 70 percent over a year ago before the domestic producer would be under any increased pressure from foreign exports.

Consequently, when we granted to the President the right to lower tariff rates by 50 percent, we have not yet permitted tariff reductions down to the pre-Grundy level.

Speaking of the pre-Grundy days, the State of Minnesota in that happy era had an export trade of $51,000,000. In 1932, the last year of the beneficient regime that fired the tariff shot that was heard around the world, that export trade had dropped to $6,347,000. A reduction of almost 88 percent. One of the greatest percentage losses in the country. Two of her most important exports, pork products, and grain with grain preparations, have received valuable concessions on the part of both Cuba and Belgium. From the results so far achieved, if the reciprocity policy of this administration is allowed to continue, in spite of the activities of the congressional Representative from the State of Minnesota, that State is going to be blessed again with $51,000,000 in exports and more. And we may just as well bear in mind another economic truth, borne out repeatedly throughout our history; as our foreign trade increases, the general economic welfare of the country goes up, and when our foreign trade decreases, the reverse has uniformly been true.

One of the amusing features of all of this tariff discussion is the contention of the tariff advocates that the American wage scale and the American standard of living are due to their policy. About 150 years ago we adopted our first tariff. We had a wage scale in the country at that time. If we can believe the letters of Benjamin Franklin to his friends in England it was an unusually high wage scale. It was utterly useless to try to induce men to go into new manufacturing ventures without paying that scale, and to pay that scale would be impossible with the world price level. Therefore the price had to be raised by a tariff. The wage scale, however, remained the same.

From that day to this there has not been a single industrial lobby asking for tariff that has not demanded this tariff on the ground that it could not pay the wage scale already in existence without increased tariff duties. After the tariff is imposed, then they say, with a straight face, that the wage scale is due to tariff. Labor has been deceived constantly by this argument, in spite of the fact that on every side the American laborer can see more than half of our workers, those in the service industries, in the building trades, and those manufacturing for export, receiving money wages unaffected by the tariff.

Patriotism is another smoke screen that the tariff advocates like to use along with their policy of selling everything, buying nothing, helping agriculture, and protecting the American wage scale. The patriotic angle of the tariff was disclosed in a peculiar way in the speech of the gentleman from Minnesota when he was discussing the tariff on manganese. He made the statement that the Secretary of State had not consulted the War Department when preparing Brazilian treaty provisions as to reducing the tariff on manganese. Investigations disclosed that in the possession of the Secretary of State at the time this treaty was negotiated was a written report from the War Department, of which I quote as follows:

Reports prepared for the War Department in 1924 and revised in 1932 indicate that known domestic reserves of ferro-grade ore are sufficient for only — to — years' requirements, even when the estimate of reserves includes not simply ore in sight but also "probable ore and even possible ore up to the limit of reasonable expectations."

Here we have a natural resource that can never be replaced when exhausted. Absolutely indispensable to us in war, and yet the gentlemen say that we should proceed to exhaust this resource in order to make some immediate profits for the mine owners. Oh, of course, as usual they do not talk about profits; they talk about the number of workingmen that have been deprived of their jobs. In fact, after reading the speech of the gentleman from Minnesota, I was convinced that probably all of the mining population in the United States was engaged in mining manganese. I had formerly thought that coal and copper and iron employed some men.

Investigation, however, on pages 30 and 404 of a separate bulletin of the Census Reports of 1929, entitled "Mines and Quarries", discloses that the figures used by the Secretary of State exactly check. Now this census report was prepared by a Republican administration; it may be just as inaccurate as all of the tariff propaganda, but until something better is shown I believe that it is worth accepting.

The appeal of tariff advocates to patriotism sounds very well when they say that they want the United States to be self-sufficient in time of war. It is completely disrobed, however, when those same advocates insist that we should put a high tariff on one of our most valuable mineral resources. To weaken us for warfare and by tariffs constantly foment commercial war, making military conflicts inevitable, is a peculiar concept of patriotism. Stripped of its false claims of helping labor, of assisting agriculture, and love of country, the tariff reduces itself to the desire on the part of selfish blocs to get their snouts in the trough, regardless of the effect on the country in general.

That is now, always has been, and always will be the basis of tariff no matter what specious arguments are given. [Applause.]

ADJUSTMENT OF TIMBER CONTRACTS, NATIONAL FORESTS

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2881) authorizing the adjustment of contracts for the sale of timber on the national forests, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act authorizing the adjustment of contracts for the sale of timber on the national forests, and for other purposes.

Amendment: Line 8, strike out "May 1, 1933" and insert "June 30, 1934."

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill to which I objected, the bill that had the date changed when it was considered in the House before?

Mr. BUCK. This is the same bill, except the Senate has put back the original date.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The original date of 1934, as against 1933?

Mr. BUCK. June 30, 1934.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object. I thought at the time the only justification for this bill was to relieve the contractors from the so-called "depression contracts", and surely the depression did not continue to 1934; at least we do not want to assume so at this time from the standpoint of official contracts.

Mr. BUCK. I hope the gentleman will reserve his objection for a minute.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know just what this bill is going to cost the Government; I would like to hear the bill explained and have some information as to how many contractors are going to come in under it.

Mr. BUCK. I thought that was all discussed on the floor of the House when the bill passed the House. This bill has passed the House and has passed the Senate. The Senate has put back the original date, June 30, 1934.

Mr. McFARLANE. They brought forward the date; they changed the date by 1 year in the Senate.

Mr. BUCK. This is the bill originally introduced and approved by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. McFARLANE. How much will the bill, as amended, cost the Government?

Mr. BUCK. It will not cost the Government anything.

Mr. McFARLANE. Then why the bill if it does not cost the Government anything; what is the purpose of this bill?

Mr. BUCK. So that the Government may make adjustment of these contracts with concerns that are unable to carry out their timber purchases; so the Government can free the land for resuming operations with other companies.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, is not the date June 30, 1934, 1 year longer than that provided in the original bill?

Mr. BUCK. We explained to the House the other day why this change was made. It was put in there to take care of one corporation which went into reorganization in the State of Delaware without the knowledge of the United States Government. Its contracts for timber had to be rewritten and they were rewritten in 1934, but they cover timber contracted for before and on a predepression basis. The Government has requested that to cover these contracts the date be changed from May 31, 1933, to June 30, 1934, as the Government wants to clean the matter up.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, if there is only one case, why not bring in a private bill?

Mr. BUCK. Why not give this general authority to clean up the whole thing at one time? There is nothing crooked, nothing hidden, about this matter; it is all open and aboveboard.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. That one company wants to get out from under the contract; it is reorganizing.

Mr. BUCK. The timber company does not care anything about it; the Government wants to get it. This is a Government bill; it is not a corporation bill at all.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It seems to me it is a corporation bill, and that the corporation wants to get out from under its liability.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California if this is not different from the original bill they had before the Committee on Agriculture last year, if there is something in it that is objectionable?

Mr. BUCK. Absolutely not. The bill as passed by the Senate is now just as it was reported by your Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The Senate has amended the bill by advancing the date 1 year, to June 30, 1934. As it passed the House, the date was fixed at June 30, 1933.

Mr. BUCK. The amendment of the Senate makes the bill correspond with the way it was originally introduced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object for the time being.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES—OLD SPANISH TRAIL

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of two bills, unanimously reported by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to provide for the coinage of 50-cent pieces for historical celebrations to be held this summer. These are emergency measures, and if they are not passed the mint will not be able to turn out the coins in time. There will be absolutely no expense to the Government. Treasury objections have been taken care of.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6372) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in connection with the Cabeza de Vaca Expedition and the opening of the Old Spanish Trail.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are not these bills on the Consent Calendar?

Mr. COCHRAN. No; they were just reported yesterday, and are emergency bills.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does the gentleman mean to tell the House that the coining of 50-cent pieces is an emergency matter?

Mr. COCHRAN. It is in this instance, because the celebration is going to be held this summer, and it takes time to make the dies and to strike off the coins.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Why were not the bills reported sooner?

Mr. COCHRAN. Because the Chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures has been sick. He authorized me, as the ranking member of the committee, to call a meeting to consider these bills; and I called it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is this for St. Louis again?

Mr. COCHRAN. No; this is not for St. Louis.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman consulted the minority members of his committee?

Mr. COCHRAN. Absolutely. They are unanimously in favor of it.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman taken care of meeting the expense, so it will not cost the Government anything?

Mr. COCHRAN. Everything is taken care of; it will not cost the Government 5 cents.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to indicate the interest of the Government of the United States in commemorating the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Cabeza de Vaca and the opening of the Old Spanish Trail, there shall be coined by the Director of the Mint silver 50-cent pieces to the number of not more than 10,000, of standard weight and fineness and of a special appropriate design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the models for master dies or other preparations for this coinage.

SEC. 2. That the coins herein authorized shall be issued at par and only upon the request of the chairman of the El Paso Museum Committee.

SEC. 3. Such coins may be disposed of at par or at a premium by said committee, and all proceeds shall be used in furtherance of the El Paso Museum.

SEC. 4. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same; regulating and guarding the process of coinage; providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins; for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting; for security of the coin; or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein directed.

Mr. COCHRAN. Under leave to extend my remarks, I insert the report filed from the committee:

The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6372) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in connection with the Cabeza de Vaca Expedition and the opening of the Old Spanish Trail, having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass.

The expedition of Panfile de Narvaez to the North American Continent has been the source of considerable historical speculation. He sailed from Spain in June 1527, with 5 ships and some 700 men. The winter of 1527–28 was spent in West Indian waters, where storm and disease reduced the expedition to 400 men and 80 horses. In the spring of 1528 De Narvaez divided his forces, the greater portion of the expedition disembarked and under his leadership proceeded to explore the interior of the country.

De Narvaez experienced many hardships on this journey. Food was scarce, the Indians unfriendly, the land marshy and heavily wooded, offering small means of sustenance. Horses were killed for food and the skins used for fresh-water bags to make possible a sea voyage. The remnant of the expedition put out to sea and sailed in rude boats along the shores of the present States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas. Food and water failing, the expedition landed to search for the means of subsistence. At sea many had died from privation and on land others were killed by the Indians.

According to the best information obtainable, all the rude barges were lost at sea or wrecked on the coast. Only 80 men survived, and these came together on an island off the coast of Texas in November 1528. Death from various causes and slavery among the Indians separated and reduced the number of survivors during the succeeding 6 years to four Spaniards and a Negro.

Alvar Nunez Cabeza de Vaca, treasurer of the De Narvaez Expedition, was one of these five survivors, and for the most part, we are indebted to him for the recorded story of the expedition and the adventures of the few who were eventually to reach the Spanish settlements of New Spain. The authenticity of the account of the expedition, the hardships endured, and the fact that these finally reached the settlements in the spring of 1536 have never been questioned.

During the first winter after reaching the Texas coast the surviving Spaniards were parceled out among the Indians as slaves. Cabeza de Vaca began early to plan escape but, according to his narrative, delayed 6 years in the hope he might take with him his friend Lope de Oviedo.

Late in the year 1534 all details were worked out for the escape and De Vaca with two friends and the Negro, all being survivors of the original De Narvaez Expedition, made their way, with the help of friendly Indians whom they encountered, from an island—now generally believed to have been Galveston Island—across the continent to the settlements of New Spain. Some of our most eminent historians lay the route of Cabeza de Vaca through the present city of Alpine, Tex., and through the big bend country of the Rio Grande.

Cabeza de Vaca was the first European to traverse this great wilderness and we believe his expedition should be fittingly commemorated by the issuance of the special coin provided by the bill under consideration.

Assurance was given at the hearing that the museum committee will guarantee the entire issue and no coins will be returned to the Treasury. The enactment of this bill will result in no expense to the United States.

Representative R. EWING THOMASON, of Texas, author of the bill, appeared before the committee and gave the members historical data in reference to the Old Spanish Trail, as well as assured the committee there would be no expense to the Government if the bill was enacted into law.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES IN COMMEMORATION OF THE FOUNDING OF HUDSON, N. Y.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6457) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of Hudson, N. Y.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of Hudson, N. Y., there shall be coined by the Director of the Mint 6,000 silver 50-cent pieces of standard size, weight, and fineness of a special appropriate design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the models for master dies or other preparations for this coinage.

SEC. 2. The coins herein authorized shall be issued at par and only upon the request of the committee, person, or persons duly authorized by the mayor of the city of Hudson, N. Y.

SEC. 3. Such coins may be disposed of at par or at a premium by the committee, person, or persons duly authorized by said mayor of Hudson, N. Y., and all proceeds shall be used in furtherance of the commemoration of the founding of the city of Hudson, N. Y., projects.

SEC. 4. All laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same; regulating and guarding the process of coinage; providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins; for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting; for the security of the coin; or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein directed.

SEC. 5. The coins authorized herein shall be issued in such numbers, and at such times as they shall be requested by the committee, person, or persons duly authorized by said mayor of Hudson, N. Y., and upon payment to the United States of the face value of such coins.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COCHRAN. Under leave to extend my remarks I include the report of the committee.

The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6457) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in connection with the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of Hudson, N. Y., having considered the same, report favorably thereon and recommend the bill, as amended, do pass.

The amendment is as follows:

In line 5, after the word "mint", strike out "six" and insert the word "ten."

Representative PHILIP A. GOODWIN, of New York, author of the bill, appeared before the committee and assured the members that the city of Hudson or the committee in charge will guarantee the entire issue and no coins will be returned to the Treasury. The enactment of the bill will result in no expense to the United States.

In connection with the bill Mr. GOODWIN submitted the following letter to the acting chairman of the committee:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 30, 1935.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Acting Chairman Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: In line with your conversation with me yesterday regarding a brief résumé of the city of Hudson's history for the information of the Coinage, Weights, and Measures Committee in connection with bill H. R. 6457, I am pleased to give you below the following statement:

A careful perusal of the journal of the voyage in 1609 of Henry Hudson, in his ship Half Moon, in his endeavor to find a short route via the Hudson River to the Empire of Cathay, shows that on his first visit, he landed at the site of what is now the city of Hudson, in the State of New York. The city bears his name.

Henry Hudson was an Englishman in the employ of the Dutch East India Co. He was the first white man to enter upon the site of the present city of Hudson. History states, "It is a pleasant thought that his descendants have been residents of our country."

The city of Hudson was orginally embraced within the limits of the town of Claverack and of the county of Columbia formed in 1786, and was known as "Claverack Landing."

At an early period of the Revolution, the whale fisheries of Nantucket were broken up by the English marine. In 1783 a considerable number of the inhabitants, desirious of bettering their fortunes, determined to leave it and make a settlement somewhere upon the Hudson River, and these people entered into a compact with articles of agreement providing for its development. The site of the development was Claverack Landing. On February 17, 1785, it was voted that a petition be drafted to be laid before the legislative authority of the State for the purpose of incorporation, with city privileges.

The General Assembly in session in New York on the 22d of April 1785 granted the petition and the city of Hudson received its charter, becoming the third city in the State of New York. On May 28, 1810, the last meeting of the proprietors of the original company met and delivery of their books and plot of the city was made to the clerk of the city for the passage of a law by the legislature for confirmation of all the divisions made by them. At this time the population of the city was 5,000.

The people of the city of Hudson, descendants of these old Dutch and English families, are particularly proud of their old city and its traditions. A very unusual love and respect for their ancestors is existent, and it is my earnest hope that your Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures will grant to the city of Hudson the privilege of a commemorative coin on the anniversary of their one hundred and fiftieth birthday, after a history of loyalty and allegiance to the United States as one of the first cities of this country.

Respectfully submitted.

PHILIP A. GOODWIN, M. C.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed without amendment to a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

WAR PROFITS

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 133 from the Rules Committee provides for the consideration of H. R. 5529, presented by the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs for the purpose of taking profits out of war.

This resolution is an open rule without restriction, providing for 4 hours' general debate in the Committee of the Whole House and allowing amendments to be offered under the 5-minute rule. The Rules Committee believed this was a question of sufficient importance that the Committee on Military Affairs should be given the opportunity to present this bill for the House to consider on its merits.

This is a matter of current interest growing out of the investigation of the Senate committee concerning the profits that were made in the World War and profits that have grown out of all wars because of advantages taken in those particular times of distress. The World War was not different in this particular from other wars. In view of the current interest that has been taken and the discussion that is being had in the public press, and understanding that a bill is pending in the other body similar to this one, we believed that the House at this time might consider the bill under the open rule which is brought in here at this time. We believe that this is an opportune time for the House to take the matter up. There is nothing about the rule that is restrictive, and the merits of the bill may be discussed in the liberal time allowed for general debate.

Mr. Speaker, the Rules Committee has no further explanation to make of the rule unless someone desires to ask questions.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose this rule, not because it is in any way unfair, but because of the fact I believe it is inopportune. It is not a "gag rule." As a member of the Military Affairs Committee I did not oppose the McSwain bill. I believe there is a great deal of merit in the bill. I believe that the purposes of the bill are laudable and proper and should be considered by this House. I also very deeply regret having to oppose a bill offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCSWAIN]. He is an honorable, thoughtful, and courageous gentleman, and we all love him. As I stated, I regret very much having to oppose this bill, but I desire to call attention to certain portions of it.

In the report made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCSWAIN] it is stated:

> This bill is a statement of broad policies and is deliberately intended to avoid the mistake of seeking to legislate as to details so far in advance of the possible outbreak of war.

I am not talking about the merits or demerits of that portion of his report, although I will get to the point in a minute. The gentleman says further:

> It may be objected by some that H. R. 5529—
> The McSwain bill—
> does not provide for the levying of an excess-profits tax during the period of the war. The explanation is simple and complete.

One of the main proponents of this bill has been Mr. Barney Baruch. I do not think Mr. Barney Baruch has anything to do with this House. We are thoroughly able to take care of ourselves. But Mr. Baruch, it seems to me, gave different testimony before the Senate committee than he did before the House committee, or at least he added to his testimony.

Senator VANDENBERG asked Mr. Baruch this question:

> I just wanted to raise a point in that connection. I hold great respect for Congressman MCSWAIN, and I know he wants to go the length in any program, but the McSwain bill by itself has been held out as a successful answer to the problem of taking the profit out of war, and I think the McSwain bill by itself is utterly inadequate. Is that so?

Mr. Baruch said:

> Quite so; because it must be accompanied by this tax program, or you do not get anywhere. You are where you were before. You might keep the prices from going up, but you won't keep the profits from going up.

The reason I refer to this proposition is because I do not want to see the House get into a legislative jam. It is my opinion that this bill will not pass the Senate at all; in fairness, I believe the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCSWAIN] differs with me on this point. It has no chance of being passed by the Senate, and I know that the Senate cannot originate the revenue portions of the bill. However, the provisions are in the Senate bill that has been prepared by their Munitions Committee and which will be submitted very soon. If we pass this bill and it is rejected by the Senate, like the relief bill, it will be "confereed" to death. It will be "confereed" for the rest of the session. Then there will be no bill at all, and we will fail.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this resolution will be voted down. I am not going to indulge in any dilatory tactics. I believe that in a few days our committee could agree with the Senate committee and then bring out a bill that is suitable for our consideration.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. Assuming that Mr. Barney Baruch had a hand in drafting this bill, he condemned his own bill before the Senate committee?

Mr. MAVERICK. I think that is correct. At least, he gave some additional information. I did not vote against the bill in the committee, being silent, and you may also say that I am condemning myself.

Mr. CULKIN. Before the Senate committee Mr. Baruch said that the McSwain bill is inadequate to take the profits out of war.

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes; he said that.

Mr. Speaker, I now want to call attention to the Senate bill. Title I has "Tax provisions", title II has "Industrial management provisions", title III has "Commodity control provisions", title IV has "Security exchange provisions", title V has "War finance control", and title VI "War resources control." These are not covered, except slightly and in part, by the McSwain bill.

I do not say that the McSwain bill is totally inadequate, but as it appears to me, without the other safeguards that are offered in the Senate bill, it merely guarantees the profits of war.

Of course, this is just my opinion, but the fact that I give this opinion and the fact there is some controversy on this point, it appears to me it would be better that we recommit the bill, and after recommitting it, then the Military Affairs Committee could consider it and quickly come to some agreement. Then we would be assured of final passage by both Houses and of really accomplishing something fundamental.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Is there anything to prevent amendments being adopted such as my friend from Texas has suggested?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes; the bill of the Senate is not germane to this issue. In other words, part of the Senate bill concerns revenue and is not germane to the McSwain bill.

I had an amendment which I might have offered, but I do not think I shall offer it, because I do not think we will have adequate time to prepare the bill. The amendment would provide that revenue matters could be brought in as amendments to this bill. In other words, this bill cannot be amended now because the matter that the gentleman suggests is not germane to the bill, and this is the reason I believe it should be recommitted and then brought out on the floor again.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to the distinguished and able gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. If we vote down the previous question we will then have an opportunity to amend the rule and make such an amendment in order.

Mr. MAVERICK. That is what we ought to do.

Mr. MERRITT of New York. Is the Senate bill the same as the McSwain bill with the exception of additional amendments?

Mr. MAVERICK. It is a much longer bill, and I think it has been very carefully prepared.

Mr. MERRITT of New York. Are there any component parts of the McSwain bill in the Senate bill?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes; practically in the same words, but essential taxing provisions and various controls are omitted.

I am not condemning the McSwain bill, but I believe there are additional provisions that should be in the bill, such as the revenue feature, heavy taxation on war incomes—in short, the elimination of profits—and I believe the Senate provisions will make it a more adequate bill. If we pass this bill and it is rejected in the Senate, then it will get in a log jam in the closing days and we will go home without having done anything, and I believe the people of the United States want us to do something about this question.

Mr. MERRITT of New York. Is the gentleman satisfied that if we amended the McSwain bill to conform with the language of the Senate bill it could pass this House and the Senate?

Mr. MAVERICK. I do not know whether it could pass or not, but I think the provisions ought to be before us with respect to excess war profits, commodity control, and so forth. It should be done now, not later.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. FADDIS. I just want to ask the gentleman if he ever heard of a piece of legislation that was so complex that it could not be passed?

Mr. MAVERICK. I am a new Member of the Congress and I do not know much yet, but I am learning fast. [Laughter.]

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. This is a draft bill, is it not?

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman means the Senate bill?

Mr. TRUAX. No; the McSwain bill.

Mr. MAVERICK. I would rather not express an opinion on that; but it looks that way. That is the reason I would like to see the bill recommitted. Certainly that question enters into the matter, but I do not want to discuss the merits of the bill on that point.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes.

Mr. MONAGHAN. The specific language of the bill contained in section 3 makes it constitute a draft measure disguised under the veil of being a conscription-of-profits measure. The specific language of the bill makes it nothing more than a sugar-coated draft measure, and so far as taking the profits out of war is concerned, it will do nothing of the kind, and is likely to guarantee the profits, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] so well stated.

Mr. MAVERICK. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. MONAGHAN. It certainly guarantees a draft of men during war, and because of its broad language, such as "the unorganized militia", which is more of a conscription of labor than anything else.

Mr. MAVERICK. I would rather not go into that, because I believe if the bill is amended, your point will be met, and everybody is going to be satisfied. The bill needs clarification and the provisions of the Nye Senate bill.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Does not the bill in its present form, in case of war, conscript labor?

Mr. MAVERICK. Now, we are debating the rule, and I do not want to go into that. That question is for debate on the bill itself. That is the reason I think the rule should be defeated.

I want to make this further appeal to you. I do not pose as a war veteran, because the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCSWAIN] is a war veteran also. I think every Member in this House—on both sides of the House—is thoroughly conscientious about this, but Congress has been in session now for about 3½ months and I have not seen a great deal of fundamental legislation enacted. I am not appealing to, nor catering to, the Republicans when I say a great deal of fundamental legislation has not been passed. I should like to see this measure fundamentally rectified before it comes before the House, and this is the reason I oppose the rule.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman is a member of the committee?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I notice in the bill the term "unorganized militia" is used. In the opinion of the gentleman or in the opinion of the committee, does that mean all the people of the United States; that is, all males between the ages of 21 and 31?

Mr. MAVERICK. I believe it could be so interpreted.

Mr. SISSON. Then the bill means the conscription of labor does it not, fairly and squarely?

Mr. MAVERICK. I think it can be interpreted in that way and that was the practical effect during the war.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 more minute.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman will carefully read the language of the measure, the proposal is to draft into the military service of the United States and not to draft for the purpose of laboring at all.

Mr. MAVERICK. I understand the purpose; but it says "unorganized militia."

Mr. SISSON. It does not say simply in time of war, if the gentleman please, but at any time "an emergency" is declared to exist by the President.

Mr. McSWAIN. No; whenever an emergency is declared to exist by the Congress.

Mr. MAVERICK. I want to make this final bipartisan or nonpartisan or multipartisan appeal, that this bill has no connection, so far as I know, with any party; except that Mr. Roosevelt, and I suppose Mr. Hoover, are in favor of taking the profits out of war. As a matter of fact, every person on earth who has the tenth part of decency wants to take the profits out of war. Everybody is in favor of the principle, of course, and I should like to see the bill recommitted for the purpose of rectifying the provisions that are in it now, so that we may make it positive and certain, and do a complete and thorough job of it. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], who just preceded me, made such an excellent summary of my own proposed statement that I do not know that I shall occupy more than a couple of minutes.

In stating my opposition to the rule and to the bill as it is now, I think it only fair to say that the Chairman of the Military Committee [Mr. McSWAIN] should have the gratitude of every Member of Congress interested in this matter for the consistent and persistent educational work that he has done in all these years since the war, to promote this idea of eliminating profits out of war. [Applause.] I feel that we have not the time that should be devoted to this subject since the bill was acted upon in committee.

There were some differences of opinion in the committee—not serious.

I questioned General Johnson—and he answered frankly—whether or not the bill did not practically guarantee a profit, and that contains various elements which have been exploited in the last few days before the Senate committee.

There is not a Member of Congress who does not read one or more daily newspapers, and they must realize that certain admissions have been made that are dangerous, and have been specifically given.

So that if I can convince this House, when the measure is being considered under the rule, if it is adopted as it is now drawn, that its adoption would permit the guaranteeing of profits, upon the level of the high cost of producing material, and would thereby permit low-cost producers with their advantages in the facilities they have to get raw products, in their transportation facilities, and in their closeness to the terminal markets, and the other things that enter into the lost cost of producing advantage, to pile up tremendous profits in time of war, I believe this body will realize that instead of relieving a war-time psychosis we will actually continue a situation which will hold out an incentive to these tremendous, powerful interests, and foster a situation that will give them a Utopia of profit greater than the wildest peace-time prosperity possibly could offer them. That is the situation, and that is why I hope the committee can have more time. I know the chairman of the committee, with his convictions and courage, will gladly accept some of these amendments after we have had an opportunity to study the Senate testimony and recall some of those witnesses, and I hope we can give deliberation to this matter and not act hastily.

Mr. McSWAIN. Is not the purpose of bringing the bill to the House to profit by proposed amendments?

Mr. KVALE. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman ought not to condemn the measure now.

Mr. KVALE. I do not feel the bill is so drawn that it can be amended successfully in the brief time that we can consider it, and I feel it is due the committee, as a servant of this body, that it be given further opportunity to study this and bring back a perfected bill for action by the House.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Is it not a fact that the only way to properly amend this bill is by inserting a tax provision taxing the profits out of war?

Mr. KVALE. That is only one of the amendments.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And if this rule is adopted, and unless we are permitted to amend the rule so as to make the inclusion of a tax provision germane, we cannot subsequently amend it.

Mr. KVALE. That is only one of the amendments indicated. I think the committee should have further opportunity to study the measure. That is my only plea at this stage.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does not the gentleman think if this is referred back to the committee that within 2 or 3 days, or at most a week, we could complete this in a satisfactory way?

Mr. KVALE. That is my hope and confident belief.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I commend the Military Affairs Committee for bringing forward legislation on this subject. I know that they have given the matter much study, and many of us have during the past 16 years since the last war. However, in the few minutes I have I shall address myself to the rule now pending under which, if it is adopted, it will be possible only to amend the bill before us in a very limited way. I have talked to the Parliamentarian of the House as to whether we could offer tax amendments to this House bill, and he says we cannot. Under the testimony of Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, given before the Senate Munitions Committee, he testified—Senator VANDENBERG asked Mr. Baruch this question:

> I just wanted to raise a point in that connection. I hold great respect for Congressman McSWAIN, and I know he wants to go the length in any program, but the McSwain bill by itself has been held out as a successful answer to the problem of taking the profits out of war, and I think the McSwain bill by itself is utterly inadequate. Is that so?

Mr. Baruch said:

> Quite so; because it must be accompanied by this tax program or you do not get anywhere. You are where you were before. You might keep the prices from going up, but you won't keep the profits from going up.

We do not want to do a futile thing here, and I am sure the House does not want to place itself in such a position that it cannot enact the legislation it wants on this subject. Under these circumstances this legislation now pending is worthless and would be a sham and a farce for us to enact it. There is no use of beating the devil around the stump. If we cannot amend it adequately, we better get ourselves in shape before we tie our hands here so that we cannot amend it. We had better amend this rule so that we can place adequate amendments upon the bill, so that we, as Democrats and Republicans, and as Americans first, can legislate without our hands being tied. God knows that we in the House the last two Congresses have not done anything but tie our own hands so that we cannot work. [Applause.]

It is time for this House to wake up and realize our responsibilities to our constitutents and assume these responsibilities and stop legislating under gag rules we know will not permit the free and frank consideration of legislation on this floor that should be given to it. That is the whole proposition now pending. I know this great committee has done splendid work on this subject and I congratulate them on the work they have done on the procurement of aircraft and other subjects which they have had before them in investigating the rackets going on down here in a couple of these departments in the matter of the procurement of aircraft and other things. But on this proposition it seems to me my colleague from Texas, Mr. MAVERICK, as a member of this committee, has adequately stated the case now pending. Mr. Baruch was the Chairman of the War Industries Board, and he ought to know more about this subject than any of the rest of us. He says this bill will promote and insure profit.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Will the gentleman give us the page in the minutes that will show such a statement?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; Mr. MAVERICK has a complete transcript of his testimony before the Senate Munitions Committee and read certain parts of it here on the floor. Earlier in my remarks I quoted part of this testimony.

Mr. TRUAX. Is the Baruch the gentleman refers to the same Baruch referred to by Father Coughlin as Bernard Manassas Baruch?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; this is the same Mr. Baruch.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I decline to yield further. Let us get down to the proposition. I believe I speak the sentiment of the House, as it has been expressed here repeatedly, that we are honest in wanting to take the profits out of war.

We want to put capital on the same basis as man power. [Applause.] That being true, let us not tie our hands before we start into this proposition by adopting a rule that will prohibit any tax amendment that would really make a decent bill out of it. That is all there is to it.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Is not the proper way to handle this problem the method that has been proposed by the Nye bill?

Mr. McFARLANE. There is no doubt about that. I have a copy of the Nye bill before me. It is adequate to meet the situation. This little four-page pamphlet that we now have before us in the House is not adequate to meet it. It contains no tax provision nor any of the many other necessary mandatory provisions to adequately cover this subject matter, and under the rules of the House we cannot offer the Nye bill and make it germane to this bill. If we adopt the rule we cannot amend the bill in that way. We should vote against the previous question and then amend this rule so that we can offer tax and other amendments such as contained in the Nye bill. Then we will have a bill adequate to cover this subject. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to this rule. The bill does not legislate as to detail. It is merely a statement of broad policies. Therefore, for the reasons given, and having no demand for time on this side, I yield back to the gentleman from Indiana the balance of my time.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I would like to know whether or not, if the Senate puts in a tax provision, it is within its power to do so.

Mr. McFARLANE. No.

Mr. CELLER. So that if there is a tax provision in the Senate bill it may be out of order, and if there is no taxing provision in the bill before the House, then we will have no legislation of a taxing nature whatsoever.

Mr. GREENWOOD. It could come into the House under a special rule, as I understand it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, there has been considerable argument presented here to defeat this rule. Now, the Rules Committee held a two days' session on this matter when it was presented by the Committee on Military Affairs. Not one of these gentlemen or any member of the committee appeared to object to this rule. I think it is due, as a courtesy to the Committee on Military Affairs, that the House consider this bill upon its merits.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. In just a moment. This is an open rule and any amendment that is desired may be offered.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. In that regard, I think the gentleman will admit that we could not offer any tax provision on this bill.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I do not know what amendments will be offered.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am asking the gentleman this question: Can we offer a tax provision?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Well, I do not think so, under this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. But this bill was not proposed as a tax measure, and tax measures ordinarily come from a different committee than this committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand; and that is why it is not germane.

Mr. GREENWOOD. At a later date, if a rule is wanted on a tax measure in connection with this matter, it can be presented to the Rules Committee, just as the Military Affairs Committee came and asked for this rule.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman permit me to offer an amendment to the effect that we may offer that kind of an amendment? I have it already written.

Mr. GREENWOOD. As far as I am concerned, you may offer the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD] if this is not the most liberal rule that the Committee on Rules could report, unless we went further and made something germane which the committee did not ask for?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman is correct. There was no request made by anybody to change this rule or to make any other provision germane. We should hear this bill upon its merits; and then, if you are not satisfied with the bill as amended, you can vote the bill up or down; but do not vote the rule down before the committee has even had an opportunity to present the bill on its merits, or before any amendment has been offered. Neither should we prejudge what the decision on a point of order may be, which the Speaker has the right to decide when the time comes in this connection.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Can the gentleman see any purpose in considering a measure in this House that is merely a vain gesture, or even worse than a vain gesture? It is doing an obnoxious thing under a coating of an admirable principle.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Well, that is the gentleman's own impression, and he undertakes to speak for the House. My contention is that the House should hear this bill on its merits, and make up its conclusion whether it wants to vote the bill up or down after it has heard the bill on its merits.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. This is an attempt, as I understand it, to take the profit out of war, is it not?

Mr. GREENWOOD. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. KELLER. As a matter of fact, this bill does conscript labor, does it not?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I would not say that. Had we not better wait and hear the bill discussed on its merits?

Mr. KELLER. If it does conscript labor and does not conscript capital, then it certainly does not take the profit out of war, does it?

Mr. GREENWOOD. That goes to the point I have raised, that you should consider the bill on its merits, and vote it up or down after those questions have been discussed and settled by debate and consideration of the bill.

Mr. KELLER. Why not permit an amendment to the rule which will permit the amending of the bill along that line?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I have no authority to decide that question.

Mr. KELLER. Would the gentleman permit an amendment of that kind?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I am trying to arrive at the parliamentary situation and the attitude of the Committee on Rules. Does it not appear to the gentleman that if the Committee on Rules, after having reported out the rule, discovers that under its rule it is impossible to consider the bill on its merits, and the merits of the pending bill are the taking of the profit out of war, that the rule should be amended? If it is suddenly discovered that an amendment which would do this very thing would not be permissible, is it not the duty of the Committee on Rules to ask that the rule be recommitted to them?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I do not think so. The gentleman assumes one position. Perhaps the House will agree with him and perhaps it will not. We should decide on the rule and then consider the bill on its merits. I have no authority to send this rule back to the Committee on Rules under the assumption the gentleman states.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. The gentleman's own statement was that an amendment which taxed profits could not be considered under this rule if the rule is adopted.

Mr. GREENWOOD. My contention is that any bill on taxation must come from the Committee on Ways and Means and not from the Committee on Military Affairs; that proposed legislation must come from the committee the rules provide should handle the subject matter of the legislation.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. That is agreed. I understand that thoroughly; but I now arrive back at the point I started from, the question of parliamentary procedure, the impossibility of getting such a measure out of the Ways and Means Committee. The possibility being so remote, is it not better to start this thing right? Why does the gentleman insist upon this rule when it is not broad enough to meet the situation?

Mr. GREENWOOD. All questions of taxation should come from the Committee on Ways and Means. Germane amendments may be added to the bill, but new legislation in the nature of taxation should not be offered from the floor of the House as an amendment to a bill before the taxing feature has been properly considered; and the Rules Committee does not propose to go that far.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The fact of the matter is this is the ordinary rule which brings the bill before the House for general debate; and, if it is adopted, the usual procedure will be followed where every member of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union may offer any amendment he desires.

Mr. GREENWOOD. That is right; this is an absolutely open rule to consider the bill on its merits. Why should we reject the bill before the committee has even had an opportunity to present the bill?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, it is clear there are different methods being considered by the House which would bring about taking the profits out of war. The gentleman knows that if we consider this bill under this rule, under the general rules of the House then we cannot consider any method except the method here proposed.

Mr. MONAGHAN. That is exactly correct.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has said it is an open rule. It is not an open rule so far as accomplishing the purpose of taking profits out of war is concerned, and we shall find ourselves in the position of having to vote "yes" or "no" without an opportunity to make the bill accomplish its purpose.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield to the gentleman to make an extended speech. I desire to conclude. As I say, this was not intended as a tax measure, coming from the Committee on Military Affairs. The bill should be considered. Any amendment that is germane, of course, may be offered. Nobody appeared before the Rules Committee asking us to bring out an unusual rule to permit the offering as amendments of any matters that were not germane. Of course, the Rules Committee did not bring out such a rule.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me time when he has finished to submit a unanimous-consent request to insert in the RECORD a copy of the Senate bill, together with an explanation of it? It should be in the RECORD in order that every Member may have it.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I shall do so; yes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I notice a letter in the hearings from the national commander of the American Legion wherein he compliments the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs for reporting a bill which will take the profits out of war. In the testimony of Mr. Baruch he spoke of taking the profits out of war. The statements of the President say, "take the profits out of war." Will the gentleman state that this bill that is now before the House will take the profits out of war?

Mr. GREENWOOD. That is for the committee that brings in the bill. This is supposed to be argument on the rule, and these arguments on the merit of the bill came in somewhat irregularly. If the gentleman will propound that question to the chairman of the committee, I am sure it will be answered. I am going to yield him time in which to answer it.

Mr. CELLER. Is the gentleman willing to answer it himself?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Indiana is through, may I suggest that he yield the balance of his time to the chairman of the committee? I think the House should hear the chairman of the committee explain this bill. They will then be in a better position to know what to do.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I will be very glad to do that, inasmuch as there is so much difference of opinion as to the effect of the bill; but first I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK].

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I do not expect to consume any time whatsoever. I have here a statement as to the Senate bill, an explanation of it; and I ask unanimous consent to insert this explanation in the RECORD at this point, together with a copy of the Senate bill, in order that all Members may have the bill before them tomorrow.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the Nye bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes; it is the Nye bill.

Mr. MERRITT of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me this bill can be had by any Member of the House; why put it in the RECORD?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It cannot be had, because it is just a committee print; copies are not available in the document room.

Mr. KELLER. That is correct; I know, for I tried to get one there, but could not.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not, is not that a further argument for the defeat of this rule; in other words, that the House Membership should be given the opportunity to review the testimony taken by the Senate committee in connection with the Senate, which it has not had an opportunity to review?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I do not take that position. I believe that every Member should have the opportunity to know what has been done heretofore by both the House and Senate committees so that we can all vote in a more intelligent manner on each and every question that is presented on this rule and this bill which is supposed to take the profits out of wars.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to by Mr. ZIONCHECK follows:

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON MUNITIONS

The Senate Munitions Committee today released the following statement in regard to the bill before it to control war profits, together with a summary of the bill and the committee print of the bill:

STATEMENT

The committee now has before it a full bill intended to pay the costs of any war as it is carried on instead of engaging in huge borrowing operations. The bill intends to prevent the profiteering possible in war-time inflation and the chaos certain to come in post-war deflation.

It starts with a declared intention of Congress that no person shall profit in any manner from the conduct of a war, and proceeds to make that intent effective by the prevention of inflation by industrial mobilization and by high taxes to supplement price fixing.

The committee cannot guarantee that this bill will not be repealed under pressure at the beginning of a war. It cannot honestly guarantee that its administration will remain uninfluenced by the pressure of huge and recalcitrant corporate taxpayers. It can simply state that given the conditions of no repeal and efficient, honest performance, it will do more than any other proposal before Congress to limit profiteering and to avoid the disastrous and possibly catastrophic results of another post-war deflation.

This bill is intended to check profiteers and prevent grasping groups, strategically placed, from using a national disaster to press still further the immense concentration of wealth which oppresses the Nation. It is something more than that. It is a plan to protect our whole economic society—rich and poor—from the economic disturbances which result from war. At the same time, by universal use of all our resources it makes the national defense invincible.

The devices employed in the bill are based upon realization of the fact that war, in addition to being a calamity, is also a vast, big industry. It is an industry which has always been carried on with borrowed billions. These huge borrowings, flooding into our economic society, produce an immense and uncontrollable inflation.

This inflation puts billions of fictitious purchasing power into the hands of employers, employees, Government workers; and this swollen, false purchasing power, pressing upon our economic system, drives up prices, then earnings, then wages, then prices again, and so on in an endless and finally disastrous spiral.

In the end this forces more borrowing, and hence more inflation, and in the end, as the war ends, leaves the nation exhausted economically as well as physically, so that even success in the field of battle may leave only a barren victory, followed by an appalling catastrophe at home as the inflation collapses.

Beyond this is the crushing burden of debt which we ask our children and grandchildren to bear. Already we have passed to the young men and women of this generation sixteen billions in debt from the last war. We have piled on that another twelve and a half billion to pay for this depression. How many more we will add no man can say. If upon this appalling weight we attempt to load on them another mountain of debt for another war, can we suppose that they will accept the burden? There is a danger that such a war, paid for by borrowing, accompanied by the manifest injustices of the last struggle, may bring this Nation to the verge of revolution. It may be expected to lead, at the very least, to a repudiation of all internal debts.

This bill seeks to avert these possible calamities by doing away with the original cause of the inflation. That cause is the creation of a great war debt to pay for munitions and war material. The inflation does not come from high prices. The high prices are the fruit of the inflation. The disaster cannot be prevented by checking the prices. There must be check of inflation, and hence borrowing. We propose that the Nation shall pay for its war while it fights. The armies in the field will fight the Nation's battles. The armies' civilians behind the lines will pay the bills.

This bill is an attempt to carry out that policy—a policy which, we believe, every American of every party and of every economic school will endorse—the policy of paying for the war, as far as possible, out of current taxes.

The bill is drastic because war is a drastic thing. The tax collector who comes for one man's money is not nearly so solemn and forbidding a visitor as the draft officer who knocks upon another man's door for his young son. No individual will be permitted to earn more than the salary of a major general in the field. No corporation will be permitted to retain more than 3 percent of profit on its capital after interest on its bonds have been paid. All the rest will be taken to pay for the war. The war-time taxes on individuals are to be far higher than they ever have been before, and the exemptions are to be lower. It is the intent of this bill clearly and honestly to let every person in the country know that he will be expected to bear a large share of the burden of any war. (A description of the individual tax schedules is contained in the attached summary.)

The plan proposes to remove all commodities from the field of speculation. Commodity exchanges may be closed, while the Government may fix the prices of basic commodities and become, if necessary, the clearing house through which all such commodities will flow to those processors who need them for the most essential purposes.

The Government will have the power to fix prices and to commandeer property where necessary for war purposes.

With such a program, the Government cannot permit those industrialists who are not willing to work because their profits have been curtailed to go on strike. Therefore, when war is declared, immediately every officer of an essential corporation will be subjected to a draft of industrial managers. If their plants are deemed essential to the war, the President may induct them into the Military Establishment at grades not to exceed that of brigadier general, with the pay appropriate to that rank. They will not be taken from their industrial posts. The Government will not interfere in the internal management of the corporations thus affected. But if the industrialist thus deprived of his high salary shows himself unwilling to cooperate in the war effort, if he seeks to circumvent the Government's war ends or its war fiscal policies or laws, then he may be removed from the plant to the combat division, or, if his reluctance is sufficiently culpable, he may be court-martialed and punished.

The committee does not wish to convey the impression that such a law will of itself prevent war. War grows out of many causes. Every student of history knows that. One of the most fruitful in the past has been profit—on occasions profit for a nation, perhaps; on other occasions profit for the powerful individuals who dominate the nation. We must find a way to reach all the causes which may draw this great peace-loving Nation into war. Perhaps we cannot do that. But it is the duty of responsible statesmanship to try. This is an attempt to reach and sterilize at the same time one of the causes of war and one of the destructive consequences of war, the post-war deflation.

This plan is offered only after much study and conference with experts in many fields. It will doubtless have critics. But there will be no place in the discussion which must ensue for the man who says we must not take away from the munition maker during war his sacred profit. Every man who can find a hole in the bill, through which the greedy industrialist with the aid of his patriotic lawyer can crawl, ought to point to that hole. The man who thinks that profit in war is sacred, that money and property are holy and inviolate things, while the lives and bodies of men—young men, too, the flower of our citizenship, who probably have less to do with the causes of war than anyone—may be taken freely and sacrificed without stint—that critic of the bill should have the decency to remain silent and hope secretly that the bill will fail of adoption.

The committee expects to conclude its present hearings on the bill on Monday, April 8. It has invited the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy to address themselves to the bill. Mr. Flynn, Mr. Paul Kern, and Mr. Harry Rosenfield are also expected to testify on that day.

The bill will then be introduced in the Senate.

UNITED STATES SENATE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON MUNITIONS—SUMMARY OF EMERGENCY WAR TIME ACT

TITLE I—TAX PROVISIONS

SECTION 1. The act is to be known as the Emergency War Time Act. It is to be effective only during the period of a war.

SEC. 2. Most of the purely mechanical sections of the Revenue Act of 1934 are adopted to cover administration and technique.

SEC. 3. A normal tax of 6 percent is levied on all individual incomes in excess of the credits against net income provided in section 25 of the Revenue Act of 1934, as modified in the present act.

SEC. 4. Surtaxes on individual incomes in excess of $3,000. These range from 10 percent of the income in excess of $3,000, but not in excess of $5,000 up to $2,800 upon incomes of $8,000 but not in excess of $10,000. On all incomes in excess of $10,000 the surtax is 94 percent of the excess.

SEC. 5. This section levies an income tax upon every corporation income included in the taxable description of section 701 of the Revenue Act of 1934, equal to 50 percent of such portion of its net income as is not in excess of 6 percent of the adjusted declared value of the capital stock (or in the case of a foreign corporation the adjusted declared value of capital employed in the transaction of the business in the United States), plus 100 percent of its net income as in excess of its capital stock. The valuation of corporations for excess-profit tax purposes is that which has been filed by such corporations under section 701 of the Revenue Act of 1934 relating to capital stock taxes.

These income taxes are levied on an annual basis but must be reported quarterly and paid within a month of the quarter in which they are earned. Adjustments can be made in the last quarter.

SEC. 6. Numerous references to the Revenue Act of 1934 are made, and this section defines meaning of cross references.

SEC. 7. This tax act shall become operative immediately upon the declaration of war and remain in force until the emergency is declared at an end by Congress.

SEC. 8. This deals with the subject of deductions permissible under the war time tax act. They are much more severe than deductions in the peace-time revenue acts. Deductions for depletion, exhaustion, and depreciation are strictly limited. No deductions are permitted for amortization until the expiration of the war.

Sections 9 and 10: Provide methods of payment of tax.

Section 11: Provides penalty for taxes for deliberate diminution of tax payments.

Section 12: Provides surtaxes on corporations improperly accumulating surpluses.

The remaining sections, after imposing prohibitive taxes on personal holding companies during the war, outline exemptions, credits, etc.

Unmarried persons will have a credit of $500. Married persons will have an exemption of $1,000 and $100 for each dependent. Husband, wife, and minor children must make a single return.

TITLE II

An industrial management board is set up.

On declaration of war it shall immediately carry out a draft of all persons engaged as officers or directors of a corporation or persons in policy-forming positions in such corporations. They will be registered first by boards set up after the model of the combat draft boards. The President may, when such industry is declared to be essential to the war, cause such officers to be inducted into the armed forces of the United States. They will continue to remain with their respective corporations, but will be prohibited from accepting any other compensation than that paid by the Army, and shall have rank and compensation appropriate thereto, not exceeding that of a brigadier general, and shall be subject to military law and punishable under it, and may be at the will of the Government shifted from the industrial-management corps to the combat corps of the Army, and thus removed from their civilian posts. But the Army and the Government are given no powers over the internal management of the industry.

TITLE III

A Commodities Control Commission is provided for with power to close all commodity exchanges, to fix the prices of all commodities, to prohibit the sale of such commodities to persons other than the Government, to provide for purchasing the whole output of any commodity industry, and to allocate such commodity to processors as the commission may deem necessary for the conduct of the war.

TITLE IV

The President is given power to close all security exchanges and to issue rules covering the sale of securities at private sale for the duration of the emergency. These are in addition to the powers conferred by the Securities Exchange Act.

TITLE V

In the field of war financing, a securities commission is established with power to approve or disapprove all new issues of private securities during war time. The approval of the Securities Commission is a prerequisite to registration of any security for sale under the Securities Act. The Commission has power to take over for itself the financing of war industry, and an additional half-billion-dollar fund is established for that purpose. Commercial transactions for short terms are exempted from the provisions of the act, as are resales and exchanges. All approvals and financing are made public records under the bill. The commission is specifically released from any responsibility for the approval of the value of any security approved for sale.

TITLE VI

The President is empowered to fix prices for any article, on a pre-war or regional parity, to establish priorities in sale and use of articles, and to conscript the use of property deemed essential to the successful prosecution of the war. The bill deals with property of all types, real and personal. Owners who lose property rights through the operation of these provisions are entitled to compensation in a fixed manner after judicial proceedings. As an adjunct to his other war-time powers, the President is authorized to license industries and fix the conditions for issuance of licenses in businesses or industries related to the prosecution of the war. The President is also authorized by Executive order to prevent the waste and hoarding of commodities and goods and to enjoin profiteering.

TITLE VII

Severe penalties, reaching to a maximum sum of $100,000, are imposed for violation of the terms of the bill.

A bill to provide revenue and facilitate the regulation and control of the economic and industrial structure of the Nation for the successful prosecution of war, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc.,

STATEMENT OF INTENTION

It is hereby declared to be the intention of Congress that no person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall profit in any manner whatsoever from the conduct of any war to which the United States is or may be a party.

It is the intention of Congress to protect the economic organization of the Nation from the disturbances due to war in order that such economic organization may be enabled to function at the highest efficiency in support of the armed forces and other agencies engaged in the prosecution of war.

It is the intention of Congress to protect the economic organization from the inflation of prices, wages, earnings, profits, and the consequent destructive deflationary collapse which follows the actual ending of military and naval operations.

It is the intention of Congress that the expenditures to the successful conduct of the war and the protection of the economic organization in the emergency shall be made out of current revenues and that any private interest conflicting with the Government's war objectives and operations shall be for the duration of the war subjected to the supervening necessities of the public interest in successful prosecution of war.

It is further declared to be the intention of Congress that in the event of war all technical and industrial resources shall be mobilized for the successful prosecution of such war, and that industrial management shall be subject to enlistment and conscription for the successful prosecution of war in the same general manner as combat man power has been and is subject to enlistment and conscription for the same purposes.

(Where a subsection symbol follows a more general symbol, only such subsection and not the whole of such general symbol is included within the aforesaid schedule.)

SEC. 3. (11) Normal tax on individuals: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual a normal tax of 6 percent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits against net income provided in section 25 of the Revenue Act of 1934, as herein modified.

(12) SURTAX ON INDIVIDUALS

SEC. 4. (a) Definition of "surtax net income": As used in this section the term "surtax net income" means the amount of the net income in excess of the credits against net income provided in section 25 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1934, as herein modified.

(b) Rates of surtax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the surtax net income of every individual in quarterly payments as hereinafter provided, a surtax as follows:

Upon a surtax net income of $3,000 there shall be no surtax; upon surtax net income in excess of $3,000 but not in excess of $5,000, 10 percent of such excess.

$200 upon surtax net incomes of $5,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $5,000 and not in excess of $6,500, 30 percent in addition of such excess.

$650 upon surtax net incomes of $6,500; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $6,500 and not in excess of $8,000, 50 percent in addition of such excess.

$1,400 upon surtax net incomes of $8,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $8,000 and not in excess of $10,000, 70 percent in addition of such excess.

$2,800 upon surtax net income of $10,000, and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $10,000, 94 percent in addition of such excess.

SEC. 5. (702 (a)) Tax on corporate incomes: (a) There is hereby imposed upon the net income of every corporation included within the taxable description of section 701 of the Revenue Act of 1934, for each income-tax payable year or portion of a year during which this act is in effect, an income tax equal to the following:

Fifty percent of such portion of its net income as is not in excess of 6 percent of the adjusted declared value of its capital stock (or in the case of a foreign corporation the adjusted declared value of capital employed in the transaction of its business in the United States) as at the close of the preceding income-tax taxable year (or as of the date of organization if it had no preceding income-tax taxable year); plus 100 percent of such portion of its net income as is in excess of 6 percent of the adjusted declared value of its capital stock (or in the case of a foreign corporation the adjusted declared value of capital employed in the transaction of its business in the United States) as at the close of the preceding income-tax taxable year (or as of the date of organization if it had no preceding income-tax taxable year).

(b) The maximum of the adjusted declared value of the capital stock of a corporation for the purposes of this section shall be determined as provided in section 701 of the Revenue Act of 1934, if the said section 701 is in full force and effect upon the effective date of this act, and the adjusted declared value therein determined shall be adopted as a maximum for the purposes of this section. If the said section 701 is modified or repealed prior to the effective date of this act, such maximum adjusted declared value of the capital stock of a corporation shall be determined as though the said section 701 is, and has at all times subsequent to March 15, 1935, been and remained, in full force and effect.

(c) If the Commissioner shall determine, upon his own volition, upon notice and hearing to the taxpayer, that the said maximum adjusted declared value of capital stock as herein determined is excessive, he may order an appraisal to be made of such capital stock pursuant to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and thereafter, if the Commissioner shall deem such appraised value to be more nearly in accord with fact than the adjusted declared value as otherwise determined hereunder, he shall order a modification of such adjusted declared value to conform with such appraisal and thereupon such appraised value shall be the adjusted declared value of such capital stock for the purposes of this title.

(d) In the case of any corporation newly organized within 1 year prior or at any time subsequent to the effective date of this title, the adjusted declared value of capital stock shall be determined by the Commissioner by appraisal pursuant to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, notwithstanding any other provision of law or of this title to the contrary.

(e) In the event that any corporation subject to the tax herein imposed shall have been reorganized or party to a reorganization, affiliation, or merger at any time within 1 year of the effective date of this act, or shall be reorganized or party to a reorganization, affiliation, or merger subsequent to the effective date of this act, the maximum of the adjusted declared value of the capital stock of such corporation for the purposes of this section shall be the same as such adjusted declared value as herein set forth prior to such reorganization, affiliation, or merger or the sum of such adjusted declared values in the event that two or more corporations have become one corporation for purposes of this tax as the result of such reorganization, affiliation, or merger, except that cash actually paid in as a result of such reorganization, affiliation, or merger may be added to such adjusted declared value. Adjusted declared values as computed pursuant to this section shall be maximum adjusted declared values and may be reduced by the Commissioner after notice and hearing if in his opinion they are excessive or unrepresentative of the true values involved.

(f) If the income-tax taxable year in respect of which the tax under this section is imposed is a period of less than 12 months, such adjusted declared value shall be reduced to an amount which bears the same ratio thereto as the number of months in the period bears to 12 months.

(g) The tax imposed by this section shall be on an annual basis, but the corporation subject thereto shall file returns upon the dates fixed and for the periods stated in section 9 of this act. Returns for the first three quarters of each year shall be made upon an estimated annual basis except that the total tax due and payable for such quarter shall be returned as a sum equal to one-fourth of the total annual tax as computed upon such estimated annual basis. A return for the fourth quarter shall be made upon an estimated annual basis, except that such return shall also include an actual return for the entire taxable year, and the total tax due and payable for such fourth quarter shall be returned as a sum equal to the total annual tax due and payable for the entire taxable year on the basis of such actual return for the entire taxable year, minus a sum equal to the total amount of payments previously made for or on behalf of taxes due and payable for the first three quarters of such taxable year pursuant to the provisions of this title. The full amount of the tax imposed by this section shall be due and payable upon the date upon which a return is filed pursuant to the provisions of this act, and such payment shall be for the period covered by such return.

(h) For the purpose of this section the net income shall be computed in like manner as provided for income-tax purposes under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1934 as incorporated herein and modified hereby.

SEC. 6. Cross-references: Cross-reference numbers enclosed in parentheses immediately following section numbers of this act are for convenience only, and shall be given no legal effect, except that where any provision of the Revenue Act of 1934 herein reenacted or of this title refers by number to any section included in schedule A of section 5 of this act, such reference shall be deemed to apply, insofar as may be, to the section of this act bearing the corresponding cross-reference number.

SEC. 7. Effective date; taxes in lieu of income and profits taxes; payment of such taxes for short period: The provisions of this title shall become operative and in full force and effect immediately upon the declaration by Congress that a state of war exists between the United States and any foreign government, and shall remain in full force and effect for the duration of such war and thereafter until the Congress shall declare the emergency created by such war to be at an end, and in any event for at least 1 calendar year. The taxes imposed by this act shall be in lieu of all other corresponding income or profits taxes which are or may be in effect at the time of such declaration of war for the period during which this act shall be in effect.

Regardless of any other statutory provision, taxes under any such law which is superseded by the provisions of this title shall be due and payable and a return shall be filed covering such taxes on the 15th day of the second month following the effective date of this title. Such return and taxes shall be due for any period which may have elapsed between the close of the last preceding taxable year and the effective date of this title. The Commissioner shall make rules and regulations which shall have the force and effect of law in regard to the manner of computing income on the basis of such period of less than 1 taxable year and placing such incomes on an annual basis. The provisions of section 47 of the Revenue Act of 1934 shall apply insofar as may be to such return for such period. Fractions of months shall be disregarded for all purposes in connection with computations made pursuant to the provisions of this section.

SEC. 8. (23 (a)) Deductions from gross income: (a) In computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions all the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered; traveling expenses (including the entire amount expended for meals and lodging) while away from home in the pursuit of a trade or business; and rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession, for the purposes of the trade or business, of property to which the taxpayer has not taken or is not taking title or in which he has no equity: Provided, however, That if any such expenses, salaries, compensation, or other payments hereinbefore referred to shall be made to any officer or director of a corporation, or to any stockholder owning in excess of 1 percent of any class of the stock of the corporation, or to any relative of such officer, director, or stockholder, such expenses, salaries, compensation, or other payments shall only be allowed as deductions from the gross income of such corporation if they shall amount in total to less than $5,000, and if they exceed the amount of $5,000 they shall be allowed as deductions from gross income only to the extent of such $5,000: And provided further, That promotional, public relation, and all selling costs and expenses shall in no event be allowed as a deduction in a sum larger than the yearly average of such expenses for the 3 years immediately preceding the effective date of this act, and if such expenses do in fact exceed such preceding 3-year average they shall be allowed as a deduction only to the extent of such average.

(b) (23 (b)) In computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions all interest paid or accrued within the taxable year on indebtedness, except on indebtedness the interest on which is payable solely from income and is secured by and payable from no other property or funds, and except on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry obligations (other than obligations of the United States issued between September 24, 1917, and January 1, 1921, and originally subscribed for by the taxpayer) the interest upon which is exempt from the taxes imposed by this title: Provided, That in no event shall such deduction for interest paid or accrued be allowed in excess of the yearly average of such interest paid or accrued for the 3 years preceding the effective date of this title, except insofar as such interest is paid or accrued for or on account of moneys borrowed and actually paid to the taxpayer, and if such interest does in fact exceed such preceding 3-year average it shall be allowed as a deduction only to the extent of such average.

(c) (23 (j)) In computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions, losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets only to the extent provided in section 22 of this act.

(d) (23 (n)) In computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions exhaustion, wear and tear, repairs, obsolescence, and depletion; and the basis upon which exhaustion, wear and tear, repairs, obsolescence, and depletion are to be allowed, in respect of any property shall be as provided in section 114 of the Revenue Act of 1934 as herein incorporated: Provided, That irrespective of the provisions of either section 23 or section 114 of the said act the total of deductions allowed for exhaustion, wear and tear, repairs, and obsolescence shall not exceed 2 percent of the gross income of the taxpayer during the taxable year: And provided further, That irrespective of the provisions of either section 23 or section 114 of the Revenue Act of 1934 as herein incorporated the total of deductions allowed for depletion shall not exceed the following percentages of the gross income from the property during the taxable year:

Two and one-half percent in the case of coal mines.

Five percent in the case of metal mines.

Seven and one-half percent in the case of sulphur mines or deposits.

Seven and one-half percent in the case of all other mines or wells.

Nine percent in the case of oil or gas wells.

The Commissioner shall make rules and regulations which shall have the force and effect of law in regard to the manner of computing income on the basis of such period of less than one full quarter. The provisions of section 47 of the Revenue Act of 1934 shall not apply to such return for such period. Fractions of months shall be disregarded for all purposes in connection with computations made pursuant to the provisions of this section.

(c) Immediately upon the effective date of this act, the President shall make public, upon such terms and conditions as he may see fit, the returns of all taxpayers for the year prior to such effective date, notwithstanding and in addition to any other terms or provisions of law relating to such publicity.

SEC. 12. (102 (a)) Surtax on corporations improperly accumulating surplus: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the adjusted net income of every corporation (other than a personal holding company as defined in section 351 of the Revenue Act of 1934) if such corporation, however created or organized, is formed or availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of the surtax upon its shareholders or the shareholders of any other corporation, through the medium of permitting gains and profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed, a surtax equal to the sum of the following:

(1) 98 percent of the amount of the adjusted net income not in excess of $100,000; plus

(2) 100 percent of the amount of the adjusted net income in excess of $100,000.

Such Board, in addition to all other powers and duties, is hereby authorized and empowered to hear and determine claims filed pursuant to this section, and if such determination is in favor of the claimant, such adjustment or refund as is allowed shall be a legal claim against the United States. No such claim shall be heard or determined unless the full sum in dispute has been paid into the Treasury of the United States, as though actually due; nor shall any such claim be heard or determined until a date subsequent to the expiration of this title, but such delay shall not prejudice in any respect, by limitation or otherwise, the rights of the claimant. In any such proceeding there shall be a presumption that the sum in dispute was validly collected and paid, and the burden shall be upon the claimant to show the contrary. All other rules, regulations, and statutory provisions relating to tax refunds shall apply to proceedings brought under this title, so far as applicable, except that the remedy herein provided for gross or unconscionable factual disparity or error or unconstitutional result under sections 8, 20, and 22 of this title shall be an exclusive remedy.

(c) Minor children: If a minor child whose parent or parents are alive has a net income of $100 or more, his income shall be included in a single joint return with his parent or parents, and the tax shall be computed on the aggregate income. If such parents file separate returns, such joint return shall be with the parent with which the minor child resides; and if such parents file separate returns and the minor child resides with neither, such return may be filed with either such parent at the option of the child.

(272 (a)) Deficiency: Petition to Board of Tax Appeals: If in the case of any taxpayer the Commissioner determines that there is a deficiency in respect of the tax imposed by this title, the Commissioner is authorized to send notice of such deficiency to the taxpayer by registered mail. Within 30 days after such notice is mailed (not counting Sunday or a legal holiday within the District of Columbia as the thirtieth day) the taxpayer may file a petition with the Board of Tax Appeals for a redetermination of the deficiency. Assessment of a deficiency in respect of the tax imposed by this title and distraint or proceeding in court for its collection may be made, begun, or prosecuted after such notice has been mailed to the taxpayer, but in the event that the decision of the Board subsequently becomes final in favor of the taxpayer, he shall be entitled to a refund of such amount as has been collected on the basis of such deficiency. In any proceeding relative to a deficiency in respect of the tax imposed by this title, there shall be a presumption that the finding of such deficiency by the Commissioner is correct and the burden shall be upon the taxpayer to show the contrary to the satisfaction of the tribunal before which such proceeding is brought.

SEC. 22. (117 (d)) Limitation on capital losses: Losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets shall be allowed only to the extent of $2,000. In no event and under no circumstances shall such limitation be extended on account or to the extent of capital gains. If a bank or trust company incorporated under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory, a substantial part of whose business is the receipt of deposits, sells any bond, debenture, note, or certificate or other evidence of indebtedness issued by any corporation (including one issued by a government or political subdivision thereof), with interest coupons or in registered form, any loss resulting from such sale (except such portion of the loss as does not exceed the amount, if any, by which the adjusted basis of such instrument exceeds the par or face value thereof) shall not be subject to the foregoing limitation, and shall not be included in determining the applicability of such limitation to other losses.

Nor shall any action by any party to restrain either the voluntary or involuntary payment of any such tax, tax penalty, or tax deficiency be maintained in any court irrespective of the character of the party defendant, and irrespective of the circumstances.

TITLE II

INDUSTRIAL MANAGEMENT PROVISIONS

SECTION 101. Short title: This title may be cited as the "Industrial Management Draft Act."

SEC. 102. Creation of industrial management board and industrial management corps; power and duties: There is hereby created as an independent office a board to be known as the "Industrial Management Board" to consist of five members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. At least three of such members shall be civilians. Such board shall be officered and staffed in such manner as the President may designate, and shall exercise the powers conferred upon it by this title and such additional powers as the President may from time to time confer upon it. Such board shall have jurisdiction and control over the Industrial Management Corps, which is hereby created and which shall be a military corps; but in addition to all powers conferred upon such board, the Secretary of War, through such officers as he may designate, shall have disciplinary powers in like manner and to like extent as over any corps of the Regular Army, including the power of court martial for any offense cognizable under the law by military authority, and shall also have power of court martial or other military process for violation of any rule or regulation of the Industrial Management Board. It shall be the duty of the Industrial Management Board to cooperate to the utmost possible extent with all commissions, boards, or other authorities created or existing for the purpose of successfully prosecuting such war. In the event of any jurisdictional dispute or difficulty with any other Government department, board, or agency the President may decide such dispute or difficulty by Executive order. The Industrial Management Board shall have power to make rules and regulations for the government and control of such Industrial Management Corps, and such rules and regulations shall have the force and effect of law.

SEC. 103. Creation of local and district boards: The President is authorized and directed, immediately upon the declaration by Congress that a state of war exists between the United States and any foreign government, to create and establish throughout the several States and subdivisions thereof and in the Territories and the District of Columbia local boards, and where, in his discretion practicable, there shall be one such local board in each county or similar subdivision in each State, and additional boards may be created within counties at his discretion. Such boards shall be appointed by the President, and shall consist of three or more members, to be chosen from among the local authorities of such subdivisions or from other citizens residing in the subdivision or area over which the respective boards will have jurisdiction, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the President. Such boards shall have power within their respective jurisdiction to hear and determine, subject to review as hereinafter provided, all questions of exemption under this act and all questions of or claims for including or discharging individuals or classes of individuals from the draft as provided in this act.

The President is hereby authorized and directed to establish additional boards, one or more in each State, in his discretion, to be called "district boards", consisting of such number of citizens as he may determine, who shall be appointed by the President. Such district boards may, in their discretion, review on appeal and affirm, modify, or reverse any decision of any local board having jurisdiction in the area in which such district board has jurisdiction under the rules and regulations prescribed by the President. The decisions of such district boards shall be final, except that if the President shall later modify any rule, regulation, or order upon which such decision was based, such decision may be reconsidered by the said district board.

Any vacancy in any such local board or district board shall be filled by the President, and any member of such local board or district board may be removed by the President whenever he considers that the public interest requires such removal.

SEC. 104. Powers of President; rules and regulations: The President shall make rules and regulations governing the organization and procedure of such local boards and district boards, and providing for and governing appeals from such local boards to such district boards, and reviews of the decisions of any local board by the district board having jurisdiction, and determining and prescribing the several areas in which the respective local boards and district boards shall have jurisdiction, and all other rules and regulations necessary to carry out the terms and provisions of this title, and shall provide for the issuance of certificates of exemption, or partial or limited exemptions, to such persons as may be exempted from the terms and provisions of this act.

SEC. 105. Registration of persons: All persons engaged, wholly or partially, in any executive, supervisory, administrative, or policy-forming position with or in connection with any technical, industrial, or manufacturing plant or establishment of any kind whatsoever, whatever the form of ownership thereof, corporate or otherwise, or who have been engaged within 3 years of any declaration of war as heretofore referred to, shall register in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, and upon proclamation by the President or other public notice to be given by him, which proclamation or public notice shall be as nearly contemporaneous with any declaration of war as may be. All such registration shall be conducted and recorded by local boards, as herein established, and shall be at such times and places as the President, or in the event of his failure to do so the local board, shall designate. Every such person shall be deemed to have notice of the requirement of this act upon the publication or other notice as aforesaid given by the President or by his direction, and it shall be the duty of all persons of the aforesaid engagements to present themselves to the local board having jurisdiction over the areas in which they reside and submit thereat for registration as herein provided. Any person who shall willfully fail or refuse to present himself for registration or submit thereto as herein provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction in the District Court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, be punished by imprisonment of not less than 1 nor more than 5 years or by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and shall thereupon be duly registered: Provided, That in the call of the docket precedence shall be given, in courts trying the same, to the trial of criminal proceeding under this act. In the case of temporary absence from actual place of legal residence, any person subject to this act may register by mail pursuant to regulations to be made by the President. For the purposes of criminal prosecution under this act a person shall be deemed prima facie to be engaged in executive, supervisory, administrative, or policy-forming position within the terms of this act if his salary, compensation, or other emoluments shall equal or exceed during any previous year within a 3-year period of the declaration of war herein referred to the sum of $4,000: Provided further, That the President may at such intervals as he may desire from time to time require any person who has become engaged in any position of which the occupant has or would have been subject to registration pursuant to this title since the last preceding date of registration and on or before the next date set for registration by proclamation by the President, except such persons as are exempt from such registration hereunder, to register in the same manner and subject to the same requirements and liabilities as those previously registered under the terms hereof: Provided further, That all such persons when registered shall be liable to combat military service and to draft under the terms of any other act of Congress and under such regulations as may be prescribed thereunder: And provided further, That in the event that any member of the Industrial Management Corps shall be removed from the position which he occupied prior to declaration of war pursuant to the provisions of section 107 of this title and be not immediately transferred to some other position or status under the Industrial Management Board, he shall forthwith be transferred to such other branch of the Military Establishment as the Secretary of War may direct, provided that he is otherwise qualified for such service.

SEC. 106. Exemptions: The following classes of persons shall be exempt from registration under the terms of this act:

(a) Officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, the Navy, the National Guard, Naval Militia, and all other persons in the military and naval services of the United States.

(b) Persons found by local boards to be morally deficient for service in the military forces of the United States, or insane.

(c) Aliens who have not declared their intention to become citizens.

(d) Persons who may be exempted by unanimous vote of a local board, confirmed by a unanimous vote of a district board for unique, exceptional, extraordinary, and unforeseen reasons which make satisfactory service in the military forces of the United States impossible, but in no case shall mere physical disability be sufficient cause for exemption under this section.

SEC. 107. Power of the President; status and powers of registration: Whenever the President shall, in his discretion, deem any technical, industrial, or manufacturing plant or establishment or any group of such comprised in an industry to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment or the effective operation of the military forces or the maintenance of the national interest during the emergency, he may proclaim such plant, establishment, or industry so to be. Upon making such proclamation the President shall determine and state in the said proclamation either that—

(a) Any person registered pursuant to the provisions of this title engaged or employed wholly or partially in such plant, establishment, or industry; or

(b) Any person registered pursuant to the provisions of this title engaged in a capacity which involves the determination, or a part in the determination, of the business and industrial policy of such plant, establishment, or industry, including in the case of corporations the president, directors, vice presidents, and general manager or those occupying corresponding positions among others—

shall be drafted for service in the Industrial Management Corps. Thereupon each person so drafted shall become a member of the United States Army and of the Industrial Management Corps thereof, and subject to military discipline through such officers as the Secretary of War may designate pursuant to section 102 of this title. Such person shall receive a commission from the said Army of a rank not superior to brigadier general, and if possible such rank shall correspond approximately to the Regular Army rank of an officer in charge of a like number of men. Such corps shall be maintained, organized, and equipped in such manner as the Industrial Management Board may direct. Members of the Industrial Management Corps shall receive from their employers only such compensation and allowances as are received by officers of the Regular Army of even rank and grade, and in no case and under no circumstances shall such compensation and allowances exceed the amount paid to officers of the Regular Army of even rank and grade. All members of the Industrial Management Corps of the Army of the United States shall, from the date of enrollment therein, be subject to the laws and regulations governing the Regular Army, except as to promotions, so far as such laws and regulations are applicable to persons whose permanent retention in the military service on the active or retired list is not contemplated by existing law, and the duration of military service of such members of the Industrial Management Corps shall be for the duration of the war and for such time thereafter as the President may declare to be a period of national emergency. Each member of the Industrial Management Corps shall continue to occupy such position, in his normal status, except as otherwise provided by this title in any technical, manufacturing, or industrial plant or establishment as he occupied prior to the effective date of this title, unless promoted or demoted by the management thereof with the consent of the Industrial Management Board. If at any time, however, the Industrial Management Board shall find the services of such member of the Industrial Management Corps to be inefficient, unsatisfactory, or contrary to the public interest, such Board may order his removal therefrom and thereupon he shall be assigned to such other branch of the Military Establishment as provided in section 105 of this title. Upon such removal or in the event of any vacancy for any cause, the owners or managers of such plant or establishment shall replace such removed person in the normal manner; thereupon the person chosen as such replacement shall be enrolled forthwith as a member of the Industrial Management Corps.

SEC. 108. Limitation on income of members of Industrial Management Corps; penalties: No member of the Industrial Management Corps shall at any time receive any salary, gift, compensation, or any other emolument whatsoever for services rendered during war time from any partnership, association, trust, corporation, or other person interested in or connected with any technical, industrial, or manufacturing plant or establishment for or in which such member may render services during time of war. Such member shall receive for services rendered during time of war only such compensation and allowances as shall equal the amount paid to officers of the Regular Army of even rank and grade, and no other person shall receive on his behalf or account nor shall any person receive in trust or by other means any additional compensation or allowance. If any member of the Industrial Management Corps does receive such additional salary, gift, compensation, or emolument he shall be forthwith dishonorably discharged from the United States Army, and such dismissal shall be in addition to other penalties. Neither shall any such person be permitted to escape such service or to be discharged therefrom prior to the expiration of his term of service by the payment of money or any other valuable thing whatsoever as consideration for his release from such service or liability thereto. Any violation of the terms of this section shall constitute a felony and shall be punishable by a fine of not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 109. Definition: Where used in this title the phrase "technical, industrial, or manufacturing plant or establishment" shall include, among others, gas and electric-power plants, mines and wells, railroads, pipe lines, and other public utilities, as well as all other plants or establishments of consequence to the successful prosecution of war.

SEC. 110. Emergency power; requisition of industrial resources: In the event of emergency, or in the event that inefficiency, labor dispute, or inability to agree on rates or terms of public contracts or any other cause has impaired or delayed the usefulness of any technical, industrial, or manufacturing plant or establishment to the successful prosecution of any war, the Industrial Management Board may upon a finding of such fact, and shall upon the request of the President, requisition the physical establishment or any part thereof and resources of such plant or establishment and operate it under such rules and regulations as it may deem proper in the circumstances, and with such personnel as it may provide. If the President designates any other governmental agency to operate such plant or establishment, the jurisdiction of the Industrial Management Board under this section shall be superseded. The owner of such plant or establishment shall be entitled to a return of such plant or establishment at the termination of the effectiveness of this title, together with just compensation for such loss as he may have suffered as a result of such requisition. Such loss shall be determined by the Industrial Management Board upon application made within 30 days of the return of such plant or establishment to the owner, and when so determined shall be a legal claim against the United States. The jurisdiction of the Industrial Management Board is extended for a period of 1 year beyond the expiration of this act for determination of claims filed hereunder, and such extension of time for such purpose shall be an exception to any inconsistent provision of this act.

SECTION 201. Short title: This title may be cited as the "War Commodity Control Act."

SEC. 202. Definitions: For the purposes of this title the term "commodity" shall mean any article of commerce sold or offered for sale upon a commodity exchange; the term "commodity exchange" shall mean any central market place where articles of commerce are sold on a short, long, future, or marginal basis, or where common articles of commerce are continuously sold without being present or in view of either the buyer or seller, or whether "bid and asked" quotations are commonly furnished on demand for articles of commerce, or any place commonly known as a "commodity exchange."

SEC. 203. Commodity Control Commission: There is hereby created the Commodity Control Commission, hereinafter in this title called the "Commission", to consist of five members appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of office to expire at the expiration date of this title, unless sooner removed by the President in his discretion. Such members shall receive the same compensation and allowances as are paid to officers of the Regular Army of the rank of colonel. No such member, so appointed, shall refuse to serve as a member of such Commission. Neither during his term of office nor thereafter, on account of services rendered during such term, shall any such member receive, nor shall any other person receive on his behalf, any reward, compensation, or emolument whatsoever from any source directly or indirectly regulated or affected by the provisions of this title, nor shall any member, attorney, agent, or employee of the Commission in any manner, directly or indirectly, participate in the determination of any question affecting his personal interest, or the interests of any corporation, partnership, association, or trust in which he is directly or indirectly interested.

SEC. 204. Powers of Commission: The Commission shall have power, in its discretion, if it deem the public interest and the successful prosecution of the war to so require or render advisable:

(a) To close any commodity exchange.

(b) To publish rules and regulations with the force and effect of law for the government of such commodity exchanges as are not closed, which rules and regulations may include, among other things, the regulation of the prices or parities at which commodities may be sold; the establishment of priorities and rationing in favor of purchasers or users most vitally linked with the successful prosecution of the war; the limitation or fixation of fees, commissions, or other charges collected by such commodity exchanges or their agents for any service whatsoever; the elimination or limitation of short, long, future, and marginal selling and hedging and speculation of all types and varieties whatsoever.

(c) To prohibit the publication of prices quoted on commodities sold or formerly sold on such commodity exchanges and to proscribe and prohibit the delivery or transmission for delivery through the mails or by telegraph, telephone, wireless, or other form of communication of such prices or of any quotation or report of the price of or contracts or sales made of commodities sold or formerly sold on such exchanges.

SEC. 205. Additional powers of Commission: If the Commission shall close all or any commodity exchanges, it shall have power, in its discretion, if it deem the public interest and the successful prosecution of the war so require or render advisable—

(a) To requisition the physical plant of or place occupied by any commodity exchange or such part of such plant or place, together with such elevators, warehouses, and other marketing facilities wherever located, including private telegraph and telephone wires, as it may require; and to requisition all stores or supplies of any such commodities held by any person.

(b) To fix the price at which any commodity may be sold and to limit sale of such commodity to itself; and to establish allocations, quotas, and priorities for sales to itself and others, either at the time of such sale or in advance of such sale.

(c) To resell any commodity purchased by itself at cost, plus such differential as shall equal the cost of handling and other expenses; and to establish allocations, quotas, and priorities among purchasers and users in favor of those most vitally linked with the successful prosecution of the war.

(d) To conserve or limit to war purposes the use of any commodity.

SEC. 206. Fees and commissions prohibited: At no time and under no circumstances shall any fee, commission, or other emolument be paid as or in lieu of brokerage on any transaction in which the Commission is either buyer or seller of a commodity.

SEC. 207. Standard for fixing of prices: In fixing any price pursuant to the provisions of this title for any agricultural commodity within the purview of this title, the Commission shall be guided but not bound by such level as will give such agricultural commodity a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the base period, and shall be guided, further, by the necessities of the Government and the public interest in successful prosecution of the war. The base period shall be all or any period of 5 consecutive years or more, in the discretion of the Commission, of the period commencing on January 1 of the twentieth year preceding the effective date of this title and ending on January 1 of the second year preceding such effective date.

SEC. 208. Control of other agencies: In the event that any other governmental authority or agency is actually engaged in the control, management, operation, or government of any industrial establishment connected with or necessary to the successful prosecution of the war, any request for priority in the allocation of commodities to such industrial establishment by such authority or agency shall be binding upon the Commission.

SEC. 209. Appropriation: There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the creation of a revolving fund to enable the Commission to make purchases of commodities as herein authorized the sum of $500,000,000. All moneys received by the Commission in the exercise of its powers under this title shall revert to such revolving fund.

SEC. 210. Compensation to owners: The owner of any physical plant or place or elevator, warehouse, other marketing facilities, or private telephone or telegraph wires subjected to requisition pursuant to the provisions of this title shall be entitled to the return of such property at the termination of the effectiveness of this title, together with compensation for such loss as he may have suffered as a result of such requisition. Such loss shall be determined by the Commission upon application made within 30 days of the return of such property to the owner, and when so determined shall be a legal claim against the United States. The jurisdiction of the Commission is extended for a period of 1 year beyond the termination of this title for determination of claims filed hereunder, and such extension of term for such purpose shall be an exception to any inconsistent provision of this act.

SEC. 211. Illegal exchange and traffic: Where, under the authority of this title, the Commission has closed all exchanges in the United States dealing in the purchase or sale of any commodity, it shall be unlawful for any person to establish an exchange or to deal or traffic in the purchase or sale of such commodity in any extemporized market or over-the-counter trade or in any other manner.

SEC. 212. Effective date: Notwithstanding the provisions of any other section of this act, the effective date of this title shall be upon the declaration of any war between the United States and any foreign power or upon the declaration by the President that an emergency has arisen due to the possible future declaration of war or due to the existence of a state of war between two foreign powers. The effectiveness of this title shall cease upon a declaration by Congress that the emergency herein referred to has ceased to exist.

TITLE IV

SECURITIES EXCHANGE PROVISIONS

SECTION 301. Short title: This act may be cited as the "War Securities Exchange Control Act."

SEC. 302. Powers of the President: In addition to all other powers possessed by the President by law as of the effective date of this title, and not in substitution therefor, the President may by proclamation close any or all exchanges where securities are bought, sold, or offered for sale and by rules or regulations prevent any public or private sale of any such securities. Such rules and regulations shall have the force and effect of law. Such proclamation shall remain effective, if so intended by the President, for the duration of the effectiveness of this title. For the purposes of this section the word "security" shall be defined in like manner as the same is defined by section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended by act approved June 6, 1934, as in effect on March 15, 1935.

TITLE V

WAR FINANCE CONTROL

SECTION 401. Short title: This title may be cited as the "War Finance Control Act."

SEC. 402. Finance Control Commission: There is hereby created the War Finance Control Commission, hereinafter in this title called the "Commission", to consist of five members appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of office to expire at the expiration date of this act, unless sooner removed by the President in his discretion. Such members shall receive the same compensation and allowances as are paid to officers of the Regular Army of the rank of colonel. No such member, so appointed, shall refuse to serve as a member of such Commission. Neither during his term of office, nor thereafter on account of services rendered during such term, shall any such member receive, nor shall any person receive on his behalf, any reward, compensation, or emolument whatsoever from any source directly or indirectly regulated or affected by the provisions of this title, nor shall any member, attorney, agent, or employee of the Commission in any manner, directly or indirectly, participate in the determination of any question affecting his personal interest, or the interest of any corporation, partnership, association, or trust in which he is directly or indirectly interested.

SEC. 403. Powers of Commission; approval of securities: No security may be registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission, as provided in the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, and as in effect March 15, 1935, or its successor in law or in fact, unless it shall have been approved previously by the Finance Control Commission pursuant to the provisions of this title. No security the total or aggregate par, face, or actual value of which plus the aggregate par, face, or actual value of any other securities issued by the same person since the effective date of this title, is in excess of $100,000, shall be sold or offered for sale or for subscription either publicly or privately unless such security shall have been approved previously by the Finance Control Commission pursuant to the provisions of this title. Such approval shall be granted if the Commission find, after hearing held upon notice to any applicant for such approval, if such hearing is requested, that either—

(a) The security is part of a current transaction maturing in less than 9 months;

(b) The security is issued solely in exchange for an outstanding security and that no money or other property consideration is involved in the transaction;

(c) The security is offered for resale, having been originally sold prior to the effective date of this act or pursuant to its provisions; or

(d) The sale of such security is compatible with the public interest in the successful prosecution of war, and that the proceeds from the sale of such security will be applied to the extension or improvement of the capital plant or efficiency of an industry, establishment, or agency necessary or desirable to the successful prosecution of war.

Under no circumstances shall the Commission grant approval under this section if it shall find none of the preceding conditions to exist, nor shall it grant such approval if it shall find that the proceeds from the sale of such securities will or may be applied to purposes not connected with the successful prosecution of war or that the sale of such securities may attract or absorb funds potentially more useful to the successful prosecution of war.

SEC. 404. Powers of Commission; financing: The Commission may, upon application to the Commission by any officer or agent of the United States or upon application of any officer or agent of any industry, establishment, or agency, after finding that, due to inadequate capital plant or other inadequate financial resources, the efficiency or usefulness of any such industry, establishment, or agency for the successful prosecution of war is impaired or impeded, loan or advance such sums as may in its judgment be necessary to eliminate such impaired or impeded usefulness or efficiency, upon such security, if any, as it deems necessary. If such loan or advance is made upon application of any officer or agent of the United States, no reimbursement except interest, at a rate to be fixed by the Commission, shall be required during the effective date of this act, but the United States shall have a lien superior to all other liens for the repayment of such loan or advance upon all real assets or fixtures constructed or purchased with such funds.

SEC. 405. Tax credits and allowances: No depreciation, amortization, exhaustion, wear and tear, obsolescence, or other deduction shall be allowed or credited against gross income under any tax act, including title I of this act, for any part or portion of the construction or purchase cost of any real asset or fixture constructed or purchased with funds provided by the Commission pursuant to section 404 of this title for any war or taxable period during which this act is in effect.

SEC. 406. Revolving fund; appropriation: There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $500,000,000 to be used by the Commission as a revolving fund for the purposes of making loans and advances pursuant to the provisions of section 404 of this title.

SEC. 407. Definitions: Unless the context otherwise requires, the definitions established by section 2 of the Security Act of 1933, as amended by act approved June 6, 1934, as in effect March 15, 1935, are hereby adopted as applicable to this title.

SEC. 408. Publicity: All approvals of securities made by the Commission pursuant to section 403 and all loans or advances made pursuant to section 404 of this title shall be public records and shall be available for public inspection in such detail and under such reasonable rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe.

SEC. 409. Time limitations on action: Wherever in this title provision is made for an application to the Commission for any purpose, and such application is made, the Commission shall act upon such application within 30 days of the filing of same, or state publicly the reason for failing to do so.

SEC. 410. Limitation on powers of Commission: Nothing contained in this title shall be deemed to limit or control the power of the United States Government or any agency thereof to issue securities.

SEC. 411. Limitation of effect of approval: No action taken by the Commission pursuant to the provision of section 403 of this title shall be construed as approving the legality, validity, worth, or safety of any security.

TITLE VI

WAR RESOURCES CONTROL

SECTION 501. Short title: This may be cited as "The War Resources Control Act."

SEC. 502. Prices: The President is hereby authorized, with respect to any product, foodstuff, material, real property, right, or service, declared by him essential for the national security and defense in the prosecution of the war, to fix and establish just and reasonable, maximum, minimum, or absolute prices or rates or rentals at which such product, foodstuff, material, commodity, real property, right, or service may be bought, sold, rented, or otherwise contracted for, whether such transaction be with the Government or between persons of the civilian population, on the basis of differentials established on the basis of pre-war parities as of any year or period of years, as the President may designate, prior to the declaration of war but not more than 20 years prior to such declaration. Prices fixed pursuant to the provisions of title II of this act are not subject to the provisions of this section. Any such differential may be altered or modified from time to time as the President may direct. The President may also prescribe differentials based either on primary market or markets or upon zones or districts or may prescribe different prices or rates for different localities or for different uses in the same locality. The President is further authorized to fix and establish just and reasonable rates of profit, compensation, wage, or commission which shall be allowed for the production, the manufacture, the sale, the marketing, or the distribution of any such product, foodstuff, material, commodity, real property, right, or service. Any such rate, compensation, wage, or commission may be altered or modified from time to time as the President may direct.

SEC. 503. Priorities: The President is hereby authorized, whenever he deems it necessary or advisable to the successful prosecution of the war, to—

(a) Fix and establish the order of preference to be observed (hereinafter called "priority") by any manufacturer, producer, dealer, distributor, carrier, public utility, or other person whatsoever, in manufacturing, producing, filling existing or future contracts for, complying with requisitions or orders for, transporting, distributing, or delivering of, or

(b) Regulate, limit, or prohibit the purchase, sale, use, transportation, manufacture, or distribution of any product, foodstuff, material, commodity, real estate, right, or service.

SEC. 504. Requisitions: The President is authorized, whenever he deems it necessary or advisable to the successful prosecution of war, to requisition and take possession of any product, foodstuff, materials, commodity, real property, or right, and on such terms as he may deem desirable to sell or otherwise dispose of such product, foodstuff, material, commodity, real property, or right. For compliance with any such requisition the United States shall make just compensation, to be determined by the President. If the compensation so determined be unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 percent thereof, and shall be entitled to sue the United States immediately upon the close of war to recover such further sum as added to said 75 percent will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred, regardless of the amount in controversy, on the United States District Court for the district in which such product, foodstuff, material, commodity, real property, or right is situated to hear and determine all such controversies in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, of the Judicial Code: Provided, That no court shall have jurisdiction to entertain suit, whatever the character, of either party, plaintiff or defendant, to restrain or enjoin requisition, by the Government of the United States, under this section.

Any moneys received by the United States for or in connection with the sale or disposition of any product, foodstuff, material, commodity, real property, right, or service pursuant to this title may, in the discretion of the President, be used as a revolving fund for further carrying out the purposes of this title.

SEC. 505. Licenses: (a) From time to time whenever the President shall find it essential to license the production, manufacture, sale, storage, distribution, or transportation of any product, foodstuff, material, commodity, real property, right, or service, in order to carry into effect any of the purposes of this title to and in the successful prosecution of war, and shall publicly so announce, it shall be unlawful for any person, after a date fixed in the announcement, to engage in or carry on any such business enumerated in this section, unless he shall secure and hold a license pursuant to this section.

(b) The President is authorized to issue such licenses, to fix the conditions of such licenses, and to prescribe requirements for systems of accounts and auditing of accounts to be kept by licensees, submission of reports by them with or without oath or affirmation, and the entry and inspection by the President's duly authorized agents of the places of business of licensees. The President may order the revocation of the licenses of any licensee who fails to comply with any condition of or in a license, or who fails to observe any price, rate, wage, or priority fixed or established pursuant to this title, or who fails to perform or comply with any contract, requisition, or requirement of the United States, or otherwise fails to comply with the provisions contained in such license.

SEC. 506. Conservation of resources: The President is authorized, whenever he deems it necessary or advisable to the successful prosecution of the war, to promulgate and enforce rules and regulations against waste, destruction, hoarding, speculation, and profiteering with respect to any product, foodstuff, material, commodity, real property, right, or service.

SEC. 507. Administration of title: The authority and power conferred by this title may be exercised under the direction and during the pleasure of the President, through any department, establishment, service, agency, or officer of the United States, or any person designated by the President for the purpose, and to that end he is authorized to create or provide for such additional agencies of the Government and prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary; and for the duration of the emergency only, the President is authorized to regroup, redistribute, or reassign duties and functions of procurement of war supplies for the Military and Naval Establishments: Provided, That no one appointed or designated by the President hereunder shall in any manner, directly or indirectly, participate in the determination of any questions affecting his personal interests, or the interests of any corporation, partnership, association, or trust in which he is directly or indirectly interested.

SEC. 508. Rules and regulations: Rules and regulations made by the President under this title shall have the force and effect of law.

TITLE VII

Effective date: Except as otherwise specifically provided herein, the provisions of this act shall take effect immediately upon any declaration of war by the United States and shall continue in full force and effect until the termination of such war and the declaration by Congress that the emergency created by such war has ceased to exist.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, I want to effectively and actually take the profits out of war. The McSwain bill, the rule on which we are now considering, does not, in my opinion, effectively take the profit out of war but rather freezes profits at a high level during time of war. In my opinion, the only effective way of eliminating war profits is by the system of drastic income taxation in time of war which is included in Senator NYE's program.

This McSwain bill, under the rule proposed, is being brought in under a parliamentary strait-jacket which prevents the consideration of the Nye taxation method of eliminating war profits. If this rule is adopted, I, and other Members of Congress, if we want to be on record as being against war profits, will have to vote for a fraud and a farce, a bill which will not, in effect, take the profit out of war.

I ask that you vote down the previous question on the rule so that I may have the opportunity to amend the rule as follows: It shall be in order to consider as a substitute amendment for the bill any amendment that relates to the regulation and control of the economic and industrial structure of the Nation for the successful prosecution of war, notwithstanding the fact that said amendment may impose taxes. [Applause.]

I ask that you vote down the previous question on this rule so that we may have the opportunity to vote on legislation which will actually and effectively take the profit out of war. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to say anything on the rule; but, being a member of the Military Affairs Committee and knowing something about the history of this legislation for the past 4 years, I undertake to say that some of the arguments used on this floor in the last 30 minutes have been the most unfair and unjust of any I have heard during the years I have been a Member of this body. This is not a revenue-raising measure. If it were, it would have to come from the Committee on Ways and Means. I am in hearty sympathy with some of the statements in reference to a tax on excess profits, and I will heartily support such legislation. This is a bill clothing the President of the United States with full authority in war time to put a ceiling on prices, on commissions, fees, and profits, and in the event there is a violation of his orders and regulations a severe penalty is imposed.

I am a little bit shocked and surprised at some of my very close and esteemed friends who are members of the committee. They were present during the many hearings on this bill before the Military Affairs Committee during the last 3 months. I do not say they voted for the bill, but they did not vote against it and manifested no opposition to it. The chairman made a public announcement that the rule would be asked for, and there was no opposition to that.

This is a wide-open rule that makes germane any amendment which is pertinent to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. As I recall it, neither of these two gentlemen made any suggestion to the committee with reference to the institution of taxes in this bill?

Mr. THOMASON. Not a word did they say. Not the slightest objection was offered.

We have heard a lot of talk about Mr. Baruch. There also appeared before that committee representatives of the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Federation of Labor, various patriotic societies, and representatives of the War Department. I undertake to say at this time that the hearings will show there was not a single witness before that committee who did not approve of the principle of this bill.

This looks to me like a rap at the chairman, as well as the committee. No objection will be made to offering germane amendments. Some of those opposing this rule are the ones who have talked the loudest about gag rules. Now here is a rule brought out with all the light of day thrown on it. You may amend as you want to. I am one of those who voted against the discharge and other gag rules. I am one of those who voted against the 218 petition rule. Here is a rule that has come out that is perfectly fair, yet those who have spoken the strongest against gag rules would now send it back. I thought you wanted a chance to discuss, amend, and vote on bills. There is the opportunity given under this rule to debate the matter for 4 hours. The opportunity is given to amend it in any manner, shape, or fashion you see fit, that is germane.

If the Senate wants to pass it, all right. If not, they will pass another bill, then let the bill be sent to conference, like 90 percent of the bills are.

In addition to that, if you want to follow this bill up with a tax measure, you will have the opportunity. Every witness before the committee, so far as I can recall, favored the bill. No opposition appeared. I undertake to say that there is not a man in the United States who has given this question more patriotic and devoted study than JOHN McSWAIN. In addition to having a distinguished military career, he is one of the most able, fair, and just men in this House. I expect to back him up in his effort to take the profits out of war. [Applause.]

Now, then, some of you propose, by saying this is a gag rule, to send it back to committee. Why are you afraid to face the music here? Let the bill be read. It is in your power to amend it. If you do not like the bill, kill it, but do not slap the Military Affairs Committee and its distinguished, unselfish chairman in the face by any such action. There is no use for a committee to have hearings for weeks and months if you are going to send it back without reading and debating it. Come on and let us fight it out. If you do not like the bill as it passes the Committee of the Whole, you can then move to recommit.

Mr. SHORT. In fact, our committee unanimously reported the bill.

Mr. THOMASON. This bill came out on a unanimous report of the committee. There was not a vote against it. There was a lot of publicity given to it. Everybody had a chance to be heard. All of these different organizations appeared before this committee, and not one single witness, that I can recall, appeared who did not express hearty approval of the bill. This is a fine opportunity to start some needed legislation on this question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN].

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a very calm, and, if possible, judicial statement concerning the situation that now confronts the House. There is no surprise in this matter. This bill was reported on February 12 after long hearings, which were reported in the press every day.

The Rules Committee on two separate occasions, and publicly, heard the unanimous request of the Committee on Military Affairs to give us a rule. And the reason we asked a rule was in order that we might bring it up at an early date and not wait for Calendar Wednesday. We asked only for a wide-open rule, with all the general debate possible, confined to the bill itself. The bill has been reported and on the Union Calendar ever since February 27, month before last. House Resolution 133 has been on the House Calendar all that time.

Nobody can claim to be taken by surprise as to the provisions of this rule or of the measure proposed to be considered under the rule.

The House of Representatives is asked by my distinguished friend from Texas, a member of the committee (not the gentleman from Texas who last addressed us), however, to withdraw the bill and go into conference with the Senate and agree with them on the provisions of a bill. I should like to know who is authorized to speak for the Senate. When has the Senate ever agreed on anything in advance or even afterward? [Laughter.]

Why, Mr. Speaker, this is a simple proposal that has been in the hearts of the 4,000,000 men who followed the flag during the World War, when they realized that excessive and unreasonable profits were being made, and as soon as I came to Congress or very soon thereafter, to wit, on December 6, 1922, I started this agitation in the form of a resolution to set up a commission to study the matter, which ultimately resulted in the War Policies Commission, and on that Commission we had 14 members, 6 members of President Hoover's Cabinet, 4 members of this House, and 4 Members of the Senate, and this is an effort to effectuate in legislation the reports and recommendations of the War Policies Commission.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. In a moment. Let me first finish my statement.

So far as this taxing provision is concerned, the Committee on Military Affairs by its report recommends to you and to the Congress that may be sitting in the event of war, which we hope may never come, that instead of the 95-percent tax upon excess war profits, that the tax then be 100 percent.

The Committee on Military Affairs has no taxing power; and if there had been in the bill which I introduced a provision authorizing the levying of taxes, it might have gone to the Committee on Ways and Means. I offered in that bill only provisions that the Committee on Military Affairs had jurisdiction of. There are 435 Members of this House, and every one of them, every day since we met here in January, could have introduced a bill that would be before the Ways and Means Committee, authorizing the levy of a tax of 100 percent on war profits; and if that has not been called to their attention, any Member who has been today finding some fault with this bill because it does not contain a provision taxing the excess profits out of war today can introduce such a bill, or can introduce such a bill tomorrow, or can introduce such a bill any day that this House may be in session, and it will be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and will there be considered; and I will guarantee that the American Legion and every patriotic American who believes that the war profiteers should not be permitted to make their millions while the boys suffer will be behind the proposal before the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. MAY and Mr. MONAGHAN rose.

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield first to my colleague the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I call the attention of the gentleman and the House to the fact that this is a bill reported without even the offering of an amendment by any member of the committee, and reported by a unanimous vote, and then the matter was taken up with the Rules Committee and presented without objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. There is a slight misstatement in that the first bill on this subject was introduced by me the very first day of the session in January, and bore no. 3. It was bill no. 3, and has been before the House ever since the first day of the session. No. 3 was amended after consideration by the committee and receiving suggestions as a result of hearings, until it finally became no. 5529. However, in substance, it is the same bill that has been continuously before the Congress and before the committee since the very first day of the session, and nobody need be taken by surprise as to any particular matter.

Mr. MAY. And notwithstanding the fact that the hearings are full of evidence on the question of taxes and what amount of taxes ought to be levied and when they should be levied, nobody offered any amendment in committee proposing a tax, because we all felt that the Military Affairs Committee had no jurisdiction with respect to taxes.

Mr. McSWAIN. That was my view—that the committee could not take such jurisdiction.

It is now in the power of this body to take away jurisdiction from any committee, if it wants to. Every committee is the creature of this body, and I am not so much of a parliamentarian as to say that, to a bill to take the profits out of war, an amendment to authorize the levying of an excess-profits tax as a result of the war would not be in order. I am not prepared to say this, but I am saying we want this bill brought before the House, and if any Member has a constructive suggestion he will not find this committee hostile to it. We have no special pride in it. We are trying to bring something before the country that the country has been demanding ever since the 11th of November 1918.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GREENWOOD. In connection with this rule, some have suggested that the rule should have been made wide open so as to have permitted amendments concerning taxation. It would be setting aside all the precedents of the House to ask the Rules Committee to make germane provisions offered from the floor of the House on matters of taxation that have never even been submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means. This would be a very unusual procedure, and when the chairman of the legislative committee appeared before the Rules Committee it was not suggested that we set aside or thwart the action of the Committee on Ways and Means by making an amendment germane that might be offered from the floor of the House which would set aside all precedents of the House.

Mr. McSWAIN. In response to the statement, I will say that if this bill is passed and becomes a law, if I am alive I shall sponsor a bill before the Ways and Means Committee to authorize the tax which they are now suggesting. I shall sponsor it, if no one else does, if I am alive and a Member of this House, because I am dedicated, body and soul, to the proposition that the burdens of war shall be equalized among the citizens of the United States just as far as is morally possible.

Mr. SWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SWEENEY. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he stated that if war was declared we would have plenty of time to pass a resolution providing for the taxation.

Mr. McSWAIN. No; I said nothing of the kind. A bill can be introduced now and at any time to provide for taxation to take the excess war profits.

Mr. SWEENEY. We are not at war now. Why not provide the taxation now, and not leave it simply a draft bill?

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman will read the bill carefully, he will see that it is not a draft bill.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Is not that the sole purpose of the bill?

Mr. McSWAIN. No. The gentleman ought to know that that is limited so that if you become a soldier you will have a fair chance with the fellow who stays at home.

Mr. SWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield again? Are not all the powers given to the Executive by this bill within his power now?

Mr. McSWAIN. No; he has not the power at all. You have got to confer that power on him by statute. The President has not any power except what is given him by the Constitution and by statute.

Now, let us vote this up, give consideration to this measure, and everybody remain calm and cool. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. BOILEAU. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. If the House votes down the previous question, will it be in order to offer an amendment embodying taxation?

The SPEAKER. The rule can be amended if the House votes down the previous question. The question is on the previous question.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU, Mr. MAVERICK and others) there were 106 ayes and 34 noes.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 258, nays 71, not voting 102, as follows:

CLAIMANTS WHO SUFFERED LOSS FROM FIRES SET BY GOVERNMENT-OPERATED RAILROADS IN MINNESOTA IN 1918

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in connection with H. R. 3662.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for April 1, on page 4768, I discussed with my colleagues one of the alleged objections to H. R. 3662, which is the bill for the relief of claimants who were burned out in the great fire of October 1918 in Minnesota. I briefly called attention to the lack of any foundation for one alleged objection to the bill—namely, that it is an old bill and has never had serious consideration. I pointed out that this measure has been seriously brought to the attention of Congress but that it has been impossible to get action on it due to the fact that one objector could prevent consideration.

Today I want to discuss another alleged objection to the bill. I was talking to a colleague, who said to me, "Well, these people were treated very liberally and really received full pay for their losses, did they not?" I took occasion right there to point out to my friend that the contrary was true. The Government "chiseled" on its own citizens, and instead of being generous, deliberately broke its agreement to fulfill its obligation, and told them that they would have to take 40 or 50 percent of their actual loss or get nothing. The Government was anything else but generous, and, as I have heretofore pointed out, a great wrong was done by a bureaucratic official. This proposition of the alleged fairness of the settlement was fully considered by the committee, which conducted extensive hearings in March 1930. One of the witnesses who appeared before the committee was the Honorable H. A. Dancer, who was one of the trial judges when these cases were in the courts. Judge Dancer was recognized for years as a jurist of high standing and ability. He resigned his position of judge some 2 or 3 years before the hearings on this bill were held in 1930. In presenting this bill to Congress it was desired to have one of the trial judges testify, and Judge Dancer was the only one available in March 1930. At my request he appeared and gave testimony before the Claims Committee. I want to quote his testimony dealing with the question of alleged liberality of the settlements. On page 97 of the hearings Judge Dancer uses this language:

> Thousands of these people who were entitled to payment of 100 cents on the dollar for their claims were faced with the necessity of accepting 50 cents on the dollar unless they cared to go to court individually and fight out each individual case. They did not know how long it would be before the Government would get around to pay their judgments. They were entitled to relief promptly. They were faced with the necessity of waiting years and years for that relief they were entitled to, and so, under the circumstances, I think they accepted and executed those releases under compulsion. They were under more compulsion which has been likened to that of a man at the point of a gun. A man at the point of a gun might have a fair show if he could knock the gun out of the hands of the other man. But against the Government that would not pay over 50 cents on the dollar—well, they had to take what they could get.

The above language is significant and comes from a man who was in a position to know absolutely what took place. I again quote from Judge Dancer on page 102 of the hearings where he uses this language:

> I realize that it will be urged strenuously that these cases were compromised, that the Government never admitted liability, and that when the fire sufferers accepted 50 or 40 cents on the dollar of their loss, and executed a full release, they became bound thereby, and have no legal, moral, or equitable claim to further relief at this time. I disagree with such argument. If, in the beginning, without 5 years delay and litigation, and before the liability of the Government had been finally adjudicated and established, the Government had settled the cases as of doubtful liability and on a compromised basis, a different situation entirely would have been now presented to Congress; but the Government declined to compromise any claim until after its liability in hundreds of claims had been definitely and finally established. I do not have in mind any act evidencing more charity and brotherly love than the act of 278 fire claimants in the city of Cloquet who had, by the judgment of the Supreme Court, become entitled to recover of the Government in full for their loss from the fire. They voluntarily accepted 50 cents on the dollar on their loss in order that the Government might be persuaded to pay 50 cents on the dollar of the loss of large numbers of other fire sufferers whose claims had not been so adjudicated and established.

Virtually the same situation existed with regard to a very large proportion of all persons with whom settlements were made. Either they had thus secured findings from the court that they were entitled to recover from the Government in full for their losses or else their neighbors who were burned out by the same fire which burned them out had secured such adjudication. To thousands of these claimants the Government, in making settlement, yielded nothing except its right to compel each claimant to try his case separately, and that at a cost to him of more than the amount of his loss, to say nothing of the possible years of delay which faced him in securing such redress. The settlements were clearly under compulsion as far as the fire sufferers were concerned. It was up to them to take what the Government was willing to pay or suffer interminable delays and prohibitive costs, even though their right to full compensation had been definitely established by the courts. As I view it, the only debatable questions then were as to the exact boundary lines of the district where liability had been so established, and the amounts of the losses of the various persons involved, and the presumption is that after years of litigation the boundary lines as disclosed by a preponderance of evidence must have been fairly well established and known to the negotiating parties.

THE CHILD-LABOR AMENDMENT

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, for a hundred years we have been trying to abolish child labor. The child-labor amendment, endorsed by the finest and most sincere champions of humanitarian legislation from Mrs. Roosevelt down, has been assailed by those who want to perpetuate exploitation of the young and the helpless. It has been defended by the noblest and the best of our citizenship, regardless of party lines.

Our President declared:

> One of the accomplishments under the National Recovery Act which has given me the greatest gratification is the outlawing of child labor. It shows how simple a long-desired reform, which no individual or State could accomplish alone, may be brought about when people work together. It is my desire that the advances attained through the National Recovery Act be made permanent. In the child-labor field the obvious method of maintaining the present gains is through ratification of the child-labor amendment. I hope this may be achieved.

Just the other day I heard an illuminating address by the able attorney, Arthur Garfield Hays, over broadcasting station WEVD, in which, discussing this child-labor amendment, he said:

> At the beginning of the factory system we heard of the God-given right even of babies to work. We heard of the God-given right of parents to use their children to add to the family income. Yet everyone knows that this God-given right is a curse of poverty. It is wrong to designate a necessity as a right. Sometimes the right of the child to work is a correlative of the right of the adult to starve.

Without going into the intricate legalism that generally accompanies objections to humane and decent laws, I want to call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that more and more the combat over new statutes resolves itself into a question as to whether these statutes would benefit the average man and woman or not. If the ordinary person would benefit, the letters and telegrams in commendation usually come from farmers, workers, and small business men who are on the edge of bankruptcy. If the legislation is of profit to the exploiting class, plenty of communications, typed on expensive bond paper and handsomely gotten up, reach the Members of the National Legislature. I have received thousands of communications of this character. I have always tried to answer them and to extend the proper courtesy to those who wrote me, regardless of their motives or their status in life. But I have never been deceived as to their background, interests, and motives.

Repeatedly I have emphasized that the Democratic Party, if it is to adhere to the principles of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson, must stand for a government maintained in the interest of those who produce. Such a government means real democracy. A party consecrated to that philosophy is a party of real democracy. If our party is to sell itself to beneficiaries of privilege, it should discard its name and call itself a party of Hamiltonian federalism, of Bourbon toryism, of Wall Street capitalism, and waste no more time in pretty protestations about its progressive tendencies.

I appeal to believers in fundamental democracy to stand solidly together. Only yesterday the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Congressman GILDEA, issued a clarion call to party members who recognize the priority of the right of man. Never in American history has democracy had so magnificent an opportunity. And never will its defeat be more ignominious if it fails to utilize that opportunity.

PROFITS OF WAR

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it is my firm conviction that every man has a right to form his own opinion according to the dictates of his own conscience. It is likewise my opinion that having formed that opinion, he is entitled to cast his vote as he sees fit, no matter what others may have to say on the subject.

I am one of those who would be willing to go to any extreme in the form of legislation to eliminate the possibility of profit from war or the production of machinery for war. It is my solemn conviction that this is the only way that it will ever be possible to eliminate warfare. I think that fundamental to the destruction of profit from warfare and the manufacturing of war materials is a law to restrict the individual income of any person during the course of the war to as small an amount as possible. I believe that the profit from the war trade should be restricted to the minimum. I know that it is impossible to accomplish this purpose without making use of the power to tax. Any proposal to accomplish the result by any other means is futile. The bill under consideration does not contain a tax proposal.

I am voting against ordering the previous question because I want to have an opportunity to vote for an amendment to the rule which will make a taxing provision germane so that I may finally vote for a bill that will tax every vestige of profit from the manufacturing of war machines both during peace time and war time.

It is not pleasant to have to vote against the Rules Committee and the Committee on Military Affairs, but my convictions force me to do it. I believe that the people whom I represent will approve of my action.

WORKERS' UNEMPLOYMENT, OLD-AGE, AND SOCIAL INSURANCE BILL—HISTORY AND STATUS OF H. R. 2827

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, on February 2, 1934, during the Seventy-third Congress, I first introduced the Lundeen unemployment, old-age, and social-insurance bill, then known as H. R. 7598. Hearings were held on the measure by the House Committee on Labor. After H. R. 7598 had been in committee for 30 legislative days, I filed a motion to discharge the committee from further consideration of the measure. This motion received the signatures of about 30 Members of the House.

On January 3, 1935, I reintroduced the bill in the Seventy-fourth Congress. It is now known as H. R. 2827.

PROVISIONS OF LUNDEEN BILL

The Lundeen unemployment, old-age, and social-insurance bill provides in section 1 that the—

> Bill shall be known by the title "The workers' unemployment, old-age, and social-insurance act."

SECTION 2

Section 2 provides that—

The Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to provide for the immediate establishment of a system of unemployment insurance for the purpose of providing compensation for all workers and farmers above 18 years of age, unemployed through no fault of their own. Such compensation shall be equal to average local wages, but shall in no case be less than $10 per week plus $3 for each dependent. Workers willing and able to do full-time work but unable to secure full-time employment shall be entitled to receive the difference between their earnings and the average local wages for full-time employment. The minimum compensation guaranteed by this act shall be increased in conformity with rises in the cost of living. Such unemployment insurance shall be administered and controlled, and the minimum compensation shall be adjusted by workers and farmers under rules and regulations which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Labor in conformity with the purposes and provisions of this act through unemployment-insurance commissions directly elected by members of workers' and farmers' organizations.

SECTION 3

Section 3 provides that—

The Secretary of Labor is hereby further authorized and directed to provide for the immediate establishment of other forms of social insurance for the purpose of providing compensation for all workers and farmers who are unable to work because of sickness, old age, maternity, industrial injury, or any other disability. Such compensation shall be the same as provided by section 2 of this act for unemployment insurance and shall be administered in like manner. Compensation for disability because of maternity shall be paid to women during the period of 8 weeks previous and 8 weeks following childbirth.

SECTION 4

Section 4 provides that—

All moneys necessary to pay compensation guaranteed by this act and the cost of establishing and maintaining the administration of this act shall be paid by the Government of the United States. All such moneys are hereby appropriated out of all funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated. Further taxation necessary to provide funds for the purposes of this act shall be levied on inheritances, gifts, and individual and corporation incomes of $5,000 a year and over. The benefits of this act shall be extended to workers, whether they be industrial, agricultural, domestic, office, or professional workers, and to farmers, without discrimination because of age, sex, race, color, religion, or political opinion or affiliation. No worker or farmer shall be disqualified from receiving the compensation guaranteed by this act because of past participation in strikes, or refusal to work in place of strikers, or at less than average local or trade-union wages, or under unsafe or unsanitary conditions, or where hours are longer than the prevailing union standards of a particular trade or locality, or at an unreasonable distance from home.

HEARINGS HELD

From February 4 to February 15, 1933, inclusive, hearings were held on the Lundeen bill by the House Subcommittee on Labor, with Congressman MATTHEW A. DUNN, of Pennsylvania, as chairman. The subcommittee reported the bill favorably to the House Committee on Labor, and on March 15, 1935, Congressman CONNERY, of Massachusetts, Chairman of the House Committee on Labor, submitted to the House of Representatives the favorable report of the Labor Committee. This committee report (No. 418), submitted by Congressman CONNERY, states that the Committee on Labor, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 2827, introduced by Mr. LUNDEEN, to provide for workers' unemployment, old-age, and social insurance, having had the bill under consideration, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommends that the bill do pass.

The hearings commenced on February 4, 1935, and concluded on February 15, 1935, during which time testimony was heard as follows: 80 witnesses appeared to speak in favor of the bill—7 economists, specialists in the law, social service and relief; women in industry, maternity care, and medical service; 12 representatives of American Federation of Labor local unions, most of whom were delegated by district committees of American Federation of Labor locals representing hundreds of locals; farmers, veterans, unemployed workers, small home and land owners; a representative of the railroad brotherhoods; representatives of professional workers, including writers, teachers, physicians, architects, engineers, chemists, and technicians, dentists, and many others. All of the above-mentioned witnesses testified as to the wide-spread necessity for genuine unemployment and social insurance and testified in favor of this bill, H. R. 2827.

FEATURES OF THE BILL

The bill provides for the immediate establishment of a system of social insurance to compensate all workers and farmers, 18 years of age and over, in all industries, occupations, and professions, who are unemployed through no fault of their own, and for the entire period of this involuntary unemployment. To prevent the lowering of minimum standards of living, insurance benefits are to be equal to full average wages in the locality; and in no case less than $10 a week, plus $3 for each dependent. Those employed part time who are unable to find full-time employment are to be paid the difference between their earnings and the prescribed insurance benefit. As a further safeguard of the minimum standards of living, stability of the purchasing power of the insurance payments is to be maintained by requiring the minimum compensation for unemployment to be increased with increases in the cost of living. Administration of the insurance and adjustment of the minimum compensation shall be controlled by unemployment insurance commissions directly elected by workers' and farmers' organizations under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor in conformity with the purposes and provisions of the act.

Similar social insurance shall be established by the Secretary of Labor for all workers and farmers who are unable to work because of sickness, old age, maternity, industrial injury, or any other disability.

Moneys necessary to pay the compensation and to administer the act shall be paid by the Government of the United States out of funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, increased if necessary by levying additional taxation on inheritances, gifts, and individual, and corporation incomes of $5,000 a year and over.

DIFFERENCES FROM OTHER PROPOSALS

This bill differs from other proposals in that (1) it covers all the unemployed for the entire period of their unemployment, whereas other systems limit the occupations covered and the duration of benefits so that numbers of the unemployed who are outside its scope or who have exhausted benefit payments are left dependent upon private charity or public relief; (2) it derives its funds from current taxation instead of from reserves built up through taxation on pay rolls, which inevitably raises prices to the consumers, taxes, wages, and salaries, directly or indirectly, and by the "reserve" features complicates the debt-credit structure of the monetary system, thus tending to prolong depression and to create further maladjustment between funds available for investment and money available for consumers' purchasing power; (3) it provides democratic administration by workers' representatives.

WHY SOCIAL INSURANCE IS NEEDED

Testimony summarizing the need for this new form of social insurance was as follows:

(1) The continuation of extensive mass unemployment demands comprehensive action to provide insurance for all workers, in lieu of income from earnings now cut off through long-continued depression. Estimates of present unemployment placed before the committee ranged from 14,000,000 to 17,000,000. Indices of employment and earnings were cited showing that both are still considerably below the level of 1923–33 or 1925–27, but that total earnings are disproportionately low as compared even with the continued low level of employment, thus indicating a lowering of the purchasing power of the masses. At the same time, output per man per hour has considerably and disproportionately increased, thus indicating the probability of increase in permanent technological unemployment.

(2) The great and vital need of the unemployed for means with which to buy the necessities of life for themselves and their families is not and cannot be met by the uncertain and inadequate provision for relief. It is pointed out that the new proposed work-relief program will at best, if enacted, provide relief for approximately one-third of the jobless in the United States who are seeking employment. Yet there are at least 20,000,000 persons in this country whose sole or chief source of subsistence is obtained through the program of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. For these only an assured and immediate social-insurance program can prevent appalling destitution which will permanently undermine standards of living.

(3) Mass unemployment, though unusually long continued and wide-spread in the present depression is not an unusual emergency, but has recurred at frequent intervals in this country. Between 1793 and 1925 the number of depressions was 32 with an average period of 4 years from panic to panic. For every year of depression there was only one and a half years of prosperity. The time has come for definite recognition of the obligation of government and the economic system to insure continuity of income.

(4) This is a practical proposal. Technicians and scientists agree that the productive capacity of the United States is equal to a far greater measure of security and to far higher standards of living than have yet been established; and science and invention promise to expand this productivity to a higher level if the productive system can be freed from the recurrent burden of industrial depression.

(5) This, however, cannot be achieved merely by rearranging workers' earnings by taxing pay rolls for reserves for future unemployment. The first step is compensation for insecurity by taxing higher incomes, not pay rolls.

(6) As a continuing problem, mass unemployment requires congressional action because of the mandate laid upon Congress by the Constitution to provide for the general welfare. The general welfare is undermined at all points by mass unemployment.

ESTIMATES OF COST OF THE BILL

To determine the cost of the social insurance which would be provided in H. R. 2827 requires several estimates, which should be used with caution. In the first place, the United States has no current basis for ascertaining accurately the number of the unemployed.

The second and more important point requiring caution relates to the estimate of the effect of social insurance upon purchasing power, and its consequent results in decreasing the amount of unemployment through stimulation of reemployment. No experience in this country is available to indicate the extent to which an increase in consumers' purchasing power for those in the lower-income groups would stimulate production and increase employment.

If it is assumed, however, that the entire amount of benefits paid under the provisions of this bill would appear in the market as new purchasing power, economists have calculated that 60 percent of this total would become available as wages and salaries. Therefore, on the basis of given average wages and salaries, it can be estimated how many persons could be reemployed, and this would result in a corresponding decrease in the number of unemployed eligible for benefits, and, therefore, in a reduction of costs.

Having in mind the above cautions, it may be said at once that if there be 10,000,000 unemployed, the annual gross cost, after taking care otherwise of those who should receive old-age pensions and those who are unemployed because of sickness or disability, and eliminating those under 18 years of age, to whom the bill does not apply, would be $8,235,000,000. Deducting from this the estimated decrease in the cost of unemployment insurance on account of the reemployment of workers following the establishment of a social-insurance program, $6,090,000,000, and adding to it the cost of old-age pensions, sickness, disability, accident, and maternity insurance, and deducting present annual expenditures for relief amounting to $3,375,000,000, we would have a net annual increase for the Federal Government imposed by the provisions of the bill amounting to $4,060,000,000.

If the number of unemployed be equal to the average number estimated as unemployed in 1934, as 14,021,000, then the annual net increase in cost, after deducting present expenditures for relief and estimating the reemployment which would follow adequate social insurance, would be $5,800,000,000.

The estimate of total costs of the program for social insurance under the bill should be compared with the amount that workers have lost in wages and salaries since the beginning of the depression. According to estimates published in the Survey of Current Business for January 1935, total income paid out to labor since 1929 was as follows (in millions):

Total income	$52,700	$48,400	$40,700	$31,500	$29,300
Loss from 1929		4,300	12,000	21,200	23,400

The total loss to workers in wages and salaries in the first 4 years of the depression has amounted to $60,900,000,000. It is with these huge losses sustained by American workers during these 4 years that the costs of security provided by the bill should be compared. Furthermore, this report has already pointed out the inadequacy of present relief measures, and it must therefore be realized that the cost of truly adequate relief would be the cost of this bill.

SOURCES OF FUNDS

It has been pointed out that an important difference between H. R. 2827 and other proposals is in the source of funds. Other proposals, including H. R. 4120 (the Wagner-Lewis-Doughton bill) depend on the building up of reserves in advance of payment of benefits, these reserves to be secured by a tax on pay rolls. Several serious objections are made to this method. In an article in the Annalist, published by the New York Times on February 22, 1935 (by Elgin Groseclose, professor of economics, University of Oklahoma), under the title "The Chimera of Unemployment Reserves Under the American Money System", attention is called to the provisions in H. R. 4120 in these words:

"The Wagner bill as introduced in Congress sets up in the Federal Treasury an 'unemployment trust fund' in which is to be held all moneys received under the provisions of the act, and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to invest these moneys, except such amount as is not required to meet current withdrawals, in a defined category of obligations of the United States or obligations guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the United States."

The Annalist article summarizes the objections to these reserves for unemployment insurance as follows:

"(1) Financial reserves can be effective only in cases where contingencies can be calculated and determined by actuarial methods and where these contingencies arise in sufficient regularity to permit the arrangement of reserves in accordance therewith. (2) The incidence of depressions are irregular and unpredictable, and hence defy actuarial procedure. (3) Purchasing power cannot be stored up en masse under our money system, which is a system of debt rather than metallic circulation. (4) The attempt to create unemployment reserve will intensify booms. (5) Unemployment reserves are incapable of mobilization when needed and any attempt to mobilize them will only result in further intensification of depressions."

Testimony before the Committee on Labor on H. R. 2827 brought out the further objection that a tax on pay rolls is a tax on cost of production which is passed on to the consumer in higher prices to all consumers and to workers in lower wages as well as in higher prices to them as consumers. Thus it tends to reduce rather than to expand purchasing power, causing in itself recurrent industrial depression which arises out of the failure of consumption to keep pace with production, or a disproportion between money available for consumers' purchases and funds available for investment in increased production.

Moreover, these reserves, even if they could be accumulated without these disastrous effects upon consumers' purchasing power, and upon the monetary system, would be inadequate to cover more than a fraction of needs. The Commissioner of Labor Statistics and Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER (in radio addresses on Mar. 7) have estimated that if H. R. 4120 had been in effect from 1922 there would have been set aside by 1934 the sum of $10,000,000,000; yet the figures on the national income published by the Department of Commerce show that in 4 of those years workers lost $60,000,000,000 of wages and salaries. Thus, even if reserves seem to involve saving the Treasury from obligation, as a matter of fact, they leave unsolved the real problem of protecting workers against the destitution of mass unemployment.

As the only adequate solution of the problem, and to avoid the unsound idea of setting aside reserves, the funds required in H. R. 2827 are made an obligation upon existing wealth and current higher incomes of individuals and corporations. These sources may be indicated as follows:

(1) Income taxes of individuals: If the United States were to apply merely the tax rates of Great Britain upon all individual incomes of $5,000 or over, a considerable sum would be available for social insurance. These rates in 1928 would have yielded the Federal Government five and three-fourths billion dollars as against slightly over one billion actually collected. In 1932, a year of low income, we would have collected on the same basis $1,128,000,000 as against the actual receipts of $324,000,000.

(2) Corporation income tax: Compared with other countries also our corporation tax is very low. Taking a flat rate of 25 percent, we would have raised in 1928 the amount of $2,600,000,000 instead of $1,200,000,000.

(3) Inheritance or estates: Here again the United States is very lenient. In 1928 on a total declared gross estate of 3½ billion dollars, the total collected by Federal and State taxes was only $42,000,000, or a little over 1 percent. If an average of 25 percent were taken this would have been raised in 1928 to $888,000,000.

(4) Tax-exempt securities: Exact figures on the total are not available, but here is an important source of large additional returns which should be available for the general welfare.

(5) Tax on corporate surplus: In 1928, the corporate surplus, representing the accumulation by corporations of funds which had not been distributed to labor and capital amounted to $47,000,000,000, and even in 1932 it was over 36 billions. Made possible as it is by the cooperation of labor and capital, thus surplus which is now set aside to meet capital's claims for exigencies certainly should be also a source of funds for labor's social insurance in the exigencies of unemployment. The Department of Commerce has showed in its study of the national income that labor has lost a larger percent of its earned income in the depression than capital has lost in interest charges, because capital has been sustained by drawing both on current income and on accumulated surplus. The great economist, Adam Smith, 150 years ago, called the industrial system a "collective undertaking." Thus it is both logical and just to provide a tax on corporate surpluses as a source for social insurance.

THIS BILL IS UNQUESTIONABLY CONSTITUTIONAL

This bill provides for the appropriation of Federal moneys out of the Treasury of the United States for the payment of compensation to the unemployed, the sick, the disabled, and the aged. It is thus simply an exercise of the appropriating power, the power of Congress to spend money. The bill does, indeed, do more than provide for appropriations; it provides for the setting up of the administrative machinery. But the appropriating power of Congress necessarily carries with it the incidental power to provide administrative machinery for disbursing the moneys appropriated and for insuring their proper application to the purposes sought to be achieved by Congress.

One of the enumerated powers set forth in the Constitution is the power of Congress to "lay and collect taxes, pay debts, and provide for the common defense and the general welfare of the United States." To limit this power to spend moneys for the "general welfare", the power to spend money for the execution of other enumerated powers, is to rob the "general welfare" clause of its meaning, and thus to violate an elementary principle of constitutional construction. Such distinguished constitutional authorities as Washington, Madison, Monroe, Hamilton, Calhoun, and Justice Storey have repudiated the conception of an appropriating power limited by the other powers. Our highest authority, the United States Supreme Court, has, in the famous Sugar Bounty Case, definitely upheld appropriations by the Government in payment of purely moral obligations, entirely beyond the scope of the other specifically enumerated powers. Congress itself has uniformly and consistently exercised its appropriating power for any purpose which it deems for the general welfare and irrespective of whether the purpose came within the specifically enumerated powers or not. Surely it could not be said that a bill which will provide a system of unemployment and social insurance for millions of unemployed, sick, disabled, and aged, is less for the "general welfare" than other bills such as the one above. If Congress passes the bill, it will thereby declare that, in its judgment, the bill is for the "general welfare" and no court has the power to substitute its judgment on this question for that of Congress.

While the bill does indeed invest the Secretary of Labor with large discretion this does not render the bill unconstitutional. The United States Supreme Court has again and again sustained delegations of power to the President, Cabinet, officers, and commissions. Thus, the Tariff Act of 1922 was held constitutional, although it vested the President with the power to raise or lower the tariff upon any important article whenever it found that American products were at a competitive disadvantage with those imported from abroad. Again an act of Congress which gave the Secretary of the Treasury, on the recommendation of experts, the power to fix an established standard of purity, quality, and fitness for consumption of certain commodities imported into the United States, was held constitutional.

In H. R. 2827 the discretion vested in the Secretary of Labor is narrow, for the beneficiaries who are to receive the compensation are named, the minimum compensation is prescribed, the maximum compensation is ascertainable, and the nature of the compensation is fixed. Certainly the discretion here vested in the Secretary of Labor is far less wide than that vested in the Secretary of Agriculture by the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, wherein the Secretary of Agriculture was granted the power "to provide for rental or benefit payments in connection with crop reduction in such amounts as the Secretary deems fair and reasonable."

No specific amount is appropriated by this bill but this does not render the bill unconstitutional, for general indefinite appropriations are common. The first of such general indefinite appropriations was passed when Congress directed that all expenses accruing and necessary for the maintenance of lighthouses should be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. Since then hundreds of statutes containing similar indefinite appropriations have been passed.

This bill deprives no one of his property without the "due process of law" guaranteed by the Constitution. Unlike all other unemployment and social-insurance plans, this bill does not involve the setting up of "reserves" created by enforced contributions by employers or employees. The only way that any person could regard himself as in any wise deprived of property for the purpose of financing this bill would be by regarding this bill as a taxing measure. The bill provides that "further taxation necessary to provide funds for the purposes of this act, shall be levied on inheritances, gifts, and individual and corporation incomes of $5,000 a year or over." But even if it can be argued that this is a taxing measure, the bill is a proper exercise of the taxing power of Congress since Congress has the power under the Constitution to lay taxes for the "general welfare" subject to two limitations only. In the case of duties, imports, and excises "this must be uniform." In the case of direct taxes, they must be apportioned according to the census. Neither limitation, however, applies to incomes, gifts, or inheritances since the sixteenth amendment. Once Congress has levied such a tax, the tax cannot be assailed by a taxpayer since the courts will not review the exercise of the congressional discretion involved. The decision of Congress is thus final.

This bill in no way involves a question of usurpation of the rights of the States. While the power of Congress to regulate commerce and industry is limited to the "interstate-commerce power" and any regulation by the Federal Government of intrastate business and of matters "not commerce" is unconstitutional, this argument is wholly inapplicable to the present bill. This bill is not an exercise of the interstate-commerce power; it is an exercise of the appropriating power. This bill does not involve any regulation of intrastate commerce of matters "not commerce." It does not involve the setting up of "reserves." It does not set up such business relationships as might possibly be involved in the creation of special accounts with employers or employees based on their contributions to a reserve fund. The Supreme Court has explicitly declared that no State will be heard to complain that the Federal Government is invading State's rights when it simply exercises its appropriating power.

The Congress which passed the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 declared that the loss of the purchasing power of the farmers endangered the entire economic structure of the Nation. The mechanism set up by that act was conceived as a device to restore purchasing power. Similarly this bill is an effort to restore purchasing power, and may be therefore conceived to remove obstacles to the free flow of interstate commerce, by creating purchasing power for the masses who must spend the money for these necessities of life and who, in spending the money for these necessities, will thereby remove obstructions to the free flow of interstate commerce.

Since this bill is merely an exercise of the appropriating power, it rests upon the same constitutional basis as do the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act and Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act, which involve merely an exercise of the power of Congress to spend Federal moneys. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act, and, indeed, the bulk of the national emergency legislation which has been enacted during the Hoover and Roosevelt administrations involve recognition of the national character of our problems. Furthermore, they indicate an appreciation of the inadequacy and the cumbersomeness of the Federal subsidy system. These acts all provide for direct aid to persons, firms, and corporations in the States. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act supplies Federal moneys directly to banks throughout the country. Unemployment and social-insurance problems are even more clearly Federal problems. They require a similar national solution.

The Congress which passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, the Home Owner's Loan Corporation Act, and the bulk of the national emergency legislation clearly conceived that it was for the "general welfare" that individuals, corporations, and banks should be given money out of the Treasury of the United States. When Congress passes this bill, it will have realized that it is for the "general welfare" that all human beings in the United States who, through no fault of their own, are unable to earn the necessities of life, should receive money representing their contribution to production so that they may purchase the necessities of life and, in so doing, maintain not only their lives but the economic life of the United States.

In view of the foregoing considerations, this bill is clearly constitutional.

SUMMARY

The committee recommends the passage of this bill as necessary to prevent and relieve wide-spread destitution; as practical in view of the great productive capacity of the Nation and its surpluses available for taxation; as sound in its probable effects upon purchasing power and the monetary system; and as constitutional under the obligation of Congress to legislate for the general welfare.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Investigation Missouri River possibilities in North and South Dakota

Whereas it is necessary to check the flow of the Missouri River in North Dakota and South Dakota by means of a large manually controlled diversion dam; and to release the stored water as needed to maintain an average flow to the mouth of the Missouri River and to divert part of aforesaid stored water to furnish surface water for cities and villages in North Dakota and South Dakota; also part of aforesaid diverted water to be used in replenishing receding ground-water tables in North Dakota and South Dakota; and

Whereas many of the shelter belts now owned by farmers are dying from lack of ground-water supply; and

Whereas it would be necessary to restore ground-water tables before a shelter belt of such large proportions as proposed by the Government could be expected to survive; and

Whereas the control of the Missouri River between limits would make it entirely possible to afford the great Northwestern territory a less expensive transportation of agricultural products; and

Whereas the Missouri River forms a part of one of the most dangerous flood basins, namely, the Mississippi-Missouri Basin, which annually causes millions of dollars of property damage and loss of life; and

Whereas the Missouri River having caused local floods by excessive water and ice jams causes thousands of dollars of property damage and loss of life; aforesaid losses could be averted by complete Missouri River control; and

Whereas North Dakota and South Dakota were at one time one of the largest Northwest breeding areas for fowl in the United States, and with the receding water table causing water holes, sloughs, ponds, etc., to dry up, thus forcing aforementioned fowl to leave the aforesaid areas; and

Whereas with the development of the Missouri River a large amount of cheap electrical energy could be produced which would act as an incentive for industrial expansion within the States of North Dakota and South Dakota; and

Whereas every year thousands of acres of North Dakota's and South Dakota's most productive land is washed away by the Missouri River at its high stages; and

Whereas in view of the fact that proper development of the Missouri River very naturally comes under several different departments and/or commissions of the Federal Government, it is respectfully suggested that a commission of five engineers be created to properly investigate the obvious possibilities for development of the Missouri River in North Dakota and South Dakota: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring therein), That we petition the United States Congress, now assembled, and the President of the United States, the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, to appoint and instruct the aforesaid commission of five engineers; and be it further

Resolved, That aforesaid commission be selected from civil engineers in private life, one engineer to be chosen from the States of North Dakota and/or South Dakota; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of North Dakota be and is hereby instructed to forward an authenticated copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C., to the two United States Senators and the two Representatives from North Dakota in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the council of the city of San Fernando, Calif., favoring the adoption of the so-called "Townsend old-age-pension plan", which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by Local Union No. 107, Paper Plate and Bag Workers, and International Pocketbook Workers Union, both of New York City, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of proposed alien and sedition legislation, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of the United States praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana [Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON], which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the city council of Muskegon Heights, Mich., and the board of aldermen of the city of Derby, Conn., favoring the enactment of legislation proclaiming October 11 in each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Beaver and Clearwater, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation amending the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the enactment of the so-called "commodities exchange bill", which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MALONEY presented the petition of R. C. Fisher and sundry other citizens of Waterbury, Conn., praying for an investigation of the alleged denial of justice to tenant farmers and share-croppers of the South by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and favoring the release and full publicity of the so-called "Myers report" on violations of acreage contracts, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WALSH presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Miss Eleanor Baldwin, executive secretary, New England Anti-Vivisection Society, of Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 1737, to exempt dogs from vivisection in the District of Columbia which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Manufacturers and Employers' Association of Taunton, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation restricting the importation of any textile article from any country in a greater volume than the average annual volume from such country during the years 1930 to 1934, both inclusive, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Melrose, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation inimical to public-utility holding companies, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the memorial of the Arcade Malleable Iron Co., of Worcester, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 87, the so-called "Black 30-hour work week bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McCARRAN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, favoring the enactment of legislation enlarging the Dixie National Forest, situated in Clark County, Nev., etc., which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. PITTMAN on the 2d instant, p. 4829, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. McCARRAN also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, favoring the making of sufficient appropriation to establish a monument in memory of the miners of the State of Nevada, in the nature of a home for aged and indigent miners, at some suitable location within the limits of Virginia City, Nev., which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. PITTMAN on the 2d instant, p. 4829, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. NORRIS presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Concurrent resolution concerning Spanish-American War troops

Whereas during the Spanish-American War the troops who were serving in the Philippine Islands in 1899 were requested by the War Department to remain in service for an additional 6 months after the expiration of their enlistment period and until troops could be sent to replace them; and

Whereas these troops were promised by the officers in charge that if they would so remain during the period of such emergency then existing that they would be given regular travel pay of soldiers whose enlistments expired and reenlistment in the service of the United States, as was authorized by section 15 of the Army bill then in force; and

Whereas these troops were held in service for said 6 months' period under such agreement and these troops were never paid such travel pay so promised; and

Whereas numerous citizens of the State of Nebraska would be greatly benefited by such payment; and

Whereas House bill 2024 of the Federal Congress covering such payment has been recommended by the War Claims Committee for passage: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, respectfully memorialized to enact with all convenient speed House bill 2024 of the Federal Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house cause copies of this resolution, duly certified, to be transmitted to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Nebraska, and that the latter be urged to use their best offices to procure the enactment of such legislation as will accomplish the purpose of this resolution.

Mr. NEELY presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of West Virginia, which was ordered to lie on the table:

House concurrent resolution concerning allotment of P. W. A. funds in West Virginia for road building

Whereas West Virginia was allotted only $21,000,000 of the $62,000,000 that would have been due the State on an equitable distribution of P. W. A. funds distributed in the past; and

Whereas a fair allotment to West Virginia of the proposed appropriation for P. W. A. service in the future will be approximately $58,000,000; and

Whereas Ernest L. Bailey, State road commissioner of West Virginia, has asked for an allotment of $20,000,000, to be used for construction and improvement of non-Federal roads in this State; and

Whereas the allotment of $20,000,000, added to such amounts as the State can provide, will provide local employment for rural residents, provide farm-to-market roads, provide for rural mail delivery, permit consolidation of rural schools, and permit rural home owners to seek employment in nearby industrial centers while enjoying country life and the products of their farms and gardens: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of delegates (the senate concurring therein), That we approve and earnestly join in the request of Ernest L. Bailey, State road commissioner, that the amount of $20,000,000 be allotted to West Virginia from P. W. A. funds, when made available by action of Congress, to be used under the direction of the State road commissioner for the construction and improvement of non-Federal roads in this State; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerks of the senate and house of delegates have copies of this resolution sent to the President of the United States and to each of the United States Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from West Virginia.

KEEP THE SCHOOLS OPEN

Mr. WHEELER. I present an editorial appearing in the April 2 issue of Labor, the weekly paper of the standard railway brotherhoods entitled "Keep American Schools Open", and also an editorial from the Washington Daily News of March 29 entitled "Keep the Schools Open", which I ask may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorials are as follows:

[Editorial in Apr. 2, 1935, issue of Labor]

KEEP AMERICAN SCHOOLS OPEN—CONGRESS SHOULD ACCEPT SENATOR CUTTING'S AMENDMENT—NEED OF TRADE-UNION ORGANIZATION AMONG TEACHERS

Senator CUTTING's amendment setting aside $40,000,000 of President Roosevelt's huge relief fund to keep schools open in communities which have exhausted their resources should be approved unanimously by both Houses of Congress.

Only a few days ago Dr. John W. Studebaker, Director of the United States Bureau of Education in the Department of the Interior, announced the result of a survey of American schools made under his direction. The facts thus revealed are truly appalling.

Unless the Federal Government goes to the aid of the public schools at once, Dr. Studebaker predicts that 3,500,000 school children will be denied educational training after April 1.

In many instances teachers have not received a penny of salary since January 1 and yet they are sticking to the job.

It is not necessary to argue with readers of Labor that locking the doors of tens of thousands of American schools would be a calamity of major proportions. The nation that neglects its children is wantonly sacrificing its most precious asset. America cannot afford to make such a blunder.

Labor cannot refrain from recording, with what it regards as pardonable pride, that Senator CUTTING's proposal was suggested by the Federation of Teachers, a real trade union, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Every teacher in the land should be a member of this excellent organization.

The present tragic plight of our schools is largely due to the fact that the big majority of our educators have failed to appreciate the value of organization. United in a militant union, they could do more to save America's endangered school system than any other single force.

[Editorial in the Washington Daily News of Mar. 29, 1935]

KEEP THE SCHOOLS OPEN

The Cutting amendment to the work-relief bill, setting aside $40,000,000 to keep open the schools for the remainder of this school year, should be favorably considered by the House and Senate conference. All of this sum may not be needed, but there is no doubt that many of the States must have help.

Commissioner John W. Studebaker, of the United States Office of Education, estimates that 31 States have total deficits of $37,000,000, out of which $24,500,000 is needed to pay teachers' back salaries. Some 42,000 schools in 25 States are faced with immediate closing orders and 102,000 teachers with loss of income. In view of their meager salaries, loss of income would mean destitution for many teachers.

As F. E. R. A. Administrator Hopkins says, "Teachers should not be identified with relief." The Cutting amendment will keep teachers off the relief rolls, keep the schools open until June, and keep children off the streets.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS—MINORITY VIEWS (REPT. NO. 361, PT. 2)

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, with reference to the pending legislation, I gave notice in the Committee on Commerce that I would reserve the right to file views of the minority to Senate bill 5. Thereafter I suffered an injury and was incapacitated. That accounts for the delay. I have, however, at last prepared the report. I know that we have proceeded far in the debate, and that there have been many amendments adopted to the pending bill, but I should like to have permission of the Senate to file the report at this time in order that it may be printed and put on the desks of Senators, even though that may be after the passage of the bill. If there is any objection, I will not insist, but my excuse is that I could not do the work sooner.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Was the request of the Senator that he be permitted to file views of the minority?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection to that, but I should like to add that if the bill should be finally disposed of, the report which has been presented may be revised to include the amendments which have been made.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall be glad to take that up with the Senator from New York in the course of the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina? The Chair hears none, and the views of the minority will be received and printed.

REGULATION OF LOBBYING

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce a bill and to have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a bill to define lobbyists, to require registration of lobbyists, and provide regulation thereof.

I wish to state that it is my intention to ask the Committee on the Judiciary to appoint a subcommittee to investigate and consider this measure at once. It is my belief that, with the vast expenditures the Government is undertaking, it is absolutely essential that some protection be afforded the public; and this measure, in my judgment, will provide protection from lobbyists who swarm into Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Alabama.

The bill (S. 2512) to define lobbyists, to require registration of lobbyists, and provide regulation thereof was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

THE BITUMINOUS COAL INDUSTRY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR GUFFEY

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a radio address delivered over the National Broadcasting System April 2, 1935, by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] on the Guffey bituminous-coal bill.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I am going to talk with you briefly this evening on Senate bill 1417, known as the "Guffey bituminous coal bill", which has for its purpose the regulation of the bituminous-coal industry and the conservation of that natural resource.

Before proceeding with my subject I want to particularly express my appreciation and thanks to Hon. M. M. NEELY, the United States Senator from the State of West Virginia, who, as Chairman of the Subcommittee on Interstate Commerce, conducted hearings on the bill. His great knowledge of the subject and desire to be of help in formulating legislation which will enure to the benefit of the people of this country made him the ideal person to conduct these hearings. He has most intelligently, industriously, and successfully discharged his duties.

The legislation provided in the Guffey bituminous coal bill is, in my judgment, of paramount importance to the owners of the bituminous mines in this country, the miners who work in the bituminous mines, and last, but most important, the great majority of the people of this country. The legislation is important to the mine owners because it will enable them, as well as their associate investors, to make a profit through the operation of their mines. It is important to the mine labor of the country in that it will enable them to obtain more steady employment at wages which will make it possible for them to enjoy a much higher standard of living than that to which they have been accustomed in years past. It is important to the great majority of the people of the country, because it will regulate production and thereby preserve this great natural resource for the benefit of the public.

This measure has the support of operators producing a majority of the tonnage in America. It is backed by 95 percent of the men engaged in mining coal. And with the exception of a few selfish interests, it has not been opposed by the consumer.

The proponents of this bill are intensely interested in its success. They believe fully that its failure would bring immediate catastrophe to the bituminous coal industry, ruining thousands of producers, impoverishing half a million miners and their 2,000,000 dependents, and jeopardizing the Nation's fuel supply.

Interstate commerce depends upon it, not only for power in transportation, but in the manufacture of most articles of trade between the States. The very life of America's commerce has its origin in bituminous coal. To foster and safeguard the industry is thus a national problem and obligation.

America's future place among the nations of the world depends largely upon its supply of power—bituminous coal, and for that reason we have a duty to conserve it.

Yet by our failure to control and regulate this most important natural resource, the industry has been conducted in a manner that threatens its destruction.

Unrestricted production and cutthroat competition have resulted in mining practices that waste 20 percent of our best bituminous reserves, and at the same time have brought ruin to producers and poverty to labor.

The Nation's major supply of fuel is in danger from day to day. Operators in the industry were bankrupt and miners on the verge of starvation, when saved temporarily by the Government through the N. R. A.

The purposes of this bill, and the conditions which we seek to remedy, are as follows:

To conserve America's most important natural resource, which, through wasteful mining and operating practices, is being so rapidly depleted that the National Government already is counting the years when our most valuable bituminous deposits will be exhausted.

To thus insure the consumer an adequate supply of fuel at reasonable prices not only for the present but in the long future, when America will be forced to compete with other countries with respect to fuel and power.

To stabilize an industry that for 50 years has failed to conduct successfully its own business, and to do this in the interest of the entire Nation, whose fuel supply is at stake.

To provide a living wage for the 500,000 men in the industry and their 2,000,000 dependents, all of whom most of the time have lived close to starvation.

To build up a national bituminous-coal reserve, owned by the American people, so that for the future we will be assured of an ample supply of fuel at reasonable costs.

What most appeals to me is that the rights of all interests—the consumer, the producer, and the workmen—are safeguarded by placing the industry under the control of a national commission, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the commission reporting to the Congress through the Department of the Interior.

To stabilize the industry several steps are necessary. Every authority and interest admits that the demoralization of the bituminous-coal industry comes from overproduction. With present facilities America can produce 100 percent more coal than it can consume. This has resulted in cutthroat competition and unfair trade practices, with ruin for the operator and starvation for the miner.

The fundamental remedy then, as agreed by all, is to control production. This is accomplished through the Commission which is required to fix the national tonnage.

The Commission apportions to each of the 21 districts their proportion of the national tonnage, and it has the right to increase such quotas if there is a need for additional coal.

The district boards then allocate the district tonnage to the various mines under their jurisdiction. Mine owners have the right to appeal to the Commission. They are thus protected.

The second step in stabilization calls for fixing standard hours of labor and wages. This is absolutely vital, or one section of the country will be cutting the throat of another.

Thus, through the Commission, having allocated tonnage by districts and fixed hours of labor, and, through the district boards, fixed mine quotas and established wage scales by collective bargaining, the next step is to determine fair minimum and maximum prices for the consumer.

This is made easier in the coal industry because labor costs amount to 65 percent of the cost of production.

As the Commission has power to require the producers to maintain uniform systems of accounting of costs, wages, operations, sales, profits, losses, and the like, the consumer is given adequate protection against unfair prices. As an additional safeguard, the consumer is given the right of appeal to the Commission.

Carrying out the ideals of the N. R. A. with respect to the rights of labor, provision is made for collective bargaining, and the rights of the workmen are fully protected in the bill.

A sincere effort has been made throughout to safeguard every interest and to give each the fullest right to hearings in every controversy that may arise under the bill.

The successful operation of the industry having been thus assured, the Commission is then empowered to plan for the future of bituminous coal. Because at least 20 percent of our most valuable coal reserve is being wasted through inefficient mining practices, the Commission is authorized to investigate the problem with a view toward conserving this valuable resource.

Finally, through the Commission and the Department of the Interior, a great national coal reserve is to be built up.

At the same time we have given thought to the miner, who may be thrown out of work through the closing of mines. He is to be trained and placed in other fields of employment.

Both the purchase of coal lands and the rehabilitation of the miner are financed through a bond issue authorized by the Federal Government. But as both interest and principal are to be paid by a tax of a few cents a ton on all coal mined, such financing will require no outlay by the Congress.

The entire cost of administration under this bill is paid for by the industry. The district boards are supported by their own members, assessments being made upon a tonnage basis. The administrative costs of the Commission and of the Labor Board are provided for in the small tax on coal production.

The problem, to my mind, narrows down to these simple propositions:

1. Does the bituminous-coal industry need governmental regulation?

The great majority of witnesses appearing before the committee insisted that Government regulation was necessary.

2. Will the legislation provided in this bill assist the mine owners and investors to operate at a fair profit?

Representatives of 85 percent of the mine operators of the country testified before the committee that it would.

3. Will the legislation provided in this bill result in the payment of better wages to and living conditions for those employed in the mines?

Representatives of 95 percent of the bituminous mine labor of this country testified that it would.

4. Will the legislation provided in this bill result in the creation of a reserve of bituminous coal for the benefit of our people in years to come?

Everyone testifying on this feature of the bill declared that it would. The conversation clause of the bill is based upon the findings of the Natural Resources Board, which was appointed by the President for the purpose of making a report to him. This Board has in my opinion made one of the finest reports ever submitted to a Chief Executive, and its recommendation will undoubtedly be carried out by this administration.

RECOMMENDATIONS ADOPTED BY THE CONFERENCE

I

1. Seeing that the commercial policy of creditor nations is of supreme moment to the financial and economic stability of debtor countries in all parts of the world, this conference recommends that the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, the world's greatest creditor nations, be requested to consult together and with such other governments as it might be advisable to approach, for the purpose of agreeing upon measures to enable the debtor nations to meet their obligations in goods and services and thus of materially assisting in the work of creating stability and restoring confidence.

2. The conference draws the attention of governments to the desirability of forming low-tariff or free-trade unions on the model of the Ouchy Convention, to which any nation which did not originally join might afterward adhere on the same terms.

In this connection attention is also directed to the treaty drafted at the Montevideo Pan-American Conference, with special reference to the most-favored-nation clause.

II

Seeing that the instability of currencies and the chaotic condition of exchanges are among the chief causes of—

(1) the difficulties which trade experiences every day in concluding international transactions;

(2) many of the barriers farther restricting that trade, such as exchange restrictions, compensation, and clearing treaties, quotas, and many of the increases of tariffs;

(3) the accumulation of gold at a few centers and the hoarding of gold on an extensive scale;

(4) the discouragement of long-term lending, the resumption of which would mean increased movement of goods and a reduction in the abnormal volume of floating balances;

(5) A narrowing of the world's market and a decline of world prices;

We recommend that the leading governments, especially in the first instance those of France, Great Britain, and the United States, should consult one another without delay for the purpose of coming to a provisional stabilization of exchange on the basis of gold—allowing for the possibility of readjustment in case of need—with a view to the establishment of a stable world gold standard.

III

Fundamentally, international, economic, and financial problems depend for their solution upon the preservation of peace and the restoration of political confidence and security.

Throughout the world the people as a whole are earnestly desirous of peace and eagerly anxious that practical steps be taken to secure it.

Therefore, the policies of governments and their use of the organs of international organization should be such as will strengthen the habit of consultation between nations on equal terms, and thus keep them out of the atmosphere of war which, when it exists, makes almost impossible an adequate period of time for negotiation and the peaceful solution of disputes. These policies would include—

1. Strengthening the League of Nations and increasing its influence and authority as an impartial instrument of all the nations.

2. Steadily building the habit of the judicial settlement of international disputes by use of the Permanent Court of International Justice, of the Permanent Court of Arbitration, and of commissions of inquiry and conciliation.

3. Checking the constant growth of armaments, which may so easily be used for violating the pledge given in the Pact of Paris and which are so heavy a burden upon the taxpayer.

4. Steps to increase the effectiveness of the Pact of Paris by providing a regular method of consultation and by affording an adequate interpretation of the Pact and of the obligations implicit in it.

5. Recognition by peoples as well as by governments of the fact that continuous consultation is the best safeguard against war and that should restraints ever be necessary economic measures could or would be effective if virtually universal, and that, if effective, military measures would be unnecessary.

6. Cooperation of the nations to raise the standard of living of their several peoples and to assist in solving their pressing social problems as has already been undertaken through the International Labor Organization.

IV

Believing it to be important that there shall be made available in accessible form all possible accurate information with respect to international economic relations, we recommend that the trustees of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and the officers and directors of the International Chamber of Commerce shall give consideration to the practicability of sponsoring jointly the institution of a competent commission to make a comprehensive and exhaustive survey and study of international economic relations in all of their aspects, to the end that a better understanding of these relations by the peoples of the world may be promoted and the cause of economic stability and progress furthered.

INCOME TAXES AND THE SALES TAX—STATEMENT BY MR. E. A. FILENE

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a very able presentation by E. A. Filene, of Boston, before the Committee on Taxation, Massachusetts Legislature, March 7, 1935, on the subject of income and the sales tax.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, to save your time in the pressure of a busy legislative session, I have reduced my statement to writing; but at the risk of seeming, perhaps, to be wandering from the subject, I wish to urge at the outset that you approach this problem of taxation, not merely with the thought of how the necessary State funds can most easily be raised, but in the light of the present great crisis in American affairs.

I have just returned from another coast-to-coast, first-hand study of conditions in our country, and I confess that I am not only alarmed but appalled. The way is still open for a solution of our economic problems, and for the achievement of such prosperity as our country has never known before. But there are attitudes, points of view—commonly accepted points of view—which are keeping us as a nation from taking that way, and this has led to the mobilization of many millions of Americans in strange, economically unsound campaigns which if successful can lead only to the collapse of our economic system and the possible destruction of our present political system.

I am speaking in part out of a rich experience in the State of Louisiana where there is a movement which amounts virtually to war between the rich and poor. Yes; I have met HUEY LONG and have watched him for hours successfully dictating as to what shall be done to the legislature and the highest executives of Louisiana. HUEY does not hesitate to call it war. Four and a half million Americans, he tells me, are already enrolled in his "share the wealth" campaign. Father Coughlin, of Michigan, boasts of an enrolled following of eight and a half million; and 21,000,000 Americans, including the "conservative" Governor of California, have enrolled under the leadership of Dr. Townsend in a Utopian drive to restore prosperity by paying $200 a month to everybody as a reward for becoming 60 years old.

I am not blaming Townsend, Coughlin, Long, and the others for this movement of Americans away from safe and sane economic principles. I look upon them all as results, not causes, of what is wrong with America; and what is wrong is definitely a wrong attitude, both in business and in government, toward the problem of mass misery in a nation abundantly able to produce mass prosperity.

These movements, all told, already claim to have the balance of power in the next election. Nothing will more surely make this true than if these leaders can tell their people that we who have escaped the acute poverty of the depression now propose to reduce or do away with income taxes and, by sales taxes, make them carry the burden of government.

I shall not here enter into any criticism of organized wealth in America: but this attitude that I speak of is nowhere more apparent than in the action of many sincere, well-meaning, and patriotic legislatures in preparing what they believe to be fair bills of taxation. You gentlemen, I know, do not wish to solve the tax problem by merely "soaking the rich"; and it might appeal to your sense of justice and your economic reasoning, if I were to come before you with a plea for a reduction of income taxes, especially in the higher brackets. I might plead that I am already turning over approximately half of my annual income for the support of government, and urge you to widen the base of the tax burden so as to bring more Americans into an understanding of their responsibility as citizens and arouse their interest in the reduction of governmental expenditures.

I beg of you, however, not to be misled by such appeals; for if, in a national crisis, you have to choose between soaking the rich and soaking the most helpless elements of our population, I beg of you, in the name of justice and fair play to soak the rich—if, remember, there is no alternative than to soak the poor.

And you are in a position, gentlemen, where you will have to make some such choice. You've got to raise money. You've got to do it by one means or another; and the chances are that your choice has already narrowed down to a choice of a higher income tax or the imposition of a sales tax. I am not here in behalf of any particular bill; but if that is your dilemma, I urge you, as a business man, to increase the income tax, especially in the higher brackets and especially on the unearned incomes.

You cannot look at this matter solely in terms of present conditions in Massachusetts. You must think of it in the light of what is happening in America at large, and which, from the present outlook, may soon infect Massachusetts. The reason that you must raise more money is because of a condition of business depression throughout our country. What caused that depression? It cannot be denied that this depression was due, and is due, to the fact that organized business in our country did not organize business, and still hesitates to organize business, in such a way as to keep everybody profitably employed.

I do not mean to scold. Let us say that we business men did not know how to effect such an organization of business, because such an organization of business had never been necessary before. Let us say that we could not understand the President's recovery program and that we couldn't realize the necessity for any new deal.

Let us say that we believed that every American had a right to make all the money that he could and to keep the rewards of his industry and business enterprise. The fact remains, however, that organized business failed to cope with this crisis when it came, and millions of Americans whose very lives depended upon their being employed were thrown out of employment and, through no fault of their own, were compelled to look to Government for relief.

We who had been business leaders could still live. We could still buy enough to supply all our bodily wants; but our incomes nevertheless went down and down, while the demand for relief went up and up; and it was only natural of us under the circumstances to cry for a reduction in taxes, or at least for a tax which would be spread to include the masses of our people.

Hence, many began to agitate for the sales tax. It seemed so sweetly reasonable. People would only have to pay, they said, according to their means. Those who lived in luxury would have to pay much, and those who lived in poverty would have to pay but little. And since the average American was likely to think of wealth in terms of the luxury enjoyed by the wealthy, there was never any great organized opposition to such a plan. The flaw in the argument, however, was that a man with a large income had to use but a small fraction of that income for his living expenses, whereas a man with a small income had to use it all to keep himself and his family alive.

The sales tax practically eliminates the wealthy from its taxation and places the burden of government upon those least able to bear it; and yet, from the moment that the first sales tax was introduced, there has been a definite movement everywhere to substitute the sales tax for the income tax, on the claim that the sales tax is so much more easily collected.

The Legislature of Massachusetts, like the legislatures of all the States, must face this problem. Call it "soaking the rich" if you like, to increase the income tax in the higher brackets, but will this legislature prefer to soak the poor on the ground that the poor can be soaked so much more conveniently?

There are reasons, however, and excellent business reasons, why taxation should be rated according to income rather than to the purchase of commodities, and when organized business throughout America once grasps the imminent danger of the present crisis, there will be little agitation for the sales tax as opposed to the income tax excepting on the part of those who are entrenched in special privilege and have no other thought of government excepting the desire to use it to keep their special privileges intact.

For this depression, we must recognize, was brought about by just one basic cause. That was that the masses of Americans could not buy the ever-increasing volume of American industry. Our machines had become so productive that, if the masses could not buy their products, they could not be sold at all.

How much the masses could buy, however, depended mainly upon two things. First, upon how much they received in wages. Second, upon the price demanded for the goods. The sales tax obviously increases prices to the consumer, and thus restricts the market for all legitimate business at a time when the great business necessity is for an increase of that market. I do not claim any unselfishness, then, in urging the Legislature of Massachusetts to shun the sales tax as an economic plague. You will not only be doing your duty by the consuming public of Massachusetts if you remember this but you will be serving business, in the last analysis, in the best way that business can possibly be served.

It is not necessary for me to tell you that I do not personally welcome any increase in my income tax, any more than do those who are interested in this agitation to shift the tax burden to the shoulders of the weak. I will agree, if you wish, that our present income taxes are almost unbearable, and that the base of the income tax should be made much wider. But the way to widen the base of the income tax is not to impose taxes upon those who have no income more than enough to keep their families alive. The way to broaden the base of the income tax is to provide income—taxable income—to the masses of American people; and, when American business is sufficiently alive to its business responsibilities, it will see that this is done. In the meantime, I urge upon your committee, and upon the legislature of Massachusetts, that you do not add your contribution to the forces that are tearing America apart, and that are producing this despair—this mass sense of injuries endured, which is causing our millions to enroll in all these utterly chaotic drives. Despair, we must remember, is not a matter of logic, and there is no logical answer to it. Despair is brought about by wrong economic conditions which result from wrong economic thinking. I believe that I am playing the part of a true conservative, then, when I urge you against any step which will further increase the rapidly growing power of this organized and so dangerous wrong thinking.

Do not imagine for a moment that the evils of the sales tax can be avoided by exempting a list of articles which are supposed to be the bare necessities of life. For the sales tax, in the first place, will raise the cost of living generally. It will increase prices generally; and business, to be on the safe side, will not only pass the tax on to the consumer, but will pass the tax plus what is decided to be a safe margin on to the consumer. There are times also when those who are living close to the line of poverty need things which legislators generally would class as luxuries, but which, for the time being, become necessities as genuinely as are milk and bread. A sick child, for instance, may have to be taken to the hospital in a hurry, and may, therefore, have to be taken in a taxi-cab, although we are inclined to think of taxicabs as luxuries. It is the circumstance which creates necessity; and no sales tax can be devised which will not strike at the weakest and most helpless element of our population. If, on the other hand, you do impose a seemingly intolerable burden upon the rich, it will only spur them to the kind of action to which they should be spurred. It will spur them to see, for instance, that waste and graft and special privilege in government have to be paid for out of their pockets; and they will throw their influence, as they have never heretofore thrown their influence, toward really reducing taxation by the effective fighting of all tax-increasing graft and special privilege. In this way, eventually, income taxes may also be reduced.

And finally, I beg to remind you that you cannot keep the sales tax from becoming an intolerable burden upon those least able to bear it, by making the tax small and seemingly insignificant. Once let the principle be established, and legislators, under the necessity of raising more funds, will certainly increase the tax. Already, the State of California has a 2-percent sales tax, and the Governor of California is definitely proposing in his budget message to raise it to 3 percent. And already, in the same State, bills are before the legislature to abolish the income tax. Similar things are happening in other States. Within the past week, according to the newspapers, a campaign in this same direction has been launched in New York State.

That is something which is bound to happen; and the same influences which are causing it to happen in California and elsewhere will soon be hard at work in Massachusetts. I know of no other point at which the issue, which is tearing our Nation apart, is more clearly set forth than in this issue of taxation. In this crisis, I hope that Massachusetts will do her part for mass prosperity—toward healing the wounds which the masses have received and avoiding the peril inherent in these mass movements of today—by placing the burden of taxation upon those of us who are best able to bear it.

PROPOSED BANKING ACT OF 1935—ANALYSIS BY SENATOR ADAMS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, on last Monday the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] delivered an able and courageous analysis of pending bank legislation in the National Radio Forum. I ask unanimous consent that the address be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The presentation by the national administration of a new bank bill modifying in essential respects the banking system of the country is a matter of vital importance to the entire citizenship of the United States.

The proposed bill consists of three subdivisions designated as titles I, II, and III.

Title I provides for the merger of the present temporary deposit-insurance plan into a permanent plan. All banks now insured under the temporary plan will come under the permanent insurance plan without further examination or certificate.

The permanent plan will insure the deposit of each individual depositor to the extent of $5,000, as under the present temporary plan. The existing law, which would have put the permanent plan in effect July 1 of this year, would have imposed an unlimited liability upon insured banks for assessments to replenish the insurance funds. The new bill proposes to change this requirement so that the obligation of banks insured in the permanent fund will be limited to an annual payment into the insurance fund of one-twelfth of 1 percent of the amount of their total deposits, insured and uninsured.

Title III contains a number of amendments of various features of the banking law which seem to meet the approval of the administration, the public, and the banks. My limited time will not permit a full or adequate consideration even of the more important provisions of title II, so it will be impossible to discuss the provisions of title III.

Title II, if adopted, would make radical and fundamental changes in our banking system. Under the existing law the 12 Federal Reserve banks, which are located in commercial centers in the 12 Federal Reserve districts of the country, exercise a high degree of independence in their operation. The capital of these Federal Reserve banks is furnished by the banks affiliated with them. Of the 9 members of the board of directors of each Federal Reserve bank, 6 are elected by the stockholding banks, or, as they are designated, "the member banks", within the district. Three members of the board are selected by the Federal Reserve Board, at Washington. The executive officer of each of the Federal Reserve banks, known as the "governor", is selected by the board of directors of the Federal Reserve bank and paid by the bank which he serves. The Federal Reserve Board has no control over the selection or compensation of the governors of the Federal Reserve banks. The deliberate purpose of the framers of the Federal Reserve System was to secure a decentralized banking and currency control to avoid a centralization of banking and financial control in Washington or New York City. It was planned that there should be a connection and relationship among the Reserve banks so that the resources of one or more of these banks would be available to the other Federal Reserve banks when their own resources were inadequate to meet the demands. The funds in the control of the Federal Reserve banks consist of the capital, all of which is subscribed by the member banks; the deposits of the member banks, and the earnings of the Federal Reserve banks from their operations. The new bill proposes to repeal the statutory requirements which now require member banks to keep on deposit with the Federal Reserve bank as a reserve not less than a fixed percentage of their deposits and to give the Federal Reserve Board complete discretion to fix the amount thereof. The new bill places no limits whatever upon the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board in fixing these reserves. They can increase these requirements over the present statutory requirements or can reduce them. The act further provides that there need be no uniformity in these Reserve requirements, so that there can be different rates in the several districts and different rates in the several classes of cities within the same Federal Reserve district. The proposal would give power to the Federal Reserve Board to control to a large degree the lending capacity of the individual member banks and, as a consequence, their earning possibilities.

Under the present law the governor or executive officer of the Reserve bank is naturally sympathetic and responsive to the needs and policies of the individual banks which are really responsible for his selection. The new bill provides that the selection of governor of each Federal Reserve bank must be approved by the Federal Reserve Board, thus bringing the executive officer of each of the Federal Reserve banks under at least partial control of the Board at Washington.

The individual banks constitute at the same time the stockholders, the depositors, and the borrowers of the Federal Reserve banks. Under the existing practice, each Federal Reserve bank fixes the rate of interest which it charges its member banks upon moneys borrowed from it, but under the law the rate of interest to be charged member banks upon their borrowings from the Federal Reserve bank may be fixed by the Federal Reserve Board in Washington. The Federal Reserve Board may thus make borrowing by individual members attractive by a low rate or prohibitive by a high rate.

The present statute fixes the character of security that may be accepted by the Federal Reserve bank from the local bank to secure its borrowings. The original limitations upon these securities, which are commonly designated as "eligible paper", were quite narrow. Paper eligible to discount was restricted to certain specified types and among those types to that having early maturities. These restrictions proved to be unduly narrow for times of emergency and among the emergency legislation of the depression have been statutes widening the definition of eligible paper. However, those statutes either have or are about to expire. It is estimated that the total amount of eligible paper in the hands of member banks in 1929 did not exceed $4,500,000,000, while the eligible paper at the low point of the depression did not exceed $2,000,000,000. As the depression deepened, the amount of paper held by the member banks which was eligible to discount with the Federal Reserve banks under the statute declined until many banks throughout the country had no eligible paper. In many communities, especially the smaller communities, banking practices were such that none of the paper held by the banks met the requirements of the Federal Reserve statute. The result was that as deposits declined the banks were compelled, in order to pay depositors and to maintain their cash reserves, to sell bonds. As deposits were declining throughout the country, bonds were thrown upon the market in great quantities, with the inevitable consequence that bond prices declined greatly and banks suffered losses of hundreds of millions of dollars through the forced sale of their bonds at prices far below their fair values. The losses so suffered brought insolvency to many banks and tremendous losses to their depositors.

It has been quite generally recognized that the definition of paper eligible for discount at Federal Reserve banks should be broadened. The new bill, in the place of widening and expanding the statutory classification of paper available as security for bank borrowings at the Federal Reserve banks, proposes to repeal practically all statutory definitions and limitations and to give to the Federal Reserve Board at Washington full and unrestricted power to designate the kinds and classes of securities that may be accepted for discount by Federal Reserve banks.

The new bill provides that "subject to such regulations as to maturities and other matters as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe, any Federal Reserve bank may discount any commercial, agricultural, or industrial paper and may make advances to any such member bank on its promissory notes secured by any sound assets of such member bank."

Governor Eccles, of the Federal Reserve Board in Washington, says in references to this provision, "What is proposed is that the problem of liquidity shall cease to a large extent to be a concern of the individual bank and shall become the collective concern of the banking system." "It is proposed to make it possible for banks without abandoning prudence or care to meet local needs for short-time and long-time funds and to be assured that in case of need they can resort to the Federal Reserve banks on the basis of all their sound assets regardless of the form or nature of the collateral."

This provision constitutes a fundamental departure from the theory heretofore prevailing as to the character of securities acceptable by Federal Reserve banks. Had this or a similar provision been in effect and liberal use made of it during the first years of the depression, many hundreds of banks which closed their doors could have continued to operate successfully, effectively, and soundly.

The present statute provides for an Open Market Committee, which consists of 12 members, 1 being selected by the board of directors of each of the Federal Reserve banks. As a matter of practice, the 12 governors of these banks have constituted this committee. The Open Market Committee thus created naturally represents the views and interests of the 12 Federal Reserve banks. While the existing act provides that the Federal Reserve Board may transmit to the Open Market Committee, and to the several Federal Reserve banks, regulations relating to open-market transactions of such banks, the individual Reserve banks are not obligated to participate in any open-market operations recommended or approved by the Federal Reserve Board.

The new act proposes to substitute for the existing Open Market Committee a board of 5, which shall consist of the Governor and 2 members of the Federal Reserve Board and 2 governors of the Federal Reserve banks selected by the governors of the Federal Reserve banks, in accordance with the regulations of the Federal Reserve Board. The present Open Market Committee can only make recommendations, but the proposed statute makes it mandatory upon Federal Reserve banks to comply with the recommendations of the Open Market Committee.

Many do not understand the significance and importance of the powers sought to be conferred upon the Open Market Committee. These provisions are probably more vital not only to banking and financial operations but to our national welfare than any other single provision of the Federal Reserve Act, either as it exists or as proposed to be amended by the new act.

The supply of money available for business and financial operations has a direct effect upon all prices and upon business activities. Rates of interest, prices of bonds, and securities are all affected by the available supply of money. In the hands of the Open Market Committee as proposed by the new bill will rest the power to increase or decrease the supply of money in this country. Therefore, upon the action of this committee may rest the country's financial welfare. By going into the market and selling securities the amount of money available for agriculture, industry, and commerce will be reduced, while by going into the market and buying securities the supply of money will be increased. The Open Market Committee will have under its control, under this new statute, for the purchase of securities all of the resources of the Federal Reserve banks, and for the purpose of sale all of their vast holdings of Federal and other securities. This vast power would be concentrated in the hands of a board of five men, three of whom, constituting a majority of the committee, are members of the Federal Reserve Board, and for all practical purposes subject to the direction of the President of the United States.

Governor Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board complains that the present Open Market Committee is unsatisfactory because it represents the views of commercial banks; that it has the local and not the national view. In other words, that they represent the views of the banks whose moneys have, in the main, supplied the funds with which the operations of the Open Market Committee will be carried on. Governor Eccles proposes that the Open Market Committee shall be a national agency and shall use the funds of the Federal Reserve banks primarily for national purposes without any control by the banks which provide the funds.

He recognizes the power of this committee, and when asked by a member of the House Banking and Currency Committee: "So it really gives you complete control of the money supply?" he answered: "That is right, namely, to that extent it is centralizing that function to a greater extent than it has ever been centralized."

The bill under consideration is a reversal of the fundamental theory and purposes underlying the Federal Reserve System. The Federal Reserve System was not organized to conduct governmental financial operations or as a financial arm or agency of the Government. It was designed primarily to be an agency partly under governmental control and with governmental assistance to protect and coordinate the resources of the banks of the United States for the benefit of agriculture, industry, and commerce. There has been, however, a gradual diversion of its functions into channels of Government finance.

As stated before, decentralization of financial power was an essential thought in the planning of the Federal Reserve System. Projects and designs for centralized control of the banking system were deliberately and definitely rejected.

The present bill does not propose to establish a central bank. It maintains the decentralized form of the original Federal Reserve System but centralizes in Washington the actual control of that System. The control by the national administration of the banking system of the country, if this bill is adopted, will be far greater than was ever exercised by any central bank.

To those who argue that this means political control, it has been stated that inasmuch as the bill provides for 12-year terms for the members of the Federal Reserve Board in whose hands this vast power is lodged they will be independent of political control, but the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Myers v. United States (272 U. S. 52), has held that every officer appointed by the President of the United States, other than members of the judiciary, may be removed by him at any time without a hearing and without notice, and that Congress cannot place any limitations upon this power of removal. While it is my deliberate judgment that in this decision inhere grave dangers to the future of our institutions, it is today the law of the land. Consequently the President may remove any member of the Federal Reserve Board at any time; therefore provisions of the law in reference to the length of their terms constitutes no limitation upon his power to control that Board, though, of course, it is expected that with rare exceptions the terms of office so fixed will not be disregarded and that neither the President nor the members of the Board would yield to political motives.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Act provides that after July 1, 1937, no banks except those affiliated with the Federal Reserve System can be insured. This provision will compel all the banks of the country to affiliate themselves with the Federal Reserve System, and thus bring under the control of the Federal Reserve Board and the President the entire banking structure of the country.

Every commercial industry and financial interest, even agriculture, is to a large extent dependent upon the banks of the country. Even agriculture must look to the banks, and, insofar as agriculture does not look to the banks for its capital, its loans already are in the hands of Government agencies.

The bill must, of course, be viewed in the light of the problems of today. We cannot allow the voices of the past, however much we may revere them, to control, yet it is impossible for one schooled in the ideas of the great men of the past to refrain from a lingering thought of wonder as to what those great men would have thought of this bill. A good guess could be made as to Andrew Jackson, who, in a message on September 13, 1833, said, "It is the desire of the President that the control of the banks and the currency shall as far as possible be entirely separate from the political power of the country * * *."

The extent of the power thus concentrated in the administration in Washington is almost inconceivable. For the present it may be a source of efficiency, comfort, and security. It must be remembered, however, that whenever great power is granted it may be productive of great evil as well as great good, according to its exercise. I am sure under the present leadership of our country only good can be expected from this concentration, but we know not what is ahead of us. Franklin Roosevelt will not always be President of the United States.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOODS, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics; and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], his request being that all three amendments submitted by him be considered as one.

THE COTTON INDUSTRY

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, on account of efforts of some people who are personally and financially interested in breaking down the cotton program of the administration, and because of the fact that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] a day or two ago brought the subject to the floor of the Senate, I have decided that it would be appropriate to submit some observations upon that general subject.

Mr. President, the whole program relating to cotton under the present administration has, from its inception, been based upon an effort to apply to the cotton industry the old, inexorable trade law of supply and demand. We have sought to follow the principles adopted and practiced by the business industries in this country, but it appears that what is accepted as good business and sound economics on the part of industry, upon the part of business, socalled, in this country, when the same rule is sought to be applied to agriculture becomes a great offense in the eyes of business and of critics of the administration.

We heard no complaint and criticism of the great industrial corporations when, following the crash in 1929, they began to close down plants here and there, when they reduced the number of workmen from day to day, when they reduced the number of units of their output to fit the purchasing demands of the consuming public. That was accepted as good business and the proper thing to do, notwithstanding it resulted in the discharge of millions of workmen, deprived them of employment, and finally turned them over to the relief rolls of the Government. Has anyone on the floor of the Senate or in the newspapers of the country or upon the stump denounced the managers of industry for reducing production when the situation became necessary in order to meet a declining consumption of their particular commodities?

But, Mr. President, as soon as agriculture seeks to adopt that principle, which has always been followed with success under the old trade law of supply and demand, we find at once a cry of horror arising in the land. "Oh, these working farmers, these cotton farmers or wheat farmers, ought to work as long each day, 6 days in the week, as the weather will permit to produce all they can at whatever price their commodities will bring." It is asserted that it is sinful for the farmer individually and the farmers collectively to seek some machinery under which they can adjust the supply of their commodity to fit the consuming demands of the market.

Mr. President, as a result of the great increase in the demand for cotton, growing out of the World War and what are known as the "boom days" following the World War, the cotton acreage in the United States was tremendously increased, as it was in foreign countries. During the 5 prewar years we had an average acreage planted to cotton of 33,000,000 acres. Finally that acreage, during the early twenties and from 1924–25 down to 1930, was increased to an average of 44,000,000 acres.

When the crash came in 1929, when businesses in the country were reducing the number of units they turned into the market, when prices were declining, when consumption in all lines was decreasing, what took place and what happened with the cotton farmers of the United States? For the 3 years from 1929 to 1931, inclusive, the world consumption of American cotton was an average of 12,250,000 bales. During the same 3 years the farmers, geared to a high rate of production upon a large acreage, proceeded to the operation of their plants at full capacity and produced an average crop for those 3 years of 15,520,000 bales of cotton.

Beginning with the normal carry-over of 4,000,000 bales, in 3 successive years an average of 3,000,000 bales in excess of consumption was produced, thereby accumulating the greatest quantity of American cotton in all the history of the country. The supply at the end of the year, when the new crop was coming in, was 13,000,000 bales; more, in fact, than the actual annual consumption at that time. Therefore, when we approached the crop year of 1933, there was enough cotton in the warehouses or cotton mills of the world and in the possession of the cotton merchants available to the cotton mills to supply for an entire year all the mills that used American cotton, if not a single stalk of cotton had been raised in the year 1933.

As a result of this very great increase in the supply of cotton over consumption, of course, the price went down, down, down. From an average of 19½ cents per pound in the year 1929, when the depression started, the price went to an average in 1932 of 5½ cents a pound. Thus nearly 75 percent of the price of cotton and of the purchasing power of the raw cotton disappeared. No one can say that was attributable solely to the great depression.

In the whole list of industrial commodities we cannot find one where the price decreased in that proportion. Whoever heard of a $20 suit of clothes going down to $5 or $6 in the same proportion that cotton went down? Whoever heard of any industrial commodity falling in the same percentage that cotton and wheat and other agricultural commodities fell? The mere suggestion is sufficient to show that the destructive and pauperizing price received by the cotton farmer was not the sole result of the depression and the reduction in consumption. The other factor, and the larger factor, was the inability of the farmers of the country to adjust their production to meet the changing conditions in purchasing power.

In a brief way I desire to point out, from figures taken from the Bureau of Economics of the Department of Agriculture, that the price of cotton and the total amount of money received by the cotton growers are governed directly by the size of the cotton crop each year. Of course, there may be abnormal conditions which cause it to vary. Let me refer briefly to the years 1923 to 1927, a period of 5 years, when there was no depression either here or abroad, when purchasing power was strong, when consumption was at its very height during those great days of business activity.

During the 13 years from 1917 to 1929 the average amount of money received by cotton growers of the country for their lint cotton alone was $1,400,000,000. When the depression came and the surplus piled up each year, they lost $1,000,000,000 of that annual purchasing money. Instead of receiving $1,400,000,000, the greater portion of it coming from foreign customers, they received in the years 1931 and 1932 only between $400,000,000 and $500,000,000. In 1931 they received $483,000,000 and in 1932, $424,000,000.

With that great reduction in the purchasing power of the great mass of people stretching across America from California to Virginia, and with the money received for cotton in the many large areas in that section being the only cash money that came into those sections to replace the money being sent out by every mail to pay for practically everything they bought in the stores of the country, including also interest payments, insurance premiums, and all the other items that go to the financial and industrial centers of the country, it is clearly apparent there could be nothing like prosperity among the cotton farmers of the country.

They were prostrate, the farmers losing their homes, tenancy being increased, children going in rags, many farm people without money to buy schoolbooks, merchants having their credit facilities exhausted, banks all in trouble, purchasing power all over the Cotton Belt having disappeared, and there was a year's crop already in the warehouses; and still we find these preachers of the doctrine espoused here the other day by my friend the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], these theorists who denounce what they term the philosophy of scarcity, standing by and saying that nothing should be done by Congress to aid a situation which was bringing to despair and pauperism millions of our people.

Scarcity! Economy of scarcity! I have not heard the senior Senator from Maryland or anyone else denounce anybody but the farmers of the country for practicing the doctrine of scarcity. If the industries of the country had not practiced the doctrine which the Senator from Maryland so loudly denounces on the part of agriculture, and had shipped shoes and clothing and farm implements and fertilizer out to the farmers at any price they would pay for them, as some persons want the farmers to do with their wheat and cotton, the farmers might have gotten along all right if they could have bought on the same scale of prices on which they were obliged to sell; but they had to deal with the philosophy of scarcity practiced by all those who offered their products to the farmers—the cotton farmers, the wheat and corn and hog farmers. They had to buy at prices that were not commensurate with the prices which the farmers were getting for their products.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not intend to be at all controversial; but before the Senator leaves the subject I should like to have him compare our policy of scarcity with the foreign policy of increased production in respect to cotton. I am sure the Senator can throw a great deal of light upon that subject, and I think it is one which we ought to consider in this connection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am coming to that phase of the matter. I shall deal with it before I conclude.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to his colleague?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. BLACK. Before the Senator leaves the question of scarcity in agricultural products, I think he might be interested in a bit of evidence on this identical subject that came out before the Finance Committee several days ago.

A witness from the State of Michigan—whose name I do not recall, but who is a manufacturer of furniture, and, as I remember, is the chairman of the code authority on furniture—was on the stand. He stated that in 1927 his factories ran almost to their maximum capacity, and that since 1929, including the year 1930, his factories have run at about 33⅓ percent of capacity. I asked him those questions because he was complaining of an economy which would impoverish the people by lack of production.

In other words, for 5 years—and the witness stated that his factory operations were comparable with other factory operations—because his factories could not sell their goods at the profit they desired, they had reduced the production of furniture in this country 66⅔ percent. I asked the witness if, in his judgment, that was in line with the reduction of production on the part of the other manufacturers throughout the Nation, and it was his judgment that it was. So, just as the Senator states, although the farmers have reduced their production they have not yet reduced it to the extent to which production has been reduced in industry and in manufacturing.

A conservative estimate is that since 1929 we have lost $300,000,000,000 worth of products in this Nation by reason of the fact that there has been a curtailment of production. So the Senator is very clearly presenting the fact that so long as we have an economy of scarcity in manufactured products, the economy of scarcity being brought about for the express purpose of keeping up prices and maintaining profits, it becomes interesting to know whether the farmers alone, of all the people of the Nation, should produce in superabundance in order to lower the price, while the manufacturers produce under the economy of scarcity in order to raise the price.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thank the Senator for his informative statement. It certainly confirms the general rule that all even casual observers of conditions during the days of the depression will understand, whether they are willing to admit it or not. Unfortunately, the cotton farmers and the wheat farmers were unable to comply in any way with the doctrine practiced by industry until, by overproduction and the accumulation of burdensome carry-overs, they had gotten themselves in a position where they could not readjust themselves as readily as could industry; and they suffered for 2 or 3 years as a result of their inability to follow the precepts of business.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. In connection with the suggestions regarding the economy of scarcity, is there any real economy in producing an article or a product below the cost of production?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is absolutely uneconomic and wasteful.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is there any real economy in a course of that kind, whether with regard to manufactured articles or farm products or anything else? Is there any real economy in producing a thing and then selling it for less than it costs, with resultant economic disaster and poverty to the producer?

Mr. BANKHEAD. My answer is, clearly, "No." I have not even insisted upon industry practicing production below cost. I am replying to those who speak in terms of industry when they denounce agriculture for following their example.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Under the philosophy of scarcity, would it not be a good idea if we should again cut the cotton crop in half, and then the farmer could get 35 to 40 cents a pound for his cotton?

Mr. BANKHEAD. When a reasonable argument is being made, it is useless to try to reduce it to an absurdity; and one who undertakes to do so is clearly conscious of the weakness of his position.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. As I understand the Senator, his idea is to increase all production by trying to provide customers for the things which are produced, even the fertilizer for which the South has had to pay at exorbitant rates for many years. The Senator, as I understand, is going on the principle not of a permanent philosophy of scarcity but of trying to bring about a balanced economy on the part of the people of the country that will supply customers, so that we may prevent industrial manufacturers from reducing their production 66⅔ percent.

I asked the gentleman to whom I have referred why he had reduced his production. He said because he had not been able to sell his product at a profit. Of course he could not sell it at a profit to the farmers of the South on 5-cent cotton, nor to the wheat farmers of the West on 25-cent wheat. So, as I understand the Senator's philosophy, it is, under the system by which we operate, to try to increase the income of the purchasers of the Nation and thereby to increase the production of all products, including cotton, instead of decreasing it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct; including the production of industry.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us see how sound that argument is. We contend that the more money we can put in the hands of a man, the more he can buy. That is sound. Conversely, by the same token, the higher we make the price of an article, the less he can buy of it. So if we increase the cost of an article we decrease its consumption, and if we increase the wages of the people we increase consumption; but if we increase the price of cotton we must, by the very logic we use to prove one point, be bound by it in proof of the other, namely, that the higher the price of cotton, the less of it will be consumed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, there is, of course, a limit upon the price level; but the Senator has just enough learning about cotton for it to be a dangerous thing. I call his attention to the fact that in 1919, when cotton was selling at 36 cents a pound, we exported more cotton than in either of the preceding 4 years or either of the succeeding 4 years.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will answer the Senator later. I do not desire continually to interrupt him.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I should like to suggest that price does have a great deal to do with consumption; but in 1929 the income-tax returns showed that 511 individuals in the United States received enough income from the products of the Nation to buy every bushel of wheat and every bale of cotton raised by all the millions of farmers in America. It seems to me a little strange and a little strained to complain that we seek to increase the income of the farmer without at the same time suggesting some method for stopping the "economy of scarcity" in industry and the high prices which "economy of scarcity" has placed in the hands of 511 men more income than was received by all the millions of wheat and cotton farmers in the United States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. As to the interesting suggestion of the Senator from Maryland, is it not a fact that if we reduce the price of cotton seriously, instead of that increasing the amount of cotton that will be produced, eventually it will result in there being no cotton to sell at all? Unless the farmers are slaves, or have to produce it, they will cease producing. What the Senator desires is to have the surplus reduced so as to encourage the farmer by raising the price for his cotton?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all.

Mr. LOGAN. If he does not receive more than the cost of producing the cotton, he will eventually quit producing it, or he ought to do so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. He will be obliged to quit.

Mr. LOGAN. Reverting to the question asked by the Senator from North Carolina, as to why it is that some countries in other parts of the world are increasing their production while we are reducing ours, I believe the Senator was diverted from his answer.

M. BANKHEAD. I will come to that.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator expects to come to that eventually?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. I believe it is true that in Egypt there is a controlled production of cotton, and always has been.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not always, but they had it for 2 years.

Mr. LOGAN. They have had it for the last several years?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. They have recently withdrawn the control.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true. They got control of their surplus, and that is what we propose to do.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not criticizing the Senator's policy. What has happened is the result of the recently adopted American policy. But I will wait; I do not want to divert the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. While we are on the question of the Egyptian control, though it is a side issue, we might as well clear that up now.

As a result of overproduction as compared with the market demand, Egypt, following the crash in 1929, accumulated a great surplus of their long-staple Egyptian cotton. Of course, the price went down, as ours went down, in a disastrous way. In 1931 and in 1932 Egypt did exactly what we undertook to do a year later; by governmental decree they reduced their acreage the first year, 1931, about 50 percent, and then in 1932 they increased the acreage slightly less; but for 2 years there was compulsory control of the quantity of cotton, and they reduced it so materially during those 2 years of control that they disposed of their burdensome surplus, and then went back last year and the year before to normal production.

Of course, everyone who has any connection at all with this cotton program fully understands that we have not embarked upon any payment program of arbitrary limitation and reduction in the size of our cotton crop. We embarked upon the program because of the necessities growing out of the pauperized condition of our farmers with such low prices as a result of the biggest surplus in the history of the world.

We have gone at the program too slowly, according to my judgment. I wanted to cut the size of the cotton crop more last year than it was cut. I wanted to reduce the acreage. I wanted to trim the big carry-over down faster, and get through with it more quickly, so that we would be in position, with a supply bearing a reasonable relation to the consumption demand of the world, to go back into a normal cotton production commensurate with the requirements of the world for American cotton.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him again?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I assure the Senator that I am not undertaking to present any opposition to his proposal.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I proceed on that theory.

Mr. BAILEY. My information is that the Egyptian Government is encouraging a very great increase in their production; and in order to do that, they are abandoning, to a large extent, the production of long-staple cotton.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the Senator will permit me to go a little further before I come to foreign conditions.

Mr. BAILEY. I will propound my question and then wait.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well.

Mr. BAILEY. How is it, if, with the tremendous world carry-over, the surplus of which the Senator is speaking, Egypt can afford to increase her acreage, that we cannot do so? I should like to get some light on that point.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will answer that very briefly now by saying that Egypt is not increasing her production, except by going back to normal production as compared with the 2 years when they had compulsory production.

Mr. BAILEY. I think it is agreed that Egypt is undertaking now to reach a production of 800,000 to a million bales, and by way of abandoning the production of long staple, because they can produce a larger poundage of short staple than of long staple. The point of the whole matter is that Egypt is increasing her production, we are decreasing ours, and there is a surplus which causes us to decrease. Why does not that surplus cause them to decrease also?

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I have already submitted, Egypt is not increasing its production. If the Senator will inquire from the Bureau of Economics and get a report recently made by a Mr. Norris, who has just returned from Egypt, where he made an investigation, the Senator will find that Mr. Norris reports that in Egypt there is little additional available acreage to put into cotton, unless they expend about $175,000,000 on irrigation, which would take them some years to accomplish.

Mr. Norris did indicate in the report that they were disposed to turn to short-staple cotton, not for the purpose of increasing the cotton crop but as a change in the quality, because there is greater demand for the short staple than for the long staple. In other words, no change is contemplated in total production but merely in the quality of cotton being produced.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator that I have read the pamphlet to which he refers and based my statement on the information contained in the pamphlet. I will send over to my office and get it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well.

Mr. BAILEY. The statement is made in this pamphlet that the Egyptians are abandoning the long staple because they can produce more poundage per acre with the short staple. I think the Senator will agree with me about that. They are increasing the crop, or, as the Senator says, returning to normal. How is it they can return to normal despite the tremendous carry-over, while we cannot?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They got rid of their carry-over, I have undertaken to impress upon the Senator, during their 2 years of compulsory reduction.

Mr. BAILEY. What is there peculiar about their carry-over? It is a world carry-over of cotton we are having to deal with, not the excess of Egyptian cotton.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I assume that the Senator recognizes, I am sure he knows it, though he may have forgotten it for the moment, that practically all the Egyptian cotton is long-staple cotton, for which there is a special demand. We import into this country, after paying a 5-percent tariff, several hundred thousand bales of Egyptian cotton, because it is used in making specials; and because of that situation, the world supply does not involve them as much as it does us, because their cotton is not in direct competition with our upland grade cotton.

Mr. BAILEY. Assuming that to be so, this colloquy between the Senator from Alabama and myself is predicated upon the report of the Department that Egypt is abandoning the long staple and is producing the short staple. That is the point of the question I have in mind.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have stated that they are inclined to go to short staple in lieu of the long staple, not in addition to it.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator's last argument was to the effect that they were not competing in the short staple, but had a monopoly in the long staple.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They were competing when they were undertaking to control the surplus.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well. Assuming we have gotten this far, they are now moving in the direction of the production of short staple and in the direction of the production of a normal crop. I think the Senator has agreed to that. I come back to my question: In the face of the world carry-over, how is it that they can go to the short staple and return to normal production, while we must continue to reduce our production? That is the question which troubles me.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, to begin with, the price of American cotton makes the world price.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GUFFEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the junior Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Referring to the question of my colleague the senior Senator from North Carolina, is not the condition to which he refers attributable to the fact that labor is so much cheaper in Egypt and the other costs of producing cotton there are lower than in our Southern States?

In view of the carry-over, in view of the difficulties we experience with cotton, in view of what the Senator has said in regard to the growing of the short staple and abandoning the long staple, and the increase in Egypt of the production of short staple, will not the Senator agree that the present condition is attributable very largely to the wages the workers in the cotton fields of Egypt receive in comparison with the wages paid in the United States?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Undoubtedly, I will say to the Senator, the cheap-labor prices in Egypt, India, and Brazil during the last few years, especially when the price of silver has been so low, have been a most disturbing factor in our cotton program, in my judgment, because those conditions have made it possible for them to produce cotton cheaper than they did in former days.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I think that is true to a certain degree. Brazil, if my recollection does not fail me, increased its cotton production some sixty-odd percent during last year. I think reports will show that some other cotton-growing countries also increased their cotton production last year. That increase is perhaps due, in part, to the price of silver.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina to state to what extent Brazil can increase its cotton production? What is the limitation of the extent to which it can increase its cotton production?

Mr. LONG. Brazil can produce more than the world can use.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say to the Senator that, as he probably knows, Brazil has been producing cotton for a length of time almost as great as has the United States itself. The probabilities are, according to those who are familiar with the countries of Central and South America, that they started growing cotton for commercial purposes even before we started it in the United States. Taking into consideration the tremendous area of Brazil and its climatic conditions, which make a large portion of that country peculiarly adapted to raising cotton, I believe that eventually we shall probably find Brazil competing with us to a greater extent than India or Russia or China or Egypt or the Dutch East Indies.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator from Alabama will yield to me further, I desire to point out that there is the nub of the problem. First of all, it is conceded on the floor of the Senate that Brazil alone can greatly increase its cotton production.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the Senator's remedy to prevent that?

Mr. TYDINGS. Permit me to finish. It is also conceded on the floor of the Senate that Brazil can produce cotton more cheaply than can the United States. If Brazil can produce more cotton, and she can produce it more cheaply, should we try to keep the price of cotton up so as to encourage her to overproduce, or should we bring the price of cotton down and discourage her from producing?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That brings up another question. One of the difficulties experienced in the country today is that we can sell cotton in Texas, and it can be shipped aboard Japanese vessels to Japan, they can pay our price for that cotton, they can work that cotton, and they can return it to this country and sell it for less than we can manufacture it, by an extremely large percentage.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to get into an involved discussion of this question, because we are trespassing on the time of our friend from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I should like to go ahead.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to make this concluding observation, and then I will answer further in my own time.

We cannot escape the logic that if it costs more to produce cotton in this country than it costs to produce it in other countries, and if we accentuate that cost by increasing its price, we invite the other countries of the world, at a better profit than they have heretofore enjoyed, to increase more and more their production of cotton; and if that policy is pursued, the logical end is that eventually they will produce most of the cotton, and we will produce less of the cotton. What are those who are temporarily getting these high prices going to do when the foreign cotton producer has taken their markets?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, before the Senator goes further, will he not let me put in a word?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It depends upon whether or not it is on my side.

Mr. LONG. It is half on the Senator's side and half against him.

Mr. BANKHEAD. State that which is on mine, and then I will continue.

Mr. LONG. I desire to say to the learned Senators that we shall all be voting for a tariff on cotton very soon.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, when someone satisfies me that the United States Steel Corporation and General Motors and other motor companies should continue to produce to the full limit of their plants in order to hold the foreign markets which they had before this tariff war started, I shall be willing to consider the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland. But, Mr. President, as I stated before, persons remote from agriculture, persons who do not understand the misery in the farm homes of America during the past 3 or 4 years, stand here without any knowledge of those conditions, without any deep study of the economics involved, and undertake to advise our people about what they should do with their great financial problem.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] intimates that we ought to produce cotton low enough to drive out of competition all the cheap labor in the world. "Why not", he said, "produce enough and sell cheap enough to stop Brazil, stop the East Indians, stop the Mexicans, stop the Egyptians, and drive them out of the world production of cotton by starving them to death with low prices?" I am astonished that a Member of the Senate should be standing upon this floor with the credentials of my own Democratic Party announcing any such doctrine as that.

The cotton farmers have lost a considerable amount of their foreign business, and the wheat farmers have lost their foreign business to a greater extent than have the cotton farmers. I am astonished that the Senator should stand here and pronounce the doctrine that we must get down to the very bottom with prices for the only cash crop our farmers have to drive the peons of Mexico and of Brazil, in the tropical countries, out of the cotton business.

That is such a strange doctrine, Mr. President, that it seems to me no one should want to give it any real serious consideration.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to proceed.

Mr. BAILEY. But will the Senator just let me call to his attention that the problem which is troubling everyone of us, I am sure the Senator from Maryland almost as much as the Senator from Alabama, is the one of preserving the American world market. That is our problem. How can we do it under the present circumstances? If we lose the foreign market when the domestic market takes only 65 to 68 percent of our cotton production, what happens to the southern farmer? That is the problem which is troubling me.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, when I get through with the domestic phase of this problem I am going into the foreign end of it, if the Senator will have patience enough to wait.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall be very happy to do that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I started some time ago, but was diverted, to call attention to the figures which show how directly the size of the crop governs the amount of money which is paid for the cotton crop, the greater part of which comes from foreign countries, new money, Mr. President, new money brought from foreign lands, not solely for the benefit of the cotton farmer—for his primary benefit, of course—but to help support the business of the agricultural implement manufacturers of this country, to help support the steel plants of this country—and a considerable percentage of the present steel output is going on the farms—to help support the fertilizer companies of this country, the manufacturers of shoes and of hats and of clothing—in other words, to furnish purchasing power for those things which, in large part, are not produced in the Cotton Belt.

We do not get much money in the Cotton Belt from anything but cotton, but the quantity of money we get bears directly upon the number of workmen employed in the industrial plants of this country. It bears directly upon the time that those industrial plants are able to operate. Just think of what it means to the country when the Cotton Belt loses the billion dollars a year which it had been receiving annually for 13 years! All of it came right back to the industrial and financial centers of this country. Just as certainly as the waters from a spring go into the branch, and from the branch to the river, and from the river to the ocean, just so fast as we get more money in the South it goes to the merchants, it goes into the banks, it goes to the wholesalers, it moves on to the manufacturers, and in a short time it is all gone, and our people then are trading upon credit to get supplies actually to survive and carry their families until they can get another return flow of money for cotton.

It seems strange to me that objection, and carping objection, should come from some sections of the financial and industrial parts of this country; and that it should come from the city of Baltimore, with its great distributing wholesale houses there, which for years have had their chief customers in the Southern States, the cotton States, which houses lost the better part of their business during the years 1931 and 1932 and on into 1933 because the consuming power, the purchasing power, of their farmer customers had disappeared.

We see Senators stand here and hear them bewail the loss of some portion of our export trade without giving any thought to the great loss in our own domestic market. We do not hear any complaint about that—no; all complaint is directed across the sea. I remind the representatives of industrialism and of the financial interests of the country, to whom our people pay so much interest and dividends and financial returns, of an old religious song. I do not know whether or not many of them ever attended a revival meeting and heard it, but I want to paraphrase that old song in this way:

If you cannot cross the ocean,
And foreign lands explore,
You can find the markets nearer;
You can find them at your door.

Mr. President, instead of looking around their own doors, instead of considering that great mass of willing purchasers and consumers, we hear able men say to the cotton producers, "Forget it; put your prices down where you cannot buy anything from us; all we look for the cotton farmers to do is to drive off the farm the peon labor of Central and South America, of India and China; that is their job."

Now, let me get to the point I have been trying to reach for some time; that is, the effect of the size of the crop. It ought to be of interest to the representatives East and North and all manufacturing and industrial sections of the country, because, sooner or later, they get all the money. We had had years of the bollweevil scourge; the bollweevil had spread over the South by 1921, and the cotton crop that year was cut down below 8,000,000 bales; in 1922 the crop was 9,000,000 bales; and in 1923 it was 10,000,000 bales. There was an average production for the 3 years of 9,000,000 bales of cotton. The surplus had gone.

O Mr. President, we did not then lose our foreign market. We had, of course, a reduction in exports. The word went out to the cotton-growing countries all over the world "America has a pest which will ultimately put its people out of the cotton business; their dominance in cotton production has gone." Did we lose our exports permanently? No, Mr. President. As soon as we got control of the bollweevil, and brought our production back to normal, we immediately increased our exports over those of previous years. All foreign countries know that we are going through a temporary reduction program. To listen to some people talk, one would think that foreign countries had just discovered that cotton had been grown in America and that they themselves would proceed to grow some. Since the days of the Civil War, when the embargoes upon cotton and the absence from the farm of the men put the price of cotton above $1 a pound, every foreign country that had suitable soil and climate has been endeavoring, from year to year, to produce all the cotton it could economically produce and sell in competition with the superior grades and staple of American cotton.

In 1923, after the surplus had disappeared, we produced 10,000,000 bales of cotton, and the farmers received an average price of 28.69 cents a pound. The total sum paid to the farmers for their lint cotton was $1,454,000,000.

The next year the size of the crop increased by three and a half million bales. We began to get better control of the bollweevil. The crop totaled 13,600,000 bales and the price fell from 28½ cents to approximately 23 cents, a 6-cent reduction as a result of the increase of three and a half million bales of cotton.

In 1925 the crop again was increased two and a half million bales, the total being 16,100,000 bales. The price dropped down from 23 cents to 19½ cents. The total amount received by the farmers was approximately the same, $1,570,000,000. For 5,000,000 bales more of cotton than in 1923 the farmers received about the same amount of money.

Then came 1926, regarded generally as the best business year in all that cycle which followed the World War, the year to which economists have pointed as the ideal price year. Then purchasing power was strong; consumption was as strong as ever, not only in America but abroad; the prices of everything the farmers bought were high, right at the peak. There was no depression, no disturbance, nothing to bring about a change in the price of cotton, except one thing, and that was the supply.

That year, induced by the rising tide of prices, by the complete control of the bollweevil, our farmers planted the largest acreage to cotton in our history, nearly 48,000,000 acres. They produced 18,000,000 bales of cotton, the largest crop known to this country. In that wonderful year of wonderful business in America and abroad the price fell from 19½ cents to 12½ cents a pound. No one can say that was due to a depression; no one can say that was due to a reduction in consumption. It was due solely to overproduction beyond the consumptive requirements of the world. For that crop of 18,000,000 bales our farmers received only $1,120,000,000. In other words, for a crop 8,000,000 bales more than was produced in 1923, when the supply was adjusted to world requirements, 8,000,000 bales more, with all the additional labor involved, with all the additional expense involved, with certainly a better business year in 1926 than in 1923, which was so soon after the deflation of 1920 and 1921, the farmers received for that 8,000,000 bales more of cotton $200,000,000 less than they received for the 10,000,000-bale crop.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Gladly.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would tell us how much of a reduction per pound that was; how much did the market go down per pound of cotton in 1926 on account of that big crop?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It went down from 19.59 cents average for 1925 to 12.47 cents for 1926, a reduction a little in excess of 7 cents a pound.

Mr. NORRIS. And that resulted, although the farmers produced a bigger crop, in their getting less money?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Much less; more than $200,000,000 less.

Now, let me take 1927. The years 1926 and 1927 were almost as alike as two peas, so far as business conditions were concerned. In 1927, as the result of that low price, a smaller crop was produced; the crop dropped down to 13,000,000 bales, a 5,000,000-bale reduction. The price jumped up to 20 cents a pound, and the farmers got $1,300,000,000. In other words, they received about $200,000,000 more in 1927 than in the preceding year for 5,000,000 less bales of cotton.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator does not mean that the farmer got 20 cents a pound for his cotton in that year, does he?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That was the average farm price, as computed by the Bureau in 1927.

Mr. President, it thus appears that it is in the interest, not only of agriculture—and it does not apply to cotton alone, although I am dealing only with cotton—but it is to the interest of everybody in this country, not only in the agricultural South but the farmers everywhere and those engaged in industry and finance and everyone else, for the cotton growers to get a fair living price for their cotton.

The figures I have just read covering those 6 years of uneventful, unchanging business conditions tell the tale and demonstrate that the amount of money the farmers get for their crop is directly controlled by the relation of the supply to the demand.

Now, let me discuss briefly the subject of the export business. In the first place, I assert that there is an undue alarm about the loss of exports in cotton. It is disturbing, of course, but the facts are not properly understood by the public, as they have been misrepresented and a wrong conclusion has been drawn.

Our normal exports of American cotton for a 10-year average were a little over 7,000,000 bales. That is the 10-year average we have been exporting. When the price of cotton was very low, foreign spinners and foreign cotton merchants accumulated an unusual supply of American cotton. In 1932, when the price of cotton averaged about 5½ cents a pound, there was in foreign countries—and these are Government figures—an accumulation of 3,439,000 bales on the 1st day of August when the new crop was coming on the market; in other words, about a 6-months normal supply based on the 10-year average of consumption of American cotton in foreign countries.

In 1933 the accumulated stock was increased to 3,537,000 bales. By reason of the increase in the price of cotton, in 1933 and early in 1934, the stock decreased, but on the first day of August 1934, when the cotton crop was entering the market, they had 2,859,000 bales of American cotton in foreign countries.

While very greatly decreased under the preceding years, the exports up to March 1 were 3,250,000 bales. In other words, with the supply of cotton on hand on the first of August and the exports made this year, with 4 months yet to go in the current cotton year, they have had a supply of American cotton on hand of 6,109,000 bales, with a 10-year average consumption in foreign countries of a little in excess of 7,000,000 bales.

The exports do not in any true sense reflect the consumption of American cotton in foreign countries. They have taken out of these stocks of shipped cotton, grabbed up and accumulated there in unusual quantities; they have been eating out of that store of cotton rather than shipping currently as they had done theretofore. With 4 months yet to go in this cotton year, if they continue at the same rate of consumption of American cotton, there will not be a very large reduction in the consumption of American cotton abroad notwithstanding the very material reduction in exports. For the 8 months, while there has been a reduction in exports of over 2,000,000 bales, the reduction in consumption has been only about 700,000 bales.

There has been some discussion about an increase in acreage planted to cotton in foreign countries. The figures of the acreage for 1934–35 are not yet available. Nobody has the figures. Nobody claims to have the figures, neither the Bureau of Economics with all its reporting agencies nor the New York Cotton Exchange service with whatever agencies it has.

In other words, in the foreign countries they do not have the up-to-date methods of reporting acreage that we have through our trained agencies in this country. The only real test is production, so far as accurate figures are available.

I assert, however, upon information given to me by the Bureau of Economics, that there has been no material increase in planted acreage in 1934 as compared with 1933 in any cotton-growing country in the world except Brazil. Moreover, the peak of acreage planted to cotton in the world was reached in the 1925–26 crop. After 8 or 9 years of decreased acreage, in 1933 the acreage was increased to about that of 1925–26. The acreage increase in the United States that year was in higher percentage than it was in all foreign countries.

As a result of high prices about that time every country converted to cotton planting all the acreage that was suitable for it that could be spared from food production, except alone Brazil. China has increased somewhat. During the last few years, not particularly this year, they have had an increasing trend, it is said, because a large area previously planted to cotton was not reported. They did not have the facilities for exporting it and it was not commercially used. China is not a commercial exporting country. It exports practically no cotton.

There has been an increase, of course, in Russia since their 5-year plan was put into operation; but our agencies, after a field survey, report that they have little, if any, additional acreage which they can put to cotton that is suitable for economical cotton production. Because of the cost of irrigation on most of their cotton lands now, their costs are relatively high compared with the costs of other countries.

Egypt and India are our two chief competitors in the matter of the exportation of cotton. Last year, judging by production, which gives us the only available figures, there was a decrease in cotton production not only in Egypt and in India, but in all foreign countries combined, including Brazil, with its large increase. All of them put together had slightly in excess of 2 percent less cotton produced last year than was produced in 1933. Still we hear all this alarm and all this great scare, as if foreign countries had just discovered the value of cotton. They have been increasing steadily, just as America has been increasing steadily over the years. There is no way to prevent it. They are not now engaged in a production race. In 1933 they increased their acreage 10 percent in excess of their average acreage for 10 years, but that increase was in no sense due to our cotton program. We did not have any cotton program for plow-up of excess until the cotton in all these countries had been planted and was in a state of cultivation like ours.

They had no information of the restriction program, and therefore of necessity their increase was not the result of the control of cotton production in this country. I have just presented a statement showing that last year, with knowledge of the cotton-production control, their production was less than the preceding year.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator relates his statistics to 1 year. I have before me the report of the United States Department of Agriculture, Cotton Leaflet No. 3, issued October 25, 1934, which gives the foreign cotton production as follows:

1920–21, 7,671,000 bales.

And it runs from that time—1921–22—to 1933–34, 13,053,000 bales.

I am unwilling to consider the figures on the basis of 1 year. I think we should base our argument on the fact that since 1920 the foreign production has increased from 7,671,000 bales to 13,053,000 bales in 11 years.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; and America has increased her production in about the same ratio.

Mr. BAILEY. No; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not mean compared with our control years, 1933 and 1934.

Mr. BAILEY. No; in 1920–21 the American production was 13,429,000 bales. In 1933–34 the American production was 13,047,000 bales, which is practically the same. Those are the statistics of the Agricultural Department, and they are the statistics with which we must deal.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senator evidently does not get my point.

Mr. BAILEY. But does the Senator get the force of these statistics from the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Undoubtedly foreign production has increased since the days when the war started. The Senator went back and took his base before that time.

Mr. BAILEY. It has increased from 7,600,000 bales to 13,000,000 bales.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I get the Senator's statement. The point I am making is that the assault on the cotton-control program by the Senator from Maryland and others on the the theory that it is responsible for the increase in foreign growth is not supported by the facts. The Senator from North Carolina has just proven the point I have in mind. We are not debating this subject in a controversial way. We are trying to get at the facts, both of us being friends of the cotton farmer. The Senator has just pointed out, and correctly, that there has been a trend toward increase in foreign production of cotton since the end of the World War; but that trend had begun before that time, and it was not a steady increase. The principal part of that increase was in 1933–34, and our bureau reports that it was due not so much to increase in acreage as to unusually good weather conditions through the cotton-growing countries.

Mr. BAILEY. I am sure the Senator did not mean to suggest that I had made such an assault.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I said we were engaging in this debate as joint friends of the cotton farmer.

Mr. BAILEY. In January, when the matter came up, I took pains to point out that the increase in foreign production related to a time far back of the control program.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I agree to that.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator will bear witness to that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, to be sure; and I distinctly stated that we were working toward the same end, to develop the facts and deal with the program, both of us as friends of the cotton grower. I clearly understood the motive of the Senator; but I was glad to have a statement made by him supporting the position I had taken on the subject.

Mr. President, cotton is not the only commodity which is in trouble about its exports. I do not know why a lot of these people who do not study cotton much and who never get any cotton money in their pockets, desire to pick on cotton. They seem to think it is a plaything to be picked on here all the time. That is the reason why I am speaking this morning. I am getting a little tired of hearing so many statements made by some people who, I know, do not know anything about cotton. In the first place, our cotton people understand their problem. They are going through a temporary reduction program; but, if I can have my way, I will say to all concerned that I would enact permanent legislation under which, year after year, the cotton farmers could adjust the size of their crop to the consumptive demands of the world.

If we are losing our export business—and we are losing a great deal of it in all agricultural and industrial commodities—if our markets are disappearing, I desire to ask in the name of common sense and reason why we should not boldly, as brave business men, in the interest of our constituents, meet that situation and deal with it, if we can, just as business men have always dealt with their problems of readjustment to fit changing conditions in their respective businesses?

I have no thought of any arbitrary price for cotton. The Senator from Maryland talks about reducing the present price. Our export trade in cotton has not shrunk or been reduced as a result either of supply or of the price. On the 1st day of August, when the new crop starts to the market, we shall have a supply of American cotton of between eight and a half and nine million bales to furnish an apparent world consumption of around 12,000,000 bales. So no one can insist that as a result of our 2 years' effort to reduce the burdensome carry-over we have reduced the supply to a point which endangers a reasonable price for cotton.

The truth is that in the pre-war period, when we had a parity price for cotton as compared with the things which the cotton farmer bought, 12½ cents, we had during those 5 years an average carry-over of 3,200,000 bales—plenty of margin to meet any change in the size of the crop, due to weather conditions, whichever took place in the history of this country. With that fair relation of supply to demand, we secured parity prices. How can any thoughtful person expect us to receive parity prices when we still have, with the reducing consumption, almost a year's supply to meet the requirements of the mills of the world using American cotton?

So the supply is there. The distinguished Senator from Maryland seems to have the thought that the present price of cotton is an obstruction to the export of our cotton; and he, as I understood him, wants America today to go back to the old gold-standard currency. I call his attention to the fact that France and Italy and Germany, old gold-standard countries which were formerly among our very largest consumers of American cotton, have almost discontinued the use of our cotton. England, a former large customer, is now securing her cotton from the cheap labor of India and Egypt, two silver-using countries controlled by her. Under her trade agreements with her colonies, England has displaced American cotton with Egyptian and Indian cotton. France and Italy and Germany, as consumers of our cotton, have almost disappeared from the map, due, as we are told not only by the economists in the Department of Agriculture but by representatives of those countries who have been in America trying to buy cotton, to our antidumping laws, which do not fit the conditions which they fitted at the time the laws were passed.

Now, by virtue of our devaluation of the gold dollar, our taking approximately 40 percent out of it, those countries still on the old gold standard have, as measured by weight of gold, prices about 40 percent higher than we have. So when they undertake to ship goods to this country in payment of cotton as they have heretofore done—of course, in the old days they shipped more gold; now they have not the gold; now they cannot spare the gold—they are left in a position, under the change in the currency situation, which has taken them away from us as customers of cotton; and our raw cotton trade, instead of going to our old customers, is now largely going to Japan.

What has cotton control to do with that? A representative of one of those countries stayed here for several months, and came and talked to me, and talked to different agencies of the Government; and in those conversations he stated—he stated it positively to me, and I heard that he made the same statement to others—that they would not object to a price of 15 cents a pound for cotton. Their problem was securing American dollars; and as a result of the difference in their gold-standard currency and ours they could not sell here cheaper than they sold at home, although they were willing to do it in order to get our cotton; but they could not do it without violating, as construed—a technical violation, if you please—the antidumping law.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. LONG. The Senator says the great trouble with these foreign countries is getting American dollars. What we needed was a free-silver law in order to open up the trade with India and China. What we needed was a currency or money which was more universal. Is not that one of our main troubles?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, while I had not intended to digress into the currency question, I may surprise the Senator from Louisiana with the statement that I am in full accord with that view.

Mr. LONG. Fine!

Mr. BANKHEAD. All the cotton-producing countries competing with the United States are really on the silver standard—Mexico, China, India, Brazil. Whether they are theoretically upon that standard or not, it is their only money; it is the money their people are used to. It is the money which circulates among them, and with silver cheap they can produce more cheaply than can those countries which have a higher-valued dollar.

While I live probably 2,000 miles from a silver mine, it is my humble judgment that instead of starving the American farmers into low prices our country could render no better service than to raise the cost of production of cotton in those countries by bringing about an increase in the price of silver.

I think one of the most beneficial things we could do in a proper and legitimate way in carrying out the constitutional functions given to Congress would be putting the costs of production of our competitors nearer than they are now to our own cost of production, all of which grows out of the very low price of silver. As a result of the interruption of the Senator from Louisiana, I have digressed to say this much; but I say it with great earnestness and sincerity.

Mr. President, I have occupied the floor longer than I had expected to, due in large part to the interruptions and colloquies. But the price of cotton is about 11 cents, and some people want it to go still lower. The fact is that last year, when cotton was selling at 13 cents a pound, we exported more cotton than we have been exporting since the price has gone down. We are not troubled in our exports from the standpoint of the price of our cotton.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator on that point?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. As I understand, it is the world price that relates itself to and governs exports, and the world price is the gold price; and the present gold price of a pound of cotton is not more than 6½ cents. So the argument that cotton is selling high could not possibly agree with the conclusions which are intended to be derived from that argument. Is not that correct?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct. I am glad to have the confirmation of the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. The 6½-cent cotton of today compares with 11¼ cents in American money, but the world price of cotton has changed about a cent. The Senator from Alabama said the price was 5½ cents in 1932 and 6½ cents now. Is that approximately correct?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true, so far as gold is concerned.

Mr. BAILEY. The American price of cotton is due to the valuation of the dollar, and because we consider the price in terms of American dollars rather than in terms of gold, but prior to the devaluation we always spoke of the price of cotton in terms of the gold price.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct. I am glad to have the Senator's statement in that regard. Instead of the present price of cotton being reduced, it should be increased to the parity price of 15 cents a pound.

Mr. President, as I stated, we shipped more cotton when the price was higher than we do now. We hear no objection from prospective buyers on account of the price, because, as indicated by the able Senator from North Carolina, the price is around 6 cents a pound as measured in gold, the medium of foreign exchange.

Everything farmers buy has gone up. Here we have an argument for lowering the prices of what they produce and sell, when nobody interested in this subject, and who has gone into it, insists that the present price of cotton, 4 cents below parity. has anything to do with the loss of our exports.

I should like to have someone tell me, the Senator from Maryland, or anyone else who is making this argument, why our country lost practically all of its exports of wheat in 1932. We had a carry-over of 360,000,000 bushels, the largest in the history of this country and the price went down to 35 cents a bushel. In the face of that low price for wheat—and this was under the former administration—and without any suggestion of a control program or a reduction in the size of the crop, our export business simply disappeared.

I had hoped the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] would be here. I want someone to tell me why we have lost nearly all of our business in the export of apples. Heretofore that comprised one of the largest exports of agricultural commodities.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think I can answer in part in reference to apples.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. As a matter of fact, we have a favorable trade balance with France. France is one of the largest importers of American apples. So much gold was being drained from France to pay for her unfavorable balance of trade with the United States that the French Government not only put a tariff on apples but they put an embargo on apples, so that even if we were willing to ship apples to France, after a certain amount of shipments had gone into that country, no additional apples could be shipped there.

The reason was obvious. It was because we were pursuing the philosophy, ever since the World War, when our condition changed from what it was before the war, that we could sell to countries without buying from them. That cannot be done.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am in full accord with the statement of the Senator from Maryland; but we have a clear-cut statement from the Senator from Maryland also that we did not lose our exports of apples on account of any control or reduction program, or on account of the price of apples.

Mr. TYDINGS. I must take issue with the Senator. When we adopt high tariffs, that is in effect a control of all exports.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am talking about a control of production. That is the program the Senator and those who agree with him are criticizing.

Mr. TYDINGS. When we control imports, as we do indirectly through the tariff, we automatically control the exports, because of the control of imports. The two things go hand in hand. No nation in the world can sell to another nation unless that nation buys something. Money is only an incident to the transaction, a yardstick, a measurement; that is all. What really happens is that nations swap goods, and only the difference, the balance of trade, as it is called, is paid in money. What we are really doing is swapping products, and consequently we cannot export products unless we import products.

If we were to bar all importations into this country whatsoever, our exports would fall overnight to almost the vanishing point.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator from Maryland cannot provoke any argument from me on that subject. I think we are in full accord in our views about the necessity of turning from our present nationalistic spirit. But, as I have heretofore insisted, with his splendid intelligence, with his knowledge of the cause of the loss of exports in wheat, and apples, and other things, the Senator must concede, as a straight shooter, that the argument that is being made that cotton growers alone of all who produce agricultural commodities and all industrial commodities have lost their foreign trade as a result of a program of control, or the operations of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration cannot be sustained.

The Senator knows, and he has just stated it, and I agree with him, that our problem is not a problem of the adjustment of supply to demand but our problem is the trade wars going on throughout the world—the tariff-rate barriers. I know the Senator from Louisiana does not like that and does not agree with me in that statement. I agreed with him once, but I differ with him in this. The tariff-rate barriers, the quotas, the trade agreements between different nations, have brought down our commerce, industrially and agriculturally; and, as I suggested once before, we have that condition confronting us. By action of the American Congress alone, as I see it, we are not able to restore the former free-trade relations with the nations of the world.

I know that we precipitated the tariff war; I know that we brought about retaliatory tariff measures as a result of our former tariff program. There is no sort of doubt of that in my mind. But that has been done. We did it. America did it. We provoked the battle. The foreign countries have been fighting us ever since. They are in the ring now, nearly all those nations, ready to carry forward a masterly battle with us and with other nations.

Having provoked them into the ring, where they now are, with their arms up ready to hit, and have been hitting, I say that the American Congress, although it started the row, cannot afford to stand there now and drop its hands and permit the other countries to strike mortal blows.

I do not know what we Americans can do except what we are trying to do through the reciprocal-trade agreements. I do not think the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] would advocate pulling down our tariff rates in any general way, and stand by and see our country flooded with imports and at the same time get no advantages by trading and shipping our goods into the countries which are shipping theirs here. We have that serious problem and that is what we have to deal with. It will take patience, it will take policy, it will take great diplomacy, and it certainly will require great statesmanship; but, so long as we have that condition over which we have no control, I appeal to the common sense, judgment, and the fairness of my colleagues here whether we should recognize that situation in the business of agriculture, or blindly go about the old system of uncontrolled and unlimited production, with full knowledge that the markets are gone.

I submit, instead of abandoning this program because of the loss of exports and the loss of markets, knowing that it is because of the tariff barriers and other causes I have mentioned, that the fair and just thing to do is to meet the situation and deal with it as the facts require, regardless of any theories or formulas abstract in their nature. We have got to deal with a condition which confronts us; we have to deal with facts which confront us. If our markets have diminished, we ought to do as the steel corporation does and as the automobile industry does—recognize the situation and readjust accordingly. That is more important when we are losing markets than it is when we have got steady markets or gaining markets.

That is our problem, Mr. President. I have spoken longer than I had intended. I appreciate the indulgence of those who have listened. I was anxious, at least, that certain phases of this problem should be brought to the attention of Members of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH subsequently said: Mr. President, I was absent from the Chamber when the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] finished his able address. I desired to have inserted in the RECORD following his address some letters which I have received dealing with the condition of the cotton-textile industry; and I ask that those letters, together with a press statement by me, may be inserted in the RECORD following the address of the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR WALSH ON THE COTTON-TEXTILE SITUATION

I have from the beginning stated that the problem of cotton and other agricultural products is an economic problem and cannot be solved by any political artifice.

The desire to help out the cotton farmers and other agriculturalists is laudable, but the means to that end which have been employed are not only not fundamentally constructive but are fundamentally destructive to the general purchasing power of the country.

The combined exactions of the N. R. A. and the A. A. A. have converged in the textile industry, resulting in the collapse of cotton exports. The N. R. A., beneficial as it was in many respects, could have been sustained by this industry; but the A. A. A. provided the crushing blow.

Why is it to be wondered at that the cotton-textile industry is in dire distress, when the cost of production has suddenly risen to mountainous proportions, domestic consumption has slumped, foreign trade has diminished, and competitive imports are constantly increasing?

What are the causes of the threatened collapse of the cotton-textile industry, and what, if anything, can be done to help this industry?

The following factors contributing to present unfavorable conditions may be enumerated:

1. The processing tax has added a substantial increase in the cost of cotton cloth, averaging as much as 20 percent to the price, which has increased 100 percent. This has resulted in both sales resistance and substitution of other fabrics by the public. The N. R. A. has also been a contributing element in increasing costs of production, but which the industry could bear because of other benefits.

2. The continuing increase in imports of cotton cloth from Japan and the absorption by Japan of the export trade heretofore possessed by the industry in the Philippine Islands and South America has reduced the demand both in the domestic and foreign markets.

3. Continually increasing production has glutted the market, with the result that there has been no adjustment of production to consumption.

What are the remedies?

The checking of the accumulation of surplus goods can be eliminated through the efforts of the industry itself by amending its code. The N. R. A. board within a few days has authorized a curtailment plan for 3 months, and it is expected this step will be taken.

The second factor can be remedied by the industry bringing pressure to bear on the N. R. A. to exercise the power granted under the N. R. A. law, which provides that where operations in an industry under the code are being restricted or handicapped by imports, authority may be exercised to the extent of placing limitations or even embargoes upon imports.

The first difficulty mentioned may be eliminated by repealing the A. A. A. law or, as has been proposed, by the President allocating some of the funds appropriated under the work-relief bill in the nature of reimbursements as a substitute for the processing tax.

Unless some such action as outlined above is taken in the not too distant future, an increasing degree of distress will inevitably befall the general purchasing power of the millions dependent directly or indirectly on this industry, all of which will make for a substantial set-back to recovery.

In discussing this problem, I have refrained from discussing the further additional handicap under which the cotton cloth textile industry of the North labors. It is the differential in wages which favors the southern section of the industry, which now represents the largest group of producers. The textile code provided for a minimum wage which affected comparatively few employees, but left uncontrolled the competition in all other classifications of wages. It is estimated that the wage differentials in certain classifications of employment between the North and the South reaches from $2 to $7 more in the North than in the South. Adjustment of this serious wage differential is not easy of accomplishment. The industry shows no disposition to unite under any wage agreement that could be incorporated in the code. It is possible that the N. R. A., when reenacted, may launch in some branch of the Federal Government the power to force equality in wages that is such an important element in the cost of production in this industry. Even if the authority were granted, it would require courageous statesmanship to resist the united and militant opposition of the southern textile interests.

Drastic action must be taken at once, if this industry is to be saved, and the first step is to eliminate the processing tax, which is indefensible.

Taunton, Mass., April 2, 1935.

HON. DAVID I. WALSH,
The Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WALSH: The city of Taunton as you are undoubtedly aware, at one time, and until quite recently, maintained a moderate number of textile manufacturing plants employing approximately 6,000 people; today there are but 2 plants left employing between 600 and 700. Last week the plant owned by William M. Butler and son and known as the "Hoosac Mills", closed its doors. Owing to the processing tax it was impossible for them to continue. Until recently the Hoosac Mill has been running with two shifts employing 250 to 300 people. This means a loss of a pay roll of approximately $4,000 per week to the city of Taunton. The writer is aware that our representatives are doing all in their power to have this tax repealed.

The above facts are presented to you with the hope that such evidence as this when presented to the proper committee will have some influence, if not entirely repealing the tax, perhaps have a tendency to reduce it somewhat.

Very truly yours,
MANUFACTURERS' AND EMPLOYERS' ASSOCIATION OF TAUNTON, FRANK L. LOCKLIN, Secretary.

HON. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We, together with many others in this territory, certainly think it is time the cotton-processing tax was removed in order that the cotton-mill industry might have an opportunity to remain in existence a few years longer.

Massachusetts, certainly for the past 15 years or more, has been driven to the wall by legislation affecting its principal manufacturing industries. For instance, the various conditions brought about by State legislation has killed the shoe industry here, as it has driven the greater portion of it out of New England, and particularly out of Massachusetts. The same fate seems to await the cotton-mill industry, not only in Massachusetts, but in every State in New England, and something should be done to remedy the situation before it is too late.

It does seem as though the lawmaking bodies of this State, as well as of other New England States, have shut their eyes to conditions for the last 15 years, during which time these conditions have been steadily growing worse, and now since the Federal Government has taken matters into its own hands, in trying to legislate business, the end of the cotton-mill industry seems to be in sight.

Soon after the N. R. A. was organized, the cotton-mill industry thought it had helped the cotton-mill business to a great extent. However, it was only a fictitious improvement, therefore could not last. This whole N. R. A. scheme was simply hatched by companies that were broke. They went to the Government for assistance, and the Government in attempting to help them, of necessity stepped on the small business man. Washington can hedge all it pleases but the N. R. A. is killing the small industrialist. The whole scheme is rotten and wrong from the beginning and therefore cannot be made to work satisfactorily nor permanently. The final result will be a debt on which the industrialists will be forced to pay the rest of their days. The millions of dollars the N. R. A. has already cost is probably beyond computation.

There is certainly no more sound reason for a processing tax on cotton, or on wheat, than on any manufactured article being made by an industry that is broke. For instance, to give what occurs to me as the simplest of illustrations, it certainly would not sound very reasonable to put a 2-cent processing tax on every bundle of wet wash done by the laundries, when the laundries as a whole are in a bad condition, most of them not making any more than enough to meet running expenses, therefore unable to lay aside a dollar for replacements, to pass out to the man who sells them their supplies, or machinery, so that the manufacturer might realize a profit at the end of the year, to offset the lack of business he receives from the laundries, on which he depends for existence.

When the politicians wake up to the fact you cannot bring back prosperity by increasing the price of food by legislation, we may get some relief. When legislation causes the price of meat to be raised, the result is every family in the country has its meat sliced thinner, so that less is consumed, because the public is getting no more dollars in its pay envelop with which to buy it. This increasing the price of meat 100 percent causes 120,000,000 people to eat less of it, or go without it, and brings meat into the country in shiploads. The same applies to butter. Less of it is bought, and the general public substitutes a manufactured article.

When we get done trying to squander the taxpayers' money in an attempt to bring back prosperity, there may be some relief for the workingman and the business man, and a return of prosperity for all.

In 1917 and 1918, when those in power at Washington took a dollar bill and marked three dollars across the face of it, or did what amounted to the same thing, they caused a condition that brought about our depression. In other words, the depression was brought about in no other way, and what Washington has been doing the last 2 years will bring about another depression in the future that will make the present one seem insignificant.

The experimenting that has been done by the Government has certainly not helped us out of the depression as yet, simply because all Government employees, from the letter carriers to the high officials, are getting the same rate of pay they were drawing during the years of supposed prosperity, while the small industrialists, and the men who earn the dollars to pay the bills, or to pay the salaries of Government employees, are the ones who find work scarce, and those who have work are not getting enough to exist on.

We do not know how long it will take the politicians to realize that the members of one industry cannot go to Washington and ask for legislation to help them, without stepping on the neck of another industry—in fact when one industrialist goes to Washington to ask for such legislation, he does it with that intention in mind.

We trust the cotton-mill industry will experience relief from the processing tax before more harm is done.

Respectfully yours,

A. R. PATTEN.

FEDERAL MILL, INC.,
Lockport, N. Y., April 1, 1935.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I note that you have had inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter from Mr. Charles F. Adams, protesting against the increase in cost of food, and it occurs to me that you might be interested in the enclosed tabulation showing the so-called "farm-benefit payments" to various States, and the cost of the processing taxes to each State.

From this you will note (column 5) that the estimated benefit payments to the farmers of Massachusetts amount to $367,000 per year.

On the other hand, the processing taxes (column 6) cost the people of Massachusetts $16,354,000.

These costs do not include an average cost of 55.9 cents per capita additional processing taxes covering sugarcane, sugar beets, and peanuts. If these figures were included, it would show the cost of processing taxes to the people of Massachusetts well over $18,000,000.

I was interested in a recent bulletin of the Federal Reserve bank showing an increase in retail sales of food of something like 11 percent, but a reduction in retail sales of furniture of something like 10 percent. I am giving these figures of retail sales from memory, but they are approximately correct. This, of course, means an increase in the cost of food, the benefits of which very largely go to western farmers, with a corresponding reduction in the purchase of manufactured goods which in turn naturally must reduce employment.

Very respectfully yours,

FRED J. LINGHAM.

P. S.—I assume you understand that the proposed A. A. A. amendments are intended to still further increase the cost of food through marketing agreements which would naturally be entered into only for the purpose of raising prices of farm commodities.

Also, a bill has been presented in the House (H. R. 6199) for the definite purpose of increasing the basis of assessing processing taxes.—F. J. L.

WALTHAM BLEACHERY & DYE WORKS, INC.,
Waltham, Mass., March 29, 1935.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: As president of the first bleachery in the world, and in behalf of all the employees of this company, may I add to the protests of the present conditions in the textile industry in this country.

I have just returned from New York, after having made a thorough canvassing of practically all of the largest commission houses in this country. The conditions are appalling. Between the N. R. A. control, the continued spread of wages between the North and the South, processing tax, and the lack of proper protection against the importations of textiles into this country, even though raw materials emanate in this country, the textile industry in the United States is about to collapse in its entirety. This is not only my personal opinion but the expressed opinion of men that have a comprehensive knowledge of the textile industry.

As bad as the domestic market actually is, our exports of cotton and textiles are far worse.

The importations, particularly those of Japan, have not only replaced our domestic outlet but the low prices have caused total destruction and collapse of prices on merchandise to the extent that the industry as a whole is panic stricken. Therefore, under the circumstances, business at any price is the slogan, and it means that each successive bidder steps down deeper into a bottomless pit of desperation.

The word which apparently emanated in the agricultural section at Washington a few weeks ago that cotton would not continue to be pegged at 12 cents caused a new and unlooked-for calamity. Now we are told that the processing tax shall be increased rather than totally eliminated. More embarrassment.

Unless we know something—and we hope at least a word of encouragement—as to the immediate future plans of the United States Government we cannot intelligently proceed.

A word from you at this time would be more than appreciated. In desperation I ask that something be done to turn the tide, that we may be enabled to continue to operate and give deserving employees a chance to exist—faithful, deserving employees, many of whom have been in our employ for over 50 years.

Respectfully yours,

HAMPTON CO., INC.,
Easthampton, Mass., April 2, 1935.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: The Cotton Textile Institute has submitted to all its members figures on the importation into this country of cotton piece goods from Japan from January 1928 through February of 1935. The increase over that period is astounding. Since the N. R. A. and the processing tax have been in effect Japan's imports to this country have increased at a rate that now threatens the existence of our whole cotton-textile industry. In 1934 the imports of cotton piece goods from Japan were 650 percent greater than in 1933. In the single month of February 1935 there was more than a 500-percent increase over the imports for the whole calendar year of 1933. Unless some action is taken immediately to stop these importations, the damage to the cotton-textile industry will be permanent and irreparable.

It is our opinion that the processing tax on cotton should be eliminated and that legislation should be passed setting a definite limit on imports of cotton piece goods from Japan during any calendar year. If the cotton-textile industry is expected to bear the increased costs occasioned by the National Industrial Recovery Act, then the administration should give it protection against cheap foreign goods.

We appreciate your active interest in behalf of the cotton-textile industry, and we ask that its problems receive your continued support and attention.

Very truly yours,

HAMPTON CO.,

WATERHEAD MILLS, INC.,
Lowell, Mass., March 28, 1935.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: You are doubtless aware of the extreme danger to our textile business caused by the tremendous increase in Japanese importations. The following figures are taken from the report published by the Cotton Textile Institute:

Total Japanese imports of bleached and dyed cotton cloths

	Square yards
January 1934	30,378
April 1934	537,000
September 1934	683,000
November 1934	927,000
December 1934	2,210,000
January and February 1935	24,000,000

The Rhode Island State Legislature has passed a resolution very similar to the following one:

"Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be urged to pass an act which will restrict the importation into this country of any textile article from any country in a greater volume than the average annual volume of importation of that article from such country during the 5 years 1930–34, inclusive."

I cannot urge you too strongly to use your influence to aid our textile industry.

Very truly yours,

WATERHEAD MILLS, INC.,
LINCOLN CLARK,
President.

NAUMKEAG STEAM COTTON CO.,
Salem, Mass., April 2, 1935.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: While I know you are aware of what is going on, the situation in regard to the importations of cotton piece goods from Japan into this country, commencing with December 1934, has reached such serious proportions that it is necessary for the industry to concentrate upon measures to be taken promptly to check this flood of textiles now coming into this country at prices which are so much below our own costs of production as to constitute a thoroughly demoralizing influence in our markets, the effects of which will extend not only to the price structure of the cloths which are being imported but to similar lines also.

This rapid increase in the imports of cotton piece goods from Japan is strikingly shown by the following figures:

	Total from Japan	Total from all countries
	Square yards	Square yards
Year of 1928	1,710,000	61,295,000
Year 1929	1,217,000	61,185,000
Year 1930	1,016,000	35,517,000
Year 1931	770,000	34,732,000
Year 1932	789,000	29,436,000
Year 1933	1,116,000	41,348,000
Year 1934	7,287,000	41,533,000
Month December 1934	2,210,000	4,353,000
Month January 1935	3,341,000	6,682,000
Month February 1935	5,744,000	9,746,000

It is apparent from the above figures that unless controlled the imports from Japan alone during the present calendar year will exceed our total imports from all countries during the prosperous years of 1928–29. Tariff walls present no barrier to this merchandise made under labor costs and standards of living which are far below those of our own country, and the present procedure, under section 3 (e) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, is wholly ineffective to afford the protection which the act was designed to provide.

The most effective way of stemming this tide of imports would appear to be by setting a quota which shall limit importations from any country to not more than the annual average of the years 1928–32, inclusive.

It may be that we can secure some relief through a summary procedure under section 3 (e) which we are proposing to the National Industrial Recovery Board, but clear-cut relief is likely to be dependent on new legislation to establish such limitations.

We are putting these facts before you in the hope you can devise some method of correcting the situation, which really is desperate.

With best regards, very truly yours,

ERNEST N. HOOD, Treasurer.

FITCHBURG YARN CO.,
Fitchburg, Mass., April 1, 1935.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have written you recently, and want to acknowledge your replies in reference to the textile situation. The industry today, as I know you are fully familiar, is in a panic, and serious consequences are going to be the outcome unless drastic action is taken by the administration, to say nothing of the curtailed purchasing power, even with restricted spindle and loom hours creating large surpluses in all ends of our business.

The following tabulation, I know you will understand, adds more fuel to this situation:

	Total from Japan	Total from all countries
	Square yards	Square yards

Month February 1935	5,744,000	9,746,000

You will note from the above that in the last 3 months Japan has imported approximately 11,000,000 square yards of cotton piece goods, over 25 percent of the total importations of all last year from all countries; and they will keep it up, as I understand their merchandise, even on the basis of present prices, is profitable to Japanese manufacturers and the Government; and I cannot help but feel that the suggestions that have been made to keep theirs and other import countries' quotas in line with the years 1930, 1931, and 1932, as a maximum might give our industry a chance.

Irrespective of all of the data and effort that is being made for removal of the processing tax, I personally cannot feel that this is going to be a cure-all for our industry, and still feel that the stimulus that we need is control of imports, as above stated, and the absolute impounding of at least 50 percent, with the Government holding the 6,000,000 bales of cotton for an indefinite period and the balance to be impounded until the cotton market reaches at least 15 cents a pound.

Statistics and figures show that due to the monetary and exchange situation we have lost a big part of our export business; but with the present indications of the gold-bloc countries devaluing their currencies, I believe that you will see a return of a big portion of our export demand for cotton, as there are not big surpluses of cotton in other cotton-producing countries, and our cotton, or a big percentage of it, is still wanted; and a serious gesture along the above lines, I feel, with a proper devaluation of currency, would start foreign buying, which would materially lift and improve the present situation.

If you agree, your efforts along the above lines would certainly be appreciated from our point of view.

With kindest personal regards.

Yours very truly,

Imports of cotton piece goods from Japan.

To all members:

Rapid extension of the Japanese foothold in our domestic markets for cotton goods is indicated in the following records of the Department of Commerce, recently made public:

United States imports of cotton cloth from Japan

	Total	(a) Bleached piece goods	(b) Printed, dyed, and colored
	Square yards	Square yards	Square yards
1934	7,287,000	6,044,000	1,243,000

1929	1,217,000	176,000	1,038,000

The progressively increasing volume of these imports is better shown by a comparison of the monthly figures for 1934:

	Total	(a) Bleached piece goods	(b) Printed, dyed, and colored
	Square yards	Square yards	Square yards

November	927,343	812,507	114,836
December	2,210,325	1,995,243	215,082

December imports from Japan equal the total yardage of any two previous 12-month periods and are only slightly less than the gross total from that country for 3 preceding years of 1931, 1932, and 1933. The continuance of this development is seen in the appended memorandum of shipments to consignees in the United States cleared from Japanese ports since the beginning of 1935. Whether these are to banks, import houses, or to domestic distributing firms, an equivalent amount of domestic yardage production is being displaced. At the moment the most important classifications are bleached piece goods and ginghams, but the extension to other fabrics and articles is freely predicted.

Price has been the controlling factor in establishing this condition, since qualities, patterns, and colors of domestic goods have in many cases been duplicated. With landed prices for the Japanese products 20 to 30 percent under the domestic market, already highly competitive, there is no practical way for our industry under current regulations to compete on a price basis. Our higher standards of living mean labor costs 10 times higher under the code and shorter hours of operation. To preserve employment opportunities under American standards it is vital that the impending flood of Japanese cotton goods into domestic consumption channels be promptly diverted and cost equalization established.

Confronted with a similar situation some months ago Great Britain was quick to establish quotas for her various colonies and thus preserve the markets essential to prevent the scrapping of her factories and large increases in her unemployed. According to Mr. Arno S. Pearse, a noted British authority, "Japan produces cheaper than any other country and the difference in price is so marked (from 25 percent to 50 percent) that the European industrialist has in many cases given up hope of overcoming it." We are now more vulnerable than any of the European countries and our tariff walls are no longer effective in equalizing the different standards of life.

The influence of greatly increased domestic costs under the N. R. A. and consequent higher prices in our cotton-goods markets has been an easy stimulant to the Japanese drive for American business, coupled with the protective limitations adopted in many formerly important world markets where the doors are now barred to them. It is not our habit to be alarmists, but we are convinced that these developments present a serious threat to the well-being of our industry and all connected with it, as well as to the highest public interest. We believe that prompt governmental action is necessary to cope with the situation which is growing progressively worse.

COTTON INDUSTRIES EMPLOYEES' ASSOCIATION,
Houston, Tex., April 1, 1935.

Senator WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: The Galveston News of recent date carried an A. P. dispatch indicating that you had called for a Department of Commerce study as to why Japan was increasing her trade with South America.

Very likely such a study will reveal many important matters never brought before the Department and to the attention of our lawmakers.

As one of the officials of the Cotton Industries Employees' Association, which has units located all over the Cotton Belt, I have had the opportunity of giving close study to this situation, and if I can assist in any way in presenting you with statistics, data, etc., please do not hesitate to call on me.

The present agricultural program of the A. A. A. is being severely criticized here in the South for its short-sighted theories of pegging the price of American cotton above that of the rest of the world, which has resulted in the Government taking over huge surpluses under their loan program. This naturally takes "free" cotton from normal channels of trade, and it is almost impossible for exporters, etc., to furnish the needs of our former foreign customers. European and Asiatic buyers of American raw cotton are being forced by this present program to become price conscious rather than quality conscious, and to seek their requirements of raw cotton from foreign producing countries who have annually increased production in view of our enforced reduction.

The law of supply and demand clearly indicates that the price of cotton with the world supply as it is is not worth 12 cents. With other producing countries offering their cotton at world prices, it is only natural that they should sell theirs and attract to their shores such large consumers of cotton as Japan and China.

Every month of continuance of the present program causes further loss of our former cotton customers, as they are gradually changing their machinery to accommodate exotic growths rather than American cotton.

As a Senator from an industrial State, with factories which have always considered the South a wonderful outlet for their finished goods, please consider what will happen down here when the Government is forced to take its protective arm from the farmer's shoulder and turn him back to the soil. In Texas and Oklahoma 90 percent of the cotton produced normally goes into export channels, for which the producer has always secured a consumer's dollar with which to buy from the East. We must export our cotton in order to maintain economic stability, and we cannot maintain our export markets if the A. A. A. pegs the price and takes the cotton from trade channels.

Your consideration of this matter will be of vital interest not only to the South but the industrial area you represent, and I would certainly appreciate your views on same.

Sincerely yours,

F. P. LORDAN,
Chairman Houston-Galveston Division.

JANUARY 9, 1935.

Hon. PAT HARRISON,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In a spirit of constructive analysis I offer these thoughts for your consideration:

You and I know that the production of cotton, at best, is always an unknown quantity. It is not a commodity the production of which is solely within the will of man to command, as is the case in the mining of metals or coal or in the industrial output of factories. Agricultural production ever faces the uncertainty of the unforeseeable and/or uncontrollable in natural elements, such as too much or too little moisture, adverse temperatures, and the ravages of insects and pests.

Any plan devised or devisable with the purpose of affecting the price of cotton must reckon in terms of world supply and world demand.

World supply and world demand are, in turn, made up of five parts, to wit: First, world carry-over of all kinds; second, combined foreign production; third, United States production; fourth, foreign consumption of all kinds; and, fifth, United States consumption. Of these five factors there are four unknown quantities, assuming only world carry-over as knowable.

Of these four unknown quantities, if we are to consider American crop control as predeterminable, then there are still left three unknown quantities, which must be guessed at with the view of determining to what figure the American crop must be controlled.

But even here, in the process of arbitrarily determining what the American crop shall be, a definite conclusion must be reached, based upon the three unknown quantities, to wit: Estimated forecast of domestic consumption, estimated forecast of foreign consumption, and an estimated forecast of all foreign crops. While these prospective figures may be guessed at, no one can contend that they can be definitely predetermined or controlled, and two of them are entirely outside of the jurisdiction of the United States.

Any plan that has for its design the purpose of raising cotton prices by the means of reducing the cotton supply, and that relies for this purpose upon the curtailing of the American crop, must, of necessity, reckon in terms of total world supplies, of which only the world carry-over is knowable. From these conditions it has been obvious that even a drastic sacrifice of American production would affect world supplies by only a small percentage.

It is also noteworthy that, even after the very material sacrifice of American production, there has resulted only a slight increase in the real comparative price of cotton, when we eliminate the factor of dollar devaluation and further eliminate the artificial bolstering effect of the 12-cent loan.

I do not believe that any student of cotton economics can consistently hold that the price of cotton today, even in terms of the devalued dollar, would be 12 cents a pound in the absence of any Government loans. If we are to look at the truth fairly and squarely, we have to recognize that if the present cotton market were given over to the free action of supply and demand, that the price for cotton would be materially below 12 cents. But even if we take the figure as high as 12 cents per pound, and then convert this into terms of the dollar before devaluation, we would have a price of about 7.20 cents. It is probable that if the cotton market were given over to the free action of supply and demand, that the price for cotton would be more nearly 10 cents per pound than 12 cents. In this case the real comparative value would be about 6 cents per pound. If we then place this figure alongside of the price for cotton prevailing just before our abandonment of the gold standard, we would find that the price for cotton has actually declined. If, on the other hand, anyone wishes to contend that the free market price for cotton today, in terms of the devalued dollar, would be even as high as 11 cents per pound, then, in that event, the comparative price would be 6.60 cents per pound, which is about the same price as that prevailing just before we abandoned the gold standard.

I am, of course, aware that, under the existing influence of the 12-cent loan, actual cotton has sold on a basis higher than 12 cents. This is because the impounding effect of the loans has worked to artificially increase the "basis." This condition can be quickly understood and better visualized by likening the line of the loan level to that of the sea level and by likening cotton to an iceberg floating in the sea, from which merely a peak of the iceberg protrudes above the sea level, while the bulk of it is well beneath the sea.

In the spirit of intellectual integrity I think it is proper that these comparative figures be given due weight if we are actually to understand how much of the rise in price has been due in reality to the curtailment program exclusively and how much to dollar devaluation. I think this is necessary in the consideration of any cotton program that is designed even in the sole assumed interests of our cotton farmers, because we cannot continue dollar devaluation indefinitely.

The fact appears inescapable that the recent rise in price nearly directly corresponds to the devaluation of the dollar.

Sincerely yours,

GRENVILLE MELLEN, Gulfport, Miss.

SHOE LACE AND BRAID INSTITUTE,
Providence, R. I., March 29, 1935.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senator from Massachusetts, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Knowing of your interest in legislation designed to restrict or control textile imports from Japan, am enclosing copy of a letter to Robert L. O'Brien, Chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, which outlines the shoe-lace industry's attitude toward Japanese competition, and shows clearly how Japan has taken advantage of the increased costs under N. R. A. to aggressively push their shoe laces into the United States market.

Several of our mills are located in your State of Massachusetts, and account for about 15 percent of the total production of the industry. More than 80 percent of the industry is centered in New England, with the State of Rhode Island accounting for 60 percent of the total. We therefore urge in your efforts to obtain a constructive protection against Japanese imports for the textile industry as a whole, and for the New England textiles in particular, that you will include the shoe lace industry among those several branches of the textile industry for which any specific legislation may be enacted.

Yours very truly,

SHOE LACE AND BRAID INSTITUTE,
L. K. LOOMIS, Secretary.

SHOE LACE AND BRAID INSTITUTE,
Providence, R. I., March 22, 1935.

ROBERT L. O'BRIEN,
Chairman United States Tariff Commission,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In behalf of the shoe-lace industry, which for the past 20 months has been suffering from imports of shoe laces from Japan at prices far below the domestic cost of production, the Shoe Lace and Braid Institute hereby requests that shoe laces be included among those textile products for which the administration may enact specific legislation to prevent further increases of general textile imports from Japan at prices demoralizing to domestic industry.

Industry facts: The Shoe Lace and Braid Institute is the national trade association for the shoe lace industry which is located in several of our States, including Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Ohio, North Carolina, Missouri, and Illinois. The industry is centered in Rhode Island, whose manufacturers account for 60 percent of the entire production in the United States. Wage earners number from 2,700 to 2,800.

The industry produces about 7,000,000 gross laces a year, representing annual sales of approximately $4,000,000. Sales fall into two general classes. (1) Bulk laces to shoe factories (5,000,000 gross laces), and (2) paired laces for replacement purposes (2,000,000 gross laces or 1,000,000 gross pairs). At present the Japanese are exporting only the paired laces to this country, and it is in the paired-lace-replacement market that the domestic industry is suffering from low-priced Japanese competition.

Beginning August 1, 1933, the industry operated under the minimum wage, hours of labor, and productive machine-hour provisions of the cotton textile code until March 12, 1934, at which time it went under the code for the narrow-fabrics industry, as approved on February 27, 1934.

Japan's opportunity since N. I. R. A.: Until August 1, 1933, at which time labor and overhead costs increased through this voluntary cooperation with the N. R. A., the industry was able to compete with foreign-made goods, under the 90-percent duty provided by paragraph 1529-a of the Tariff Act of 1930 (braids or laces made on a braiding machine). Consequently, previous to and throughout 1932 and the first 6 months of 1933 there were only scattered imports of cotton shoe laces.

Increase in imports: However, in the summer of 1933 Japanese manufacturers saw the opportunity afforded in the American market through rising costs under the N. I. R. A. and A. A. A., and started to export paired shoe laces to America in large quantities. Imports of Japanese shoe laces continued to grow at a rapid rate all through the last 6 months of 1933 and throughout 1934, reaching a volume of 111,000 gross laces for the year 1934. Thus the industry, despite a 90 percent duty on its product, has witnessed imports of Japanese shoe laces grow from 420 gross laces in July 1933, to an average of almost 10,000 gross laces per month during 1934. (See attached schedule no. 4.)

Price comparisons: The average value of a gross of Japanese paired laces is 0.64 yen, or about 18 cents at the prevailing rate of exchange. The 90-percent duty and import landing costs bring the price to the importer up to 36 cents per gross laces. Several wholesalers in New York City are offering the Japanese laces at 40 cents to 45 cents per gross laces. Yet the domestic cost of production on similar laces averages between 55 cents and 65 cents per gross laces. Such price competition as that is severe, and employers and employees in this industry are suffering accordingly.

Imports of 111,000 gross laces represent about 6 percent of total domestic paired production for 1934. Although 6 percent may appear small in percentage, it should be pointed out that the destructive feature of Japanese competition is the low price at which the laces sell throughout the country. The mere quotation of low prices on a few thousand gross of paired Japanese laces in the various metropolitan centers serves to break paired shoe lace prices to jobbers and shoe finders in those centers. Each sale of a Japanese lace at a price below the costs of production of a domestic lace instigates through severe price competition the cutting of prices by domestic producers, which cutting becomes cumulative and eventually results in a serious dislocation to the price structure of the entire industry.

The severe price competition offered by the Japanese product is not of the healthy type experienced in many other industries in which a low-priced product from abroad stimulates total consumption both of the domestic and the imported product at an average price scale lower than that which existed before the foreign competition. In the case of the shoe lace, competition from abroad is primarily destructive, and each foreign lace sold in this country eliminates the sale of a domestic lace.

A natural corollary of the administration's policies of the last 2 years, which has resulted in increased costs to domestic manufacturers, is a compensating increase in protection against foreign competition, especially that from Japan, whose yen has depreciated more than other currencies, including that of the United States dollar. The institute is prepared to furnish further statistical data concerning the shoe lace industry, including costs of production of laces similar to the Japanese laces, and other pertinent data which the Tariff Commission will probably need if and when Congress authorizes a specific investigation of the effects of Japanese competition on domestic textile industries.

Yours very truly,

SHOE LACE & BRAID INSTITUTE,
L. KENYON LOOMIS,
Secretary.

BARNARD MANUFACTURING CO.,
Fall River, Mass., November 27, 1934.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Unless the processing tax is eliminated, and the southern manufacturer is obliged to pay the same wages for the same amount of work required for each operative, less the differential of $1 per week, it will only be a few years when the active spindles in New England will be less than 4,000,000.

In 1923, there were 16,247,100 spindles in New England. At one time, there were about 4,000,000 spindles in Fall River alone, and today, from the best information available, there are only about 1,000,000 spindles running.

Yours very truly,

J. EDWARD NEWTON, Treasurer.

P. S.—We are enclosing a copy of a letter sent to Mr. Louis McHenry Howe, Secretary to the President.

BARNARD MANUFACTURING CO.,
Fall River, Mass., November 26, 1934.

Mr. LOUIS MCHENRY HOWE,
Secretary to the President, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HOWE: For the last 10 years the cotton mills in New England have been closed down one by one, because the southern mills could manufacture cotton cloth at a lower cost, due principally to lower wages paid their employees and working them longer hours.

When President Roosevelt took office he said through the N. I. R. A., "All cotton mills in the United States shall run 40 hours per week and the minimum pay in the southern mills will be $12 per week, and in the North, $13." This differential of $1 was because the southern workers living expenses were that much less per week than the northern workers.

The experienced employees, such as loom fixers, card grinders, fancy weavers, and so forth, are being paid in the northern mills from $6 to $10 per week more than the southern mills are paying for the same work, saying nothing about giving their employees more work to do, which is called the "stretch-out." Now, if we have to continue to pay this increase in wages over the southern mills, we cannot sell our goods, because our cost is too high.

Why not apply the differential of $1 per week not only to the minimum wage, but all the way up to the maximum?

In 1923, there were in New England over 82,000 more spindles than in the cotton-growing States today, "according to the report of the Department of Commerce of October 1934." The South has over 8,800,000 more spindles than the North. The active spindles in the South are over 9,000,000 more than in the New England States, and unless the wages paid in the southern mills are rectified, and they eliminate the "stretch-out" system, I am quite positive that there will be six cotton mills in Fall River that will have to liquidate, and this will also apply to a large number of other mills in New England. In fact, there are three mills that have started to liquidate in the last 6 weeks, that are located in New Bedford and Rhode Island.

One thing that will help the cotton industry more than anything I know of, is to eliminate the processing tax. Cotton goods will then be bought at much lower prices which will stimulate buying to a great extent.

We know you are widely interested in the city of Fall River, and hope you can bring these facts to the attention of the President's Textile Board.

Yours very truly,

J. EDWARD NEWTON, Treasurer.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A word of approval for the effort you are making to relieve the textile industry in New England.

You can see at Clinton in the carpet mill and in Lancaster examples of the plight of this State, and razed buildings and vacant plants in Lowell, Lawrence, Fall River, and Woonsocket are eloquent danger signals that cry out for help if the industry is to be saved for Massachusetts.

Probably you are burdened with data, but only this week I have learned of velveteens offered by the Japanese in the New York market at one-third the selling price of New England manufacturers.

Does not the administration realize the necessity for quick action if Mr. Wallace is to continue to receive the processing taxes with which to pay the farmer for not growing cotton?

If you have an opportunity, I wish you would write me your candid opinion as to the possibility of getting any relief.

You can count me as a new recruit to the list of Walsh Republicans.

THE ACHESON HARDEN CO.,
New York, May 8, 1934.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We are taking the liberty of enclosing herewith copies of correspondence we have received recently in reference to the importation of cheap cotton handkerchiefs into this market from Japan. These importations have already caused us to curtail our operations at our Passaic, N. J., plant, where we have been employing upward of one thousand people steadily on making handkerchiefs. Our pay roll amounts to over $600,000 a year; a sizable figure for a small community like Passaic.

This serious menace of cheap handkerchiefs coming into this country from Japan is causing our industry a great deal of concern and is not helping us to aid the Government in its recovery program. In fact, it is operating quite to the contrary. It is also causing us to be very cautious about placing forward commitments for our raw materials.

We thought you might be interested in receiving some data on this subject for your information and records.

Yours very truly,

FRANK A. HARDEN,
President the Acheson Harden Co.

ACHESON HARDEN CO.,

(Attention Mr. Sturgess.)

DEAR MR. STURGESS: You will probably be interested in seeing a sample of a Japanese handkerchief that is to arrive in New York about May 20, men's, colored border, size 15 by 15, 4 colors, assorted, to the dozen, green, brown, lavender, and blue, 25 cents per dozen f. o. b. New York City, packed 1 dozen to the bundle, 10 dozen to the paper package.

There are three designs in addition to the enclosed. The price is quite attractive for a man's 5-cent handkerchief, but the material is nothing to brag about. This has been offered to us through our New York office in 100 dozen lots, or more, of a number. It is possible that you already know this item; but if not, I feel sure you will be interested.

We also received from our Chicago friends a sample of the white handkerchief enclosed, which is supposed to be of 70/58 Japanese cloth put up in bundles, supposed to be first quality at 28 cents per dozen.

The sample they sent us is far from being a first in my estimation, as the piece I have kept is worse looking than the half I am sending you. This same party is quoting a 60/48, 17½ by 15½ cut, men's white, at 26½ cents.

Always know that you are interested in what is going on down here.

With kindest regards,
Yours very truly,

FRED C. DICKSON,

By WILSON J. HERRINGTON.

Below is extract from a letter received on April 28 from our representative in Philadelphia, Mr. H. R. Baldwin, reading as follows:

"I have lately been up against very hard competition on my staple men's white cotton handkerchiefs because of handkerchiefs made by the Japanese and imported into this country. I wish you would do all in your power to have the duty raised on these handkerchiefs and keep them out of our country. They surely will cut down our sales if allowed to be imported."

H. R. BALDWIN,

The following is copy of a letter received from our Mr. C. J. Norsch from New Orleans:

"Jaubert Bros., of New Orleans, have received a sample of a Japanese men's white handkerchief with printed border, cut 15 by 15, quoted at 25 cents per dozen; a pretty good-looking item."

95 Madison Avenue, New York City.

DEAR MR. BARRY: I wired you yesterday in regard to the Japanese goods that were being unloaded in this country, and also I acknowledge receipt of your telegram in prompt reply.

While I was aware that Japanese imports were causing a little uneasiness in some industries, we had not come in competition with their handkerchiefs until this week. We found that they sold one of our customers 2,000 dozen 64 by 60's, which had a finished size of 17 by 18, and doubtless this would mean that they were originally cut at least 18 by 19. These goods were sold at 30 cents per dozen. I have received information this morning by wire where another customer has bought a quantity of the Japanese handkerchiefs, and they are actually boasting about the size of these goods and the price that they have been getting. They seem to get quite a kick out of it and do not seem to realize what it would mean to the American industry if a thing of this kind is permitted to continue. They are packing their goods in 5 dozen blue papers instead of the usual 10 dozen papers.

I am pleased to note that the association has taken steps to secure cooperation from the Government with regard to Japanese imports, and trust that it will not require the necessary slow routing to get the proper action. With 2,000 dozen Japanese handkerchiefs placed with one small dry goods jobber and others that I happen to know about buying proportionate quantities, it would certainly indicate that it would be quite possible for them to land several hundred thousand dozen of their goods and dispose of them before we were aware of what was taking place. If this is permitted, all of us might just as well throw up our hands and turn the business over to the Japanese to handle. With our high labor costs and their ridiculously low costs there is no chance for us to meet this foreign competition. If the Government has this matter put before them forcibly, no doubt they will see the seriousness of the condition and take the necessary steps to work the matter out for the protection of the American manufacturer.

I shall be glad for you to give me what information you can concerning this matter.

With best of good wishes to you from the writer, we are,
Yours very truly,

STEDMAN HANDKERCHIEF MANUFACTURING CO.,
S. B. STEDMAN.

MAY 7, 1934.

Senator W. WARREN BARBOUR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR WARREN: Mr. George C. Fisher, handkerchief buyer for the S. S. Kresge Co., was in our office this afternoon. He stated that he had been offered in the market this morning, from a Japanese source, a men's cotton handkerchief made from a 68 by 72 cloth, finished, 17 inches square, with 1½-inch rayon initial embroidered on same, at 42½ cents per dozen. We have a similar article in our line at the present time which costs us 53 cents per dozen.

He was also offered a men's plain white cotton handkerchief, from the same source, made from a 64 by 60 cloth, finished, about 17 inches square, at 25 cents per dozen. This is an exact duplication of a handkerchief which we are running and which costs us 37 cents per dozen.

You can see by these that the Japanese are underquoting our costs by approximately 20 percent.

Mr. Fisher stated he would not buy any Japanese handkerchiefs, as he thought that it would be an inadvisable thing to do, in view of the economic situation in this country at the present time and the efforts that the Government is trying to make toward helping reemployment and restoring some measure of prosperity. All buyers, however, may not be as patriotic as Mr. Fisher is.

I am handing you the above information for your files and records for future reference.

FRANK A. HARDEN,
President the Acheson Harden Co.

WATERTOWN, MASS., April 1, 1935.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Over the past month or two I think I have noticed greater amounts of Japanese goods being used in the State. I am not able to check up on the figures, but the closing of New England mills is a pretty clear indication that something is wrong. Probably the so-called "Jap threat" is one of the contributing factors.

If a basic aim of the new deal is to raise the price structure in our internal affairs, I cannot see why Japan should be allowed to dump her low-cost goods onto our market, as she is apparently doing. I rather think that Japan, blocked somewhat by other major nations, has concentrated on us. What can be done about it?

Please let me congratulate you on your sensible stand on so many of the outstanding issues of today.

Sincerely,

FREDERICK T. LARRABEE.

BOSTON, April 12, 1934.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: Enclosed is an article on textile exports. This situation is getting constantly worse as time goes on.

Very truly yours,

H. C. DUMAINE, Jr.

[Telegram]

FLORENCE, ALA., April 4, 1935.

Hon. DAVID WALSH,
United States Senate:

We appreciate your efforts in behalf of the textile industry, which, under present conditions, will not survive much longer the process-tax labor conditions, and all the various restrictions under N. R. A. are making it impossible for us to continue operations much longer, and hope through your efforts these can be entirely eliminated; if not, the textile industry is in a hopeless condition.

M. W. DARBY,
Treasurer Cherry Cotton Mills.

SETTLEMENT OF SPECIAL CLAIMS WITH UNITED MEXICAN STATES

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1068) to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934, which was, on page 5, line 23, after the word "duties", to insert a comma and "at which time all powers, rights, and duties conferred by this act upon the Commission shall terminate."

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE MERCHANT MARINE ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 619) to amend section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, which were, on page 1, line 3, after "1920", to insert "(U. S. C., title 46, sec. 883)"; on page 1, line 6, after "to", to insert "the transportation of"; on page 1, line 7, to strike out "and" and insert "or to motor vehicles with or without trailers, and with their passengers or contents when accompanied by the operator thereof, when such railroad cars or motor vehicles are"; on page 1, line 9, to strike out all after "route" down to and including "tariffs", in line 11; on page 1, line 11, to strike out "or vessel"; on page 2, line 5, to strike out "or vessel"; and on page 2, line 8, to strike out "ferries and vessels are" and insert "ferry is built in and."

Mr. VANDENBERG. I move the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what is the bill?

Mr. VANDENBERG. This is a bill passed by the Senate to relieve shipping on the Great Lakes from an unintended stricture which was involved in the original Merchant Marine Act of 1920. It has the approval of all the departments. It was passed by the Senate and has now been passed by the House with a further restriction.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the restriction which the House imposed?

Mr. VANDENBERG. As the Senate passed the bill it applied to only three situations in the United States. As the House passed the bill it applied to only two. The Vermont situation has been eliminated from the jurisdiction of the bill. The measure was proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY].

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think the bill is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I renew the motion that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON SUGAR EXCHANGE TRANSACTIONS (S. DOC. NO. 44)

Mr. BAILEY obtained the floor.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I have asked the Senator from North Carolina to yield for the purpose of presenting a report and asking to have it printed as a Senate document.

Several weeks ago the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] introduced a resolution calling for a report by the Secretary of Agriculture on what was known and widely discussed as the December 1934 "sugar squeeze" as a result of speculation in Cuban sugar futures on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange. The report of the Secretary of Agriculture has been recently filed with the Senate. It contains useful information with respect to the operation of the Sugar Act of May 1934, and I feel it worth while to ask unanimous consent to have it published as a Senate document.

A printed estimate of the moderate cost of publication has been secured. The dependable and informative nature of the report is vouched for not only by the integrity and fairness of the Secretary of Agriculture but also by the participation in its preparation of Dr. Joshua Bernhardt, a competent economist and an exceptionally qualified sugar expert who some 10 years ago was chief of the sugar division of the United States Tariff Commission. I make the request at this time that the report, with an illustration, be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report, with the illustration, will be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Before I surrender the floor, Mr. President, I feel I should say from my intimate experience throughout with the details of the sugar law enacted last May that in my judgment the distinguished Chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. HARRISON] recently, through what I conclude was a misunderstanding, has been unjustly charged with having caused to be inserted in that law in some unexplained concealed fashion a clause which prevents the construction of Puerto Rican refineries.

The provision for the limited importation of off-shore direct consumption sugars from such sources as Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands was not one for which the Senator from Mississippi appears in any respect separately or specially responsible. It was incidental to the feature of the law which provided for quotas on imports and on continental United States sugar productions in order to prevent the overloading of the domestic sugar market with surplus sugar far exceeding domestic demand, with ruinous effects on sugar prices and on farmers engaged in the production of sugar beets and sugarcane. That provision permits the importation of island sugar in refined form in the largest quantities imported from the respective regions in any of the previous 3 years. This limitation should be contrasted with the relatively less favorable condition imposed on Cuban imports of direct-consumption sugar, which the same law fixed at 22 percent of the Cuban quota. In view of the complexities of the legislation and the importance and far-reaching nature of the conflicting interests of sugar producers and refiners in the United States and in other sugar regions under the American flag, the requirements in that legislation, which is experimental and temporary, impress me as not open to reasonable criticism.

The entire subject of off-shore quotas and imports of direct-consumption sugar was openly discussed and dealt with during the progress of the legislation and I take this opportunity as I did when the legislation was enacted, to express appreciation to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] for his helpful and impartial attitude toward the legislation, both as Chairman of the Finance Committee and on the floor of the Senate.

THE COTTON INDUSTRY

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I know we ought not to delay the proceedings of the Senate, and I am not inclined to do that sort of thing. I do not, of course, intend to say anything that would wound the feelings of my good friend from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], but he has brought forward the matter of cotton and has made a great impression upon my mind. I am very greatly obliged to him for what he has said. I do not know that I have any controversy with him, but, since he has brought the matter forward, I feel rather inclined to the view that it is quite timely that something further be said upon the subject. I regret to do it, because I do not wish to be put in the position of delaying the consideration of the pending legislation, and I am doing so only because the subject has been presented very ably by my friend the junior Senator from Alabama.

I wish to remark, first of all, that I am deeply alarmed by the situation with respect not only to raw cotton as produced by the farmers of the South but with respect to the cotton textiles which are produced in the North and the North Atlantic States and in the Southern States. There is no question, Mr. President, but that we are losing the world market for raw cotton. I have the data here before me, and I intend as briefly as possible to show just the progressive trend of that loss covering a long period. There is no question whatever, in my mind, that if we shall lose a large proportion of the world market for American cotton the loss will amount to an economic catastrophe. It will not only affect the 2,000,000 cotton producers in the cotton-growing States but it will directly affect the entire American population, because the 13 or 14 cotton-producing States constitute a third of the territory of our country, a third of its population, and a third of its market.

We have enjoyed a large portion of the world market in raw cotton for a long period. As late as 1890 we had 70 percent of the entire world market in cotton. That meant, of course, practically the clothing of 70 percent of the people who wear clothes in the world. But today, no long period having elapsed since 1890, only 40 years, one man's active lifetime, we produce and sell less cotton than the other nations. To make an approximation, the 70 percent which we had in 1890 has been reduced to about 45 percent and is being still further reduced.

There is no reason why we should be in doubt about these matters. The Department of Agriculture has fully informed us. Here is Cotton Leaflet No. 3, issued October 25, 1934, by the United States Department of Agriculture, in which we are informed as to the production of cotton in foreign countries and how it is being increased.

In India, for example, the "cotton acreage has ranged from 11,885,000 acres in 1899", 36 years ago, "to 28,403,000 acres in 1925", an increase of two and a half times. The cotton production in India has risen from less than a million bales, until they were expecting this year 6,000,000 bales, but, due to drought, the crop was cut to five and a half million bales. Nevertheless, there has been an increase of over 500 percent within the period of the lifetime of practically every Senator here. The leaflet states as to Egypt:

During the last 40 years Egypt's annual cotton acreage has fluctuated between 1,036,000 acres in 1895 to 2,162,000 acres in 1930.

An increase of 100 percent, or 1,000,000 acres.

The figures are given as to Russia:

Russia planted 4,843,000 acres of cotton in 1934.

And I have here a publication issued, I understand, under the auspices of the Soviet Republic, which bears the title "Economic Review of the Soviet Union", and is published by the Amtorg Trading Corporation, of New York City. I quote from this publication:

During the past several years there has been a considerable increase in the area sown to cotton and the production of cotton fiber in the U. S. S. R. This growth has resulted both from expansion of old cotton-growing districts in central Asia, Kazakstan, and Transcaucasia * * * and the development of new cotton regions in the Ukraine, Crimea, North Caucasus—

And so forth.

Thus the area sown to cotton in central Asia and Kazakstan rose from 837,400 hectares in 1928—

And a hectare represents 2½ acres—to 1,491,600 in 1932, while that in Transcaucasia increased by 90 percent.

Here are the figures as to the production in Russia:

In 1913, 230,000 tons of cotton; in 1933, 410,000 tons.

Thus it will be seen that the production was nearly doubled.

I have also here the facts as to Brazil. Brazil is very rapidly expanding her cotton acreage and her cotton production. It leaped from about 500,000 bales last year to 800,000 bales, and those who are best prepared to inform us tell us that Brazil is capable of an almost unlimited expansion of her acreage. The plateaus from which the rivers flow into the Amazon furnish abundant opportunity for the development of cotton land.

I believe I can see something in that matter of real significance. The South enjoyed for so many years a monopoly of the production of cotton because it was surrounded on three sides by deep water. I question whether anywhere else on the globe can be found a great farming area that is surrounded as is the Cotton Belt by such seaports. Going down the Mississippi there are Memphis and Vicksburg; on the Gulf there are Houston and Galveston, Corpus Christi, New Orleans, and Mobile; and on the Atlantic there are Savannah, Charleston, Wilmington, and Norfolk—a great collection of deep-water seaports that open to all the world that tremendous agricultural territory as no other portion of the earth is opened.

Water transportation, I am informed, is about one-tenth the cost of rail transportation. It is safe to say that practically every bale of cotton produced in the Cotton Belt, except a small area within the center of the belt, is within 300 miles of a great port and therefore easily to be transported to all the markets of the world.

That is a natural advantage which tends to give us a great monopoly in a raw material of universal use. That is the biggest stake in America. I would not undertake to say what was the very best thing the American people had, but I am satisfied that any group of economists would say that, economically speaking, the capacity to produce cotton in a great area and transport it throughout the world from ports in close proximity to the farm is one of the supreme advantages of the American Republic.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCARRAN in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator state whether or not there has been a decrease in the consumption of cotton throughout the world?

Mr. BAILEY. No; there has not been.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to invite the attention of the Senator to some figures which have been brought to my attention in reference to imports of cotton. The Senator from North Carolina and other Senators from the Southern States, and Senators, including myself, from Northern States where cotton textiles are manufactured, have been protesting against imports of cotton cloth.

Mr. BAILEY. I am coming to that.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to have the Senator confirm these figures, if he will. Information has come to me that 2 years ago the amount of cotton we exported to Japan was approximately 60 percent of its consumption, and that 40 percent came from outside of the United States; but at the present time the amount of American cotton imported into Japan is only 25 percent of its consumption and the amount of cotton which is produced elsewhere is 75 percent. I am glad the Senator is going to approach that subject. I should like to know if he has any explanation for that decrease.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall dwell upon that feature just a little, but I wish to develop further the value of this remarkable location of our cotton-producing belt with respect to the ports which transport the raw material to all the world markets. It lies in the fact that the chief export of the American people for over 100 years has been cotton. The statistical fact is that 22 percent of the total exports of the United States are constituted in just one item, and that is raw cotton. Mr. Peek, of the Export-Import Bank, recently developed the fact that the total net balance of trade in favor of the United States for 100 years in the sum of $34,000,000,000 is accounted for altogether in the fact that within 100 years we have shipped abroad $34,000,000,000 worth of cotton. But for that we would be today, as we were once, a debtor nation, and I suspect would always be destined to be a debtor nation.

Mr. President, I do not care to go at great length into the statistics. I think there may be an opportunity to do so when the remarks would be appropriate to pending legislation, when I should feel much more free to speak. A product of the soil of America, the creation of the labor of human beings who constitute our population, which has brought to us $34,000,000,000, which has made possible one-third of the American market, is of infinite value to the Republic, not just to the South. Now that we see that we are losing this great export market for raw cotton, it ought to be a matter of the utmost concern not only to the legislator but to every human being in the land. It is an amazing thing for us to have had this advantage for the space of four generations and now to be content to remain quiet or to be disposed to lay the flattering unction to our souls that it is not going to happen, when as a matter of fact it has happened, it is happening, and its culmination is not far distant.

Mr. President, I do not believe we are losing this export market for cotton because cotton is selling at a "high" price. The gold price of cotton today is about 6½ cents per pound, and that is below the cost of production. It is not selling at a high price. The argument made here this morning about the pay of the man who produces the cotton, it being suggested that we would have to get down upon the level of the farmer or worker in Egypt or India or China or Brazil in order to maintain this market, is not well founded for the simple reason that cotton now is produced in the South by labor which is paid no more than is paid to the laborers in the countries I have mentioned.

I do not hear anyone say that many of the tenant farmers of the South are in any respect worthily paid. If in 12 months of labor they get the means to keep body and soul together they are considered fortunate, and every man from the South knows it. When all that a man gets out of his labor in this world is the mere means of keeping body and soul together, I take it he has reached the irreducible minimum of compensation for his labor. I think Senators from the Southern States will bear witness that I do not overstate that fact.

I do not think that is the point of our attack. I desire to go into this matter with a view not to the worker or the farmer, but with a view to the American Union and our economic civilization. We are either going to sit quiet and do nothing about cotton and let the world take the market and confine us to the production of 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 bales where we ought to produce 14,000,000 to 15,000,000 bales, or we are going to address ourselves to the problem. I do not hesitate to say that if it appears necessary to pay a bounty for the production of export cotton, the bounty to be the difference between the world price and the parity price, it would be a magnificent investment for this country to pay the bounty. If we spend billions of dollars to build up the industries of America, it could not be said to be unjust that we should spend millions more saving agriculture in America and preserving the world market for our raw materials.

Alexander Hamilton changed the course of the country with his report on manufactures at the beginning of the nineteenth century. He directed the minds of the American legislators to the necessity for a public policy which would foster industry, and America became for a hundred years industrially minded. If America for the next hundred years becomes agriculturally minded, no mistake will be made.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. Of course, when Mr. Hamilton turned the minds of this country toward industry, and suggested the tariff, he also called attention to the fact that in order to compensate the farmer it was necessary that some kind of bounty be paid, just as the Senator has suggested.

Mr. BAILEY. Precisely; and that leads me to make the remark that we resolve the present agricultural problem in terms of parity prices. Parity means that the farmer's dollar shall buy in the market as much as he gets when he sells his goods. The buying power and the selling power of the farmer's dollar should be the same; but that cannot be as long as the farmer buys in a protected market and sells in a world market. Water does not run uphill. The only correction is a bounty on his exports.

I have said all that I intended to say on this point. I desire now to say something about the textile phase of the matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Has the Senator considered the cotton problem from the standpoint of the fact that the countries producing cotton in competition with America are upon silver standards, which means exceedingly cheap money?

I have before me the New York Times, in which I find these figures, and I will place them before the Senator for his consideration:

Mexico, just to the south of the United States, has for its unit the silver peso. The par value of the peso was 84.40 cents. That monetary unit has depreciated until yesterday it was worth only 27.85 cents, which shows that the Mexican dollar—let us call it that—is worth today less than one-third what it was worth before it fell in value. That shows that the Mexican is today receiving for his cotton, in terms of pesos, more than three times what he received before the Mexican peso was depreciated.

Today, the Mexicans are getting in excess of 45 cents a pound in Mexican money for their cotton; and just across the Rio Grande the Mexican farmers are prosperous, while just north of the Rio Grande they are in depression and the bread line.

Take the next country, India: India has the silver rupee. Originally the rupee was worth 61.79 cents. The rupee has depreciated until today it is worth only 36.34 cents, a depreciation of almost 50 percent.

Take the next country, Japan: Japan has the yen for its unit of money. Originally the yen was worth 84.39 cents. Today the yen is worth only 28.12 cents.

Take Brazil, for example: Originally the milreis of Brazil was worth 20.25 cents. It has depreciated to 6.20 cents.

The same thing is true of every competing country. These countries on silver standards have depreciated their currencies, which means that the farmers of those countries are receiving from two to four times in cents, in their money, what they originally received; and these cents and dollars, so-called, pay their taxes, their interest, and their debts just the same.

So the facts are that in the countries which compete with us the farmers are receiving high prices for their cotton on, of course, a depreciated-currency standard. In America the depreciation in the value of the domestic dollar is not as much as 25 percent.

Does not the Senator see in this situation a possible solution for a further aid to cotton farmers of the South?

Mr. BAILEY. I will answer the Senator briefly. I do not. Perhaps I can. I sit not far from the Senator from Oklahoma, and if I sit at his feet longer, I hope I may master this question as he has. Meanwhile I will ask him a question. Did he ever read the story of the six blind men who went out to examine the elephant? Each one came back with a different tale. I do not know but that there is considerable of analogy between those blind men and the Members of the Senate—I would not say any one particular Senator, but all of them put together. Each one has a different view.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not know an elephant had more than one tail. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. There were six tales in the case of this elephant.

Mr. President, I was about to say something about the textile business. We are not only losing the foreign market for our raw material in cotton, but we are also losing our domestic market for our manufactured goods. How can an American manufacturer pay $21 a bale more for cotton than the Japanese manufacturer pays, and then compete with him in the domestic market? That is precisely the fact.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is it not a fact that Japan is buying her raw cotton from our competing countries, taking the cotton to Japan and processing it into fabricated articles, and then bringing the completed, finished product to America and selling such goods in competition with our textile mills in America?

Mr. BAILEY. That is true, and that is what I wish to stop; and while the Senator is on that point, I may add that Japan has made a bargain with India whereby she takes a certain number of bales of cotton produced in India upon the agreement on India's part to buy 400,000,000 yards of Japanese manufactured cloth.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. One minute—then I will yield to the Senator from Alabama. My point is that the economic base in America is such that no cotton-manufacturing establishment in the land can hope to sell its goods in the domestic markets, and by reason of this handicap are also losing the world market. Now, we are losing the world market for the raw material on the one hand, and we have lost the world market for the manufactured product on the other.

Mr. WALSH. As illustrated by Japan.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. There is a reduction in the amount of exports of cotton, and an increase in the imports of cotton cloth to our own country.

Mr. BAILEY. And I very greatly fear this consequence, and I think it is well worthy of grave consideration: If we maintain the present course, we shall be reduced to the necessity of selling the cotton of the American farmers through the mills of the Japanese.

Mr. WALSH. I am inclined to agree that if we keep on that is the course we shall follow.

Mr. BAILEY. For years we had to depend upon Great Britain, but Japan now exceeds Great Britain in manufactures of cotton. We cannot sell our cotton textiles abroad. Japan can sell hers. We must deal with Japan in order that there may be a market for the product of the men who toil on the farm in North Carolina and elsewhere. They have no other world market, as matters are going.

To my mind, that constitutes one of the gravest of all our problems. It is a present thing, but it will intensify with every month. Shall we wait until the culmination, and then proceed to the policy of palliatives, and create work for those people by public appropriations, or shall we take steps to arrest the fatal process while it is going on?

I now yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am interested, of course, in the Senator's discussion about the condition of the cotton-textile industry. Personally, I think it is more important to find a new outlet for cotton-textile goods than for raw cotton, because in the former case we get the benefit of manufacturing in this country. I desire to complete the record on one statement the Senator made, however, so that there will be no misunderstanding about it.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall be very glad to have any correction.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is with reference to the cost which the manufacturers have due to the processing tax of $21 a bale.

Mr. BAILEY. I know what the Senator is about to say.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I assume the Senator has overlooked the fact that the textile mills get a drawback for that $21 a bale on all exported textiles.

Mr. BAILEY. I agree with that. Now let us turn that right around. When we sell cotton goods in the home market we pay $21 a bale more than the Japanese do for the raw cotton; and that has opened the door of every home throughout America to the competition of the foreign manufacturers of cotton goods with the American manufacturers, and we stand today in the presence of the solemn fact that the mills are closing day by day throughout the land. That requires instant action.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the Senator cannot use language strong enough to describe the distressed condition of this industry and to indicate that it is bound to collapse completely if something is not done very shortly.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am dwelling on this matter out of order, as I conceive it—I realize that it is not technically out of order—wholly because the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] brought the subject forward in a very fine way, with a great deal of intelligence; and, as he talked, these things occurred to me about which I had wished an opportunity to speak. By the time he concluded I decided that I would bring the matter forward.

I spoke about the dependence of 2,000,000 farm operators and their families, 10,000,000 people.

I hesitate to think what will be the consequences as the people find their means of livelihood paralyzed around the cotton mills in New England, in Rhode Island, and the other States there, and all down the Atlantic coast, 400 cotton mills in my Commonwealth, hundreds more in South Carolina, and a great number in Georgia, while, on the other hand, and without any invidious word whatever, the people of the Kingdom of Japan are making a livelihood in this business, while American citizens hold out helpless hands to their Government and beg for daily bread.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REYNOLDS in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Of the 2,000,000 and more people who live in Oklahoma, 1,000,000 depend on cotton for their livelihood. Naturally, I am just as much interested in the cotton problem as is anyone upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I am sure of that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think the Senator will agree with me that the farmers of North Carolina, as well as the farmers of Oklahoma, are forced to produce cotton in competition with the farmers of Mexico, Chile, Peru, Brazil, Argentina, India, China, and other cotton-producing countries. Those countries are all upon a cheap-money standard, a silver standard. In the United States we are on a gold standard. The United States on a gold standard, a high-money country, with a high-valued dollar even yet, is forced to compete in the production of cotton and in the processing of cotton with numerous nations on a silver standard, which is a cheap-money standard.

Now my question. If something could be done in a proper and legitimate way to raise the value of silver, such program would raise the value of the monetary units in the cotton-producing countries, and then if we could reduce the value of our dollar would not such program tend to bring about a more settled and harmonious basis on which we could compete with these silver-using nations? Does not the Senator believe that such a program would afford at least partial relief for the cotton farmers of the United States?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator from Oklahoma. I do not think that the American Republic, as great and powerful as it is, has the power to increase the cost of production in India. Let us assume that we lift the value of silver to $1.29 an ounce—and that is the objective of the Senator from Oklahoma. They could at once move off that base and get on a lower one. That would be a process of deflation for those people; it would probably drive them off any money base whatsoever.

I am willing to entertain a possibility, but I do not feel that I am remotely competent and very respectfully I question whether the Congress of the United States has the slightest capacity to affect the costs of production around the world. I am willing to have us attend to our own business here, but I do not know that we can affect such things in other countries.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me suggest to the Senator that some 2 years ago silver was selling for 24 cents an ounce in the world market.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. At that time the Indian rupee was tied to the British pound, and the rupee was a very cheap piece of silver so far as its metallic content was concerned; but being tied to the British pound, the value of the rupee was governed by the value of the British pound.

In the past 2 years silver has risen from 24 cents an ounce to 61¼ cents an ounce. By virtue of that rise in the price of silver the silver in the Indian rupee today is practically worth its face value; and if silver continues to rise in value, say 10 more points, then the silver in the Indian rupee, which is their unit of money, will be worth more than its face stamped value. That will force the Indian government to make a readjustment of their financial unit, which is one reason, obviously, why Great Britain is opposed to the American silver program. Great Britain does not want the silver in the Indian rupee to rise to the point where that coin will be worth more as bullion than as a stamped coin.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator says we would drive the people of India to some sort of readjustment. I agree, and they would make that adjustment to suit themselves. They would not make it according to the terms fixed by the Congress of the United States.

I would rather deal with something a little bit nearer home, the cotton growers all over the South. I believe we can handle this matter on our own base, without undertaking some sort of a monetary operation with a view to determining the cost of production in Japan or India. I think that is a matter they will determine, not we. I do not understand how we could drive them to an economic organization or regime which they were unwilling to assume. We might take steps to injure them in some way, but that is almost inconceivable. We want to help the peoples of the world, as I understand. I am not entertaining the idea of any retaliation. I would not proceed to deflate the money of the people of India, just as I would resent it and did resent it when other nations pursued policies tending to deflate the situation in the United States. It is wrong wherever done; it is wrong for the United States to do it to the other fellow, and when we do it, let us remember there is retribution in history.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator suggests that he wants to keep closer home, but the fact is that India and China together contain about one-half the population of the earth, and those two countries afford the greatest outlet for American cotton. Six out of 10 bales that we used to sell went to clothe half the people of the world, residing in China and India.

Mr. BAILEY. And the Senator proposes to provide an outlet for American cotton in India and China by making their money dearer, and that is an impossibility.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I propose to use more silver in an effort to help the cotton farmers of the South and the people of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. I take it from the Senator's remarks that he has retaliation in mind. I am not going to speak or act in terms of retaliation.

Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord.

I will leave that to Him. I want to act in a reasonable and a constructive way, and with a decent regard for the rights and the welfare of human beings in whatever clime and in whatever condition they may live. I am not in for war of any sort, commercial or otherwise.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wish to suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that elements of self-defense are sometimes involved, are they not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Carolina will yield, from 1920 until 1933 some influence or power raised the value of our dollar from 64 cents to $1.67. The smart financiers in the United States apparently did not know what the trouble was, and have not yet found out. I suggest that when we do find out, perhaps we may be able to take the entire world into consideration and make necessary adjustments so as to promote the general welfare of the people of our own country.

Mr. BAILEY. If those financiers have not found it out, it has not been the fault of my honored and able friend from Oklahoma. If they had read the RECORD, they would have understood it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do not have much help here or elsewhere.

Mr. BAILEY. It does not take much help. When the Senator from Oklahoma tells them the truth and all about it, all they have to do is to read the RECORD, and I am willing to let them do that.

Mr. President, to resume the course of my argument, and with a view to taking my seat, I have brought out here just the facts about the loss of world trade in raw cotton notwithstanding our incomparable advantage through producing a superior article and have extraordinary shipping facilities. I have also brought out the fact that at the present moment we are losing our export trade in manufactured cotton.

We have heard it said on the floor of the Senate more than once that the people of Japan have shipped into this country within 60 days of 1935 more of textiles than they did in the 12 months of 1934. We cannot stand that. We cannot see our mills closed. We must take steps to prevent it. Certainly we are not asking much for ourselves when we say that every cotton-mill wheel in the United States shall turn for the benefit of American workmen with respect to the domestic trade rather than for the benefit of any other workers whatsoever. That is not retaliation. That is intelligent self-interest. That is common sense.

I conclude with just this: I have a statement here of the index numbers of the quantum, price, and value of the foreign trade of the leading countries for several years. I shall start with the figure "100" as the standard in 1929. United States export trade was at 100 in 1929. Today it is at 56. The United Kingdom's trade, 100 in 1929. In 1933 they were at 64 and today they are at 70. Compared with us constantly going down, they are constantly going up. France, 100 in 1929. France in 1933 had gone down in her export trade to the point of 60. Italy, 100 in 1929, and now 53. And Germany, 100 in 1929, and now 65.

The United States has made less of recovery of her lost foreign trade from 1929 to 1934 than Great Britain or France or Italy or Germany.

Take that in the matter of price, the matter of value, take it with respect to imports and exports, and Senators will be amazed to see how the other nations have been recovering their lost foreign trade while we have been losing our own.

I had reason the other day to examine and submit to the Committee on Agriculture statements of the losses of foreign trade in the matter of agricultural products, and in every product that we ship abroad we have suffered severe losses in the last 12 months.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator think that our attitude previous to that time toward other nations which resulted in obvious retaliations against us by them has had any part in the loss of our markets?

Mr. BAILEY. I am glad the Senator asked that question, and I hope I may plead it by way of exoneration for not taking my seat sooner. I heard a great deal and read and thought a great deal about the effect of the Smoot-Hawley bill. I am sure that is what the Senator from Kentucky has in mind. I think it did build up a tremendous resentment throughout the whole world against us. I think it was one of the most unfortunate pieces of legislation that ever was enacted. I remember reading the statement of the leader on the other side that once that bill was passed we would be out of the depression in 30 days, and if I am not mistaken, it is certainly my recollection, that within 30 days after the bill had passed at least 30 foreign nations had retaliated against us. I do not think, however, that the present situation relates to that altogether. I think the present situation is one of universal competition in the most intense degree. Whatever may have been the causes 3 and 4 and 5 years ago, those of us who are now responsible have got to deal with the consequences as they are. We cannot go back and correct what was done in 1930. We have got to take the step with the situation as it is, and I have brought forward this matter of cotton and textiles and agricultural exports only because I see not only no recovery in those respects, but ever-increasing disaster, and I am deeply convinced that we ought to address ourselves to these things while the fatal process may be arrested.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point the report from the League of Nations Bulletin on World Trade and Official Reports of the Respective Countries with regard to the index numbers of quantum, price, and value of the foreign trade of leading countries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ON THE COMPLAINTS OF THE DEMOCRATS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I had not intended to interrupt this discussion on the cotton question. It grieves me, however, to see the lack of understanding of some of my Democratic colleagues on the cotton question and on other questions.

To begin with, we do not need the market of Japan for cotton. We do not need the market of India for cotton. We do not need the market of England for cotton. The United States today needs 25,000,000 bales of cotton. I am not going to explain why, because I have taken too much time on other days to tell Senators why. There is a demand in the United States today for 25,000,000 bales of cotton. That is not only true of cotton. That is true of other commodities. The people of the United States in order to be in a normal condition today need to consume 25,000,000 bales of cotton.

My friend the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], where they make toothbrushes and shoes, finds that on the streets of Boston today they are selling a Japanese toothbrush and they are selling foreign-made shoes. Notwithstanding the fact that they are making them in Boston they are selling the foreign-made goods in Boston.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Only this morning my attention was called to another commodity which is being imported into this country from Japan in very large and increasing quantities, and which is manufactured in my State and in other States of the Union. It is a very simple article—shoe laces. The amount of shoe laces imported from Japan to this country in July of 1933 was 420 gross per month. This past year the average of shoe laces imported from Japan to this country was 10,000 gross per month.

It may interest the Senator to know that although there is a tariff duty of 90 percent on those shoe laces and though the importers paid that tariff duty and paid the Japanese manufacturer, these shoe laces are sold in the chain stores of this country for 1 cent a pair, while no manufacturer in this country can produce them and sell them at less than two pairs for 5 cents.

That is in addition to what has been said here so ably a short time ago by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] about the imports of cotton cloth, which has resulted in creating a condition that I have never seen before in the 20 years of my public life—an entire industry panicky.

I have letters which I put into the RECORD today in which they refer to the possible collapse in the near future of this industry. I hope Senators will read these letters. I sat in with a group of industrialists from the Southern States which are supposed to have advantages over the northern producers, 2 weeks ago Saturday, who stated that if something is not done in 3 months there will be 500,000 textile employees added to the welfare rolls of this country.

I am glad the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] is raising his voice to help us get some action and obtain remedies to prevent the collapse of this industry. If it comes it is going to seriously impair the whole recovery program, because if this industry collapses the many industries depending upon it will collapse.

Mr. LONG. The Senator described conditions affecting that industry. The facts are that nearly every American industry is in that same condition, which will be found if we will just dig deep enough. What is the trouble? We have a very difficult time getting Senators to be consistent. The first trouble is that our markets have been taken away from us. The second is we are not consuming in America what the people of America are begging to have. We have enough people in America today who would consume every product which is raised or manufactured. At the most, Mr. President, the foreign business never did amount to more than 10 percent of the American business, and it never was that much. Of our entire business in America that which was due to foreign trade was never in excess of 10 percent. That is a recognized figure. But we undertook to carry on a certain foreign trade. I never have been so wild about that foreign trade, although I am from a cotton country.

I have never been very wild about our foreign trade, because I have realized that the time was coming when Egypt was going to plant cotton; so was Russia; so was Turkey; so was Brazil. There is no question about the fact that long before I came to the Senate we imposed a tariff on long-staple cotton, and I stated on this floor when I was trying to get a tariff on oil that the time would come when we would have a tariff on short-staple cotton; and that time is coming. southern Senators need not fool themselves. We will have to put a tariff on cotton, just as certain as we are living. Short-sighted southern statesmen who have been clamoring for free trade, in the imaginary belief that always there would be cotton which had to have a free-trade market, will wake up, if they have not already awakened, and find out that other countries are going to be able to produce cotton cheaper than can America.

Now, getting to the point that the Senator from Massachusetts covered, certainly foreign nations are underselling us. Why? Their currency is one thing; the lower cost of their labor is another; the lower cost of their water transportation is another.

As an example, we have had the Interstate Commerce Commission operating in the United States, but it has never been known, since it was created, to lower a freight rate. Yet Senators keep wanting to put matters under the Interstate Commerce Commission. For 11 years I was a member of the Louisiana Railroad and Public Service Commissions, and never did I have occasion to go before the Interstate Commerce Commission when the net result was other than to get a higher freight rate in the interior of the country.

At Waterloo, Iowa, as an example, there was formerly, as I believe the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] told us here one day, a great cream separator establishment. Why did it not continue? When the Panama Canal was constructed such an advantage was given to coast points that the interior could not meet the transportation cost.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REYNOLDS in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. I gladly yield, and more readily to the Senator from Missouri than anyone else in this body. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Why the discrimination?

Mr. CLARK. I will say, so far as the illustration used by the Senator from Louisiana is concerned, that at Waterloo, Iowa, they formerly had not only a cream-separator factory but also a gas-engine factory and 8 or 10 other great factories which were put out of business, largely by the construction of the Panama Canal.

Mr. LONG. That is my understanding. I remember having read a speech of the Senator from Missouri about the cream separator, but I assume it applied to many other businesses.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. President, has practically destroyed the railroads in the interior of the United States with their rate-making and railroad-regulating policies. They have raised the interior freight rates to the point where one can hardly carry on business, notwithstanding the fact that somehow or other the railroad rates have been adjusted on the coasts to meet water competition, and they have, none the less, made a profit. We just fiddle around——

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. Before the Senator leaves the tariff issue——

Mr. LONG. I am coming back to it.

Mr. DICKINSON. I wish to refer to subsection (e) of section 3 of the National Recovery Act, which reads as follows:

(e) On his own motion, or if any labor organization, or any trade or industrial organization, association, or group, which has complied with the provisions of this title, shall make complaint to the President that any article or articles are being imported into the United States in substantial quantities or increasing ratio to domestic production of any competitive article or articles and on such terms or under such conditions as to render ineffective or seriously to endanger the maintenance of any code or agreement under this title, the President may cause an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission, which shall give precedence to investigations under this subsection, and if, after such investigation and such public notice and hearing as he shall specify, the President shall find the existence of such facts, he shall, in order to effectuate the policy of this title, direct that the article or articles concerned shall be permitted entry into the United States only upon such terms and conditions and subject to the payment of such fees and to such limitations in the total quantity which may be imported (in the course of any specified period or periods) as he shall find it necessary to prescribe in order that the entry thereof shall not render or tend to render ineffective any code or agreement made under this title.

So the responsibility is laid down at the door of the White House.

Mr. LONG. The point is that that is about the only half-sane provision which was written into that entire law.

Mr. DICKINSON. I concur in that view.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the Senator from Louisiana or the Senator from Iowa tell us whether any such complaint as is referred to in the language quoted as a basis for action on the part of the President has been filed with him?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I can tell the Senator; and I want my Democratic and Republican friends to listen, because it is "A plague o' both your houses" when it comes down to just what they did. We followed that up; we put in the N. R. A. law the provision that the President could lift higher the tariff wall or prescribe an embargo in order to prevent foreign-made goods or materials from breaking down the American market. Then, after we had gotten that finally signed, the ink had hardly become dry when the administration came along with the reciprocal tariff law to allow them to lower the wall. I never did know why we had to bite them both off. We gave the President the power we found to be necessary to raise the tariff wall, and the next thing we gave him the right to lower the tariff wall. In other words, it is kind of like the old man who said he did not know whether Peary discovered the North Pole or not, because Peary did not meet anybody coming back from there. [Laughter.]

So we have two kinds of authority in the hands of the President, one going to the left and one going to the right, and he zigzags. We are zigzagging. At one time we go to the left and the next time we go to the right. It brings to mind the story of the colored man out on no man's land. The captain had told him to zigzag and zigzag, and when he came back he had been shot up pretty badly; and the captain said, "Did I not tell you to zigzag?" He replied, "Yes, Captain; but I believe I must have zagged when I ought to have zigged and zigged when I ought to have zagged." [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I asked the Senator a moment ago whether he or the Senator from Iowa could point to any case where an application under the National Industrial Recovery Act had been filed with the President upon which action could be taken. I am asking for information, and if the Senator knows of a case where a complaint has been made to the President and he has refused to institute the investigation provided for or the action provided for, I should like to know it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LONG. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I understood that the President did act upon one petition presented to him and did limit the amount of imports of cotton rugs, which are manufactured both in the South and in the North. I know his attention has been called by the textile manufacturers to the increasing importations of cotton cloth from Japan and its effect on reducing the sales of the domestic producer in the domestic market. It is possible the matter did not reach the President's attention until shortly before he left Washington.

Mr. BYRNES and Mr. BARKLEY rose.

Mr. LONG. I do not want to yield any further to have other Senators engage in arguing among themselves. I should like to conclude my speech, as it will be very short.

Mr. BARKLEY. With that understanding, I will not ask the Senator to yield any further.

Mr. LONG. I do not want three Democrats to become engaged in an argument, because I do not want the harmony of the party disturbed. [Laughter.] I am trying to reconcile them; I am trying to strike a note of harmony on the Democratic side. As the Chair knows, I am a leader of the Democratic Party; I am one of its titular leaders at this time and expect to be for a while yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Did the Senator say "kickular" leader?

Mr. LONG. Yes; both "kickular" and titular; I have been on the receiving end of the former. [Laughter.]

However, the Senator from North Carolina tells us that we lost the world market for one reason; the Senator from Massachusetts tells us that we lost the domestic market. In other words, we gave the President authority which I did not want him to have. It was foolishness to have intrusted him with such authority; if we did not know how to exercise it, we ought not to have expected him to know how to exercise it. I never did believe in that kind of legislation, and I do not believe in it now. I think it is unconstitutional. I care not that the Supreme Court by a 5-to-4 decision approved the first flexible tariff law provision; if I had been on the Supreme Court it would have been 5 to 4 the other way, because that law, in my opinion, never was constitutional, and many United States Senators felt the same way about it; but we finally wound up by giving the President more authority. He has a right to protect the domestic market, and he has a right to open up the foreign market. According to what has been said on this floor, he closed the foreign market and then closed the domestic market, and we lost them both. That is what we Democrats allege to be the fact.

I am not going to say that there was a mistake in the statements of the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from Massachusetts, because I think all of them are stating the facts, and they are proving about what some of us reasonably sane believers in a sound tariff policy said on the floor of the Senate when we embarked upon this game to go both ways and lose both routes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not want to ask the Senator to yield and interrupt his remarks, but I should be glad if he would yield to me for a moment with reference to the matter to which the Senator from Massachusetts called attention.

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think, in order to be fair, it ought to be stated in the RECORD that only on the 28th day of March was a complaint filed with the President on the part of the Cotton Textile Institute. That complaint was referred to the Tariff Commission and is now pending before the Commission. That was only about a week ago, and up to that time no other complaint had been filed with the President with respect to cotton cloth.

Mr. WALSH. I did not know the exact date, but I did know that complaint had been made. I myself, on March 16, wrote an open letter to the United States Tariff Commission calling attention to the situation.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I wish to suggest that the language of subsection (e) of section 3, which I previously read to the Senator, provided that "on his own motion" action may be taken. If the situation suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts exists in various industries, action can be initiated on the part of the President himself; he does not have to wait.

Mr. LONG. That is true, but the President might not find the trouble. As it stands the President has a right to correct it without somebody else asking him to do it, but the President might not find it out. The fact of the case is that if I was down on Mr. Astor's $5,000,000 yacht I probably would not find out about it either. If he were out in the cotton fields, he would learn about it. We cannot expect a man to find out something when he has no opportunity to be told about it. I am making that defense for the President.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. In reply to the question of the Senator from Kentucky, let me say that the question of the importations of rye has been taken up with the President, having first been taken up with the Tariff Commission.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator speak of rye in the grain or liquid form?

Mr. FRAZIER. Rye, I said. It is called rye in our section of the country, and it is in grain form.

Mr. BARKLEY. Whatever it is, if it is from Kentucky it is of a superior quality.

Mr. FRAZIER. Rye is being imported from Poland and other countries in quite large quantities. We found there was a 30-cent bounty paid by the Government of Poland. We found previous to the last tariff law that where imports are coming in and a bounty being paid upon them, the Secretary of the Treasury can raise the duty equal to the amount of the bounty plus the already existing duty. We took it up with the Treasury Department, but could not get any satisfaction. We were told that the Antidumping Act was not being violated, but they ignored that provision of the tariff law in regard to bounty.

The only argument as to why they did not undertake to stop the imports of rye from Poland on which a bounty was being paid, and thus forcing down the price of rye in this country, so the farmers could not make any money out of it, was that we sell more products to Poland than we buy from them, and therefore it was not desired to disturb that trade arrangement. Poland is now delivering rye at New York ports at about 54 cents a bushel, which is far under the American cost of production. It could not be done unless a bounty was paid there by the Polish Government.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator from North Dakota. There is just this difference between the two policies in this respect. Poland pays the farmer a bounty to ship products to a foreign country. We pay our farmers a bounty to bury them. That is the difference. Poland pays a bounty to ship rye from Poland to the United States. We pay a bounty to burn it up. That is the difference. We pay a man for hogs if he proves he did not raise hogs. We pay a cattle raiser for cattle he did not raise if he proves he did not have as many cattle this year as he had last year. We pay for the cotton if the cotton farmer shows he plowed it under. That is the difference between the two systems. As a result, today there are being shipped into this country Polish rye, Japanese shoestrings and toothbrushes, foreign-made shoes, and the American workingmen—not 11,000,000 of them, as we have been told by the statistics—

Mr. LEWIS rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LEWIS. No, Mr. President. I was under a misapprehension. I was assuming the eminent Senator from Louisiana was about to take his seat. I would not deprive the Senator of a continuance of his discussion.

Mr. LONG. One reason I have not concluded my speech is because the Senator from Illinois has just come into the Chamber and I was kindly repeating a part of it because I was anxious that he should understand it.

Mr. FRAZIER. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. FRAZIER. According to figures which come from one of the departments of the Government, a little over 51 percent of the imports last year, 1934, were agricultural products—51 percent of all the imports brought into the United States.

Mr. LONG. Fifty-one percent of the imports?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; 51 percent.

Mr. LONG. In other words, we are trying to cure the condition of an overplus in our American market, but what have we done, according to the figures the Senator from North Dakota has given me? I know he has made a study of the matter. Of all the imports into the United States, 51 percent are raw agricultural products. I was told in my home city of New Orleans that one of our distinguished statesmen clapped his hands and jumped up in jubilee when he saw them bringing in again the meats of Argentina and the wheat of South America. In our own State of Louisiana we were killing cows and paying the people to get rid of the surplus.

What I was trying to bring out when I yielded to numerous interruptions was this thought. Here is our trouble. I do not need to go anywhere except to invite attention to all that has been said here and what has been pointed out here. We need to protect the American market for our domestic products. I mean by that, we need to protect our domestic market. That has to be done first. The country must control its own market.

With 11,000,000 men out of work, as it is said we have, though I maintain it is 21,000,000 to 22,000,000 men out of work, and I shall prove it by figures in just a moment—with all these men out of work, increased idleness is being enforced in this country due to the fact that foreign competition is allowed recourse to the American market so we not only cannot reemploy the American men who are now walking the streets, but they cannot themselves expect to be supported very long by their brothers who are employed, because what markets we have left are being taken away from the laboring men of America. The laboring men of America cannot get work to make American products to sell to the American people themselves, due to the simple fact that Japan can take a bale of American cotton, ship it to Japan, manufacture it, and send back the manufactured articles to the United States and undersell anybody in the United States on such manufactured products.

That is the kind of situation we are facing. We keep talking, as my friend from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] was talking yesterday, about world trade, notwithstanding the fact that if he would look around in Baltimore he would find that foreign countries are selling in the department stores of Baltimore the very products which would put his own people to work in Baltimore if it were not for the fact that foreign competition undersells the American producer.

That is one point. We need to protect the American businessman in the American market, so that he can sell in his own market what he produces.

We cannot put an elephant through a keyhole. That cannot be done. It is not possible to make 200 fit into 100, nor is it possible to make 200 fit into 5. We have a debt structure in this country of $252,000,000,000. We have $6,000,000,000 in currency. That debt structure has practically destroyed interchange in commerce among the Americans themselves. We have been crying not only for the foreign market—I will come to that in a moment, because I agree with what the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] said—but in order that we can have an interchange in America there has to be something done in two ways:

We have got to provide a means to lower the debt structure. An indebtedness of $252,000,000,000 means $2,000 for every man, woman, and child. It is an impossibility for the American people ever to pay $252,000,000,000 of debt with $6,000,000,000 of currency with which to pay it. That is an impossibility.

India, China, Japan—60 percent of the people of the world—use silver as the yardstick for money. If we want to get into those foreign markets, we have got to take up America's own metal, silver, which primarily was an American product, and get this country to a point where it does not fiddle around with silver, but where once and for all silver shall be a medium of exchange as it was prior to 1873, when it was unconstitutionally taken out of the category of passable money.

These are the three primary objects. Then comes a fourth and overpowering object, which is as follows: The American people still have nearly all the wealth they ever had. I read Mr. B. C. Forbes' article on America's Wealth Which Has Disappeared. As a matter of fact, our wealth has not disappeared. The land has not disappeared. The buildings have not disappeared. The railroads have not disappeared. The wealth of the earth, the wealth in the earth, the wealth on the earth, the wealth in the water, is all still here. The raw materials are still here and all other things are here in abundance. America today, substantially speaking, from the standpoint of its intrinsic worth, is worth just as much as it ever was.

However, Japan does not know there is a depression in America. Japan thinks there must be mighty good times in America, because the markets of America seem to be open to the products of Japan. Japan thinks this country must have prosperity, judging by the amount of materials she has been selling to the United States, whereas our wealth is actually here but it cannot be assimilated and used for American commerce. Why?

I started out by saying that we needed today for domestic consumption 25,000,000 bales of cotton. Where do we need it? We need it to put bed sheets on the beds in this country where they have not any sheets and have not had them for years. We need it to put some new mattresses on the beds that have not had them. We need it to put some rugs on the floors of the people who have stopped buying rugs because they cannot buy them. We need it for window curtains. We need it to make five or six dresses available for every female child and two or three suits of clothes for every male child in this country. There is a demand in the United States today that would consume 25,000,000 bales of American cotton if Americans could buy cotton; but we may go on with all the other things I have mentioned, and if Congress neglects one thing, nothing is going to do any good. The income is not in the hands of the consumers. The man who needs to buy shoes has not the income with which to buy shoes. The man who needs to buy clothes has not the money with which to buy clothes. The man who needs to rent a house has not the money to pay rent. There is the income, there is the property, there has been the prosperity, but until Congress decides that it is going to do something to provide that the income and wealth of America shall be placed back in the hands of the people who could consume American products we shall not be able to buy our own domestic products, and we shall gradually be reaching out, trying to buy some product made by slave labor because our own domestic earnings are insufficient to buy the products produced by our own labor.

So Congress has been fiddling, and the President has had us fiddling. The President sends us down a new instrument, and we put a bow on it, and we put a few more strings on it. We send him one instrument to play to lose the foreign markets, and we send him another instrument to play to lose the domestic markets, and they are both rigged up that way, and America has not 11,000,000 unemployed; America today has twenty-one and a half million unemployed breadwinners. I will prove that statement.

In 1929 the income of the American farmer was just twice what it is now. The American farmer is, at the very least, 50 percent unemployed; and if we consider that 22,000,000 American farmers, having only one-half their former income, are thereby, on the basis of income, 50 percent unemployed, we have 11,000,000 industrially unemployed, and we have 11,000,000 agriculturally unemployed; and at the very least from twenty-one to twenty-two million American breadwinners are in the unemployed ranks today, as a result of what? As a result of the fact that those very people cannot find the means of buying the very things they need, which they are desirous of producing, but which this abominable conglomeration and derangement of the alphabet is supposed to correct, and which it is not correcting, and never will correct.

The next bill we shall pass here will afford no relief. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] was one of my compatriots when we were trying to legalize the use of silver as money. We fought here for a good while to try to have that done; and one day, while I had gone to New York, and my friend from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] were left here, I read in the New York newspapers that they had compromised the matter, and that the President had called my friend the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], who was really our leader on the inflation question, to the White House in order to make peace with him and to provide what we needed in the way of currency. I was so happy when I read of the fact that the Senator from Oklahoma had been sent for by the President—I was up there in New York by myself—I was so happy when I read that good news that I felt that something good was coming from this business.

Lo and behold, we came in here, and I guess the Senator from Oklahoma got all he could. I am a better horse trader than he is. I think I would have hung out a little longer and got a little more; but he came in here and got a pretty good-sounding bill. He got a bill that authorized the President to remonetize silver if the President wanted to do it; he got a bill that authorized the President to expand the currency if the President wanted to do it; and he got a bill that authorized the President to cure the whole thing, top, side, and bottom, provided the President wanted to do it; but we started out with $6,000,000,000 of merchantable money, and today we still have about $6,000,000,000 of merchantable money; have we not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is less than five and one-half billion.

Mr. LONG. It is less than five and one-half billion? Then we lost something instead of gaining anything.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. We have lost three-quarters of a billion dollars of money since we started to make money more plentiful.

Mr. LONG. The next time we have a trade, I am going to get the Senator from Oklahoma to let me go down there with him. [Laughter.] We may not gain anything, but the only thing we shall lose will be ourselves. In other words, we came along here with the President yielding to us. He was supposed to have put his chin in his hand and said, "Well, boys, you have the votes in the Senate. I am going to yield", and we started out with $6,000,000,000 in money, and today we have three-quarters of a billion dollars less money than we had before we made that compromise.

So the thing for us men to do is to stay out of the White House. Do not fool with a man who is smarter than you are, Mr. President! Never do that. I feel like telling again where I got that instruction, but I wore it out here on the floor of the Senate. I was taught by my grandfather that a man should never let another man stay around who is smarter than he is. If you hire a man to work for you who is smarter than you are, he will have you working for him if you keep him around very long. So the thing for Congress to do is to decide that it will write out that A is A, and B is B; not that A is A provided the President wants it to be A, not that B is B provided the President says it is all right, but the Congress ought to write out that A is A and B is B. Otherwise, what good are we going to do? We started with $6,000,000,000 of money, hoping we would get about twelve billion—and that is about what we ought to have in this country right now; at the very least, we ought to have twelve billion—and, instead of that, we have three-quarters of a billion less than we had when we started out.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. LONG. I do.

Mr. MOORE. I was wondering if the Senator from Louisiana had introduced a bill, or a series of bills, to correct all the evils of which he speaks.

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. I should like to vote for them if I knew what they were. I do not like to sit here and listen to this list of evils and do nothing about it.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator from New Jersey will vote for it, that is another vote we will get. I have not quite enough votes yet. That is a good diversion, however. I did not expect to get the Senator's vote so early. If my logic has changed him, I intend to keep talking, so that I will change another one.

Mr. MOORE. If it can be called logic. I am a new Senator, and I should like to get somewhere without wasting time.

Mr. LONG. The Senator ought not to be so optimistic. I have been here 3 years, and we have been going back the other way every day I have been here; so the Senator is overoptimistic.

Mr. MOORE. Perhaps that is the reason.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, instead of having started out with $6,000,000,000 and having it sweated down to less than five and a half billion dollars, we have a right to expect to go the other way; and we shall have to go the other way if we are going to do any good in the United States.

There is another bill here which I should like to call to the attention of my friend from New Jersey. We have a soldiers' bonus bill here. That would not only pay the soldiers' bonus but it would give the country $2,000,000,000 more money that is sadly needed by other enterprises. That is one of the bills that ought to be passed; but what are we doing? We are passing a $5,000,000,000 joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to spend $5,000,000,000 more between now and the next election, or during the election, whichever time you call election time. We are giving him $5,000,000,000. Where is that $5,000,000,000 coming from? The Treasury Department is going to issue bonds. That $5,000,000,000, if the bond interest should amount to 4 percent, will mean that much more annual interest to be paid out of a constantly decreasing stock of money. We shall have to turn the little five and a half billion dollars over in order that we may pay the interest on that amount of money that we are going to spend, represented by bonds that we are going to owe. So where are we going?

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is complaining. He is a Democrat. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is complaining. He is a Democrat. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is complaining. He is a Democrat. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is complaining. He is a Democrat. I am complaining. I am a Democrat. Are we going to stand here and complain and complain and complain and confess that what we did last year was wrong, and what we did year before last was wrong, and what we are doing now is wrong, and keep going deeper into the chasm of distress and bankruptcy and national insolvency? Are we going to keep yelling, "We are going to ruin! We are going to ruin! We are going to ruin!" and marching just as fast into the jaws of hell as our feet can carry us? Is that what this logic means?

Why have the speech of the Senator from Maryland that it is all wrong and have his vote the other way? Why have the speech of the Senator from Alabama that the thing is all wrong, and have his vote the other way? Why have them tell us that when we authorized the President to raise the tariff wall and let the foreign goods come in and when we authorized him to restore the foreign markets he closed them up, and then vote to give the President power to do something else? Why does not the Congress of the United States take unto itself responsibility?

There was a time, when we hired a captain and sent him out with a ship and he tried for about 3 or 4 years to make a voyage and could not make it, that we would go back and decide to hire another captain and see whether or not he could make the trip; but this is not even that good a chance. This is a case in which the Congress of the United States was given by the American people a duty to perform, and the Congress of the United States held up its hands and said, "Oh, no; the President does not think we are competent to perform this duty assigned to us by the Constitution of the United States. He does not think we know how to handle this thing. He told us to give him the authority to handle it in order that it might be handled more expeditiously, and we have given that authority", with what results? Not the results I am complaining about today, but the results that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is complaining about, the results that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is complaining about, the results that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is complaining about, the results that our party is complaining about. Those are the kind of results of which I think the Congress should take stock and should reckon with itself on whether or not we ought to begin to see reason or make a serious effort at legislation.

We have not adopted any legislation since we Democrats came into power. I want to repeat that statement, for fear somebody may contradict it. We have not passed any legislation since the Democrats came into power.

It may be said that we passed the N. R. A. Act. That is not legislation. That was a bill authorizing the President to do something if he wanted to do it. He could have taken the standing Army and done the same thing. He did not need to have an act of Congress, in my opinion. One method would have been just as constitutional as the other, and, according to my belief, the Attorney General thinks that it would have been just as constitutional for the President to have taken the standing Army and do as he has done as it would have been for us to pass the N. R. A. bill, because the minute the N. R. A. law got to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it was going to be held unconstitutional, the Attorney General withdrew the case from the court in order to keep the court from passing on the law.

Mr. President, that is the kind of expedient we are condemning. I am afraid that my leader, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who came into the Chamber after I had started speaking, may think that I am criticizing the administration. I am simply summing up the criticisms which have been made against the administration, and giving my explanation of them.

To sum up, we are all complaining. The whole Democratic Party is in revolt against its own administration. We are all complaining that the N. R. A., and the A. A. A., and all other derangements of the alphabet have failed to deliver the goods. We are all complaining that our domestic markets are lost. We are all complaining that our foreign markets are lost. We are all complaining that we have not the means of reducing the debt. There is a constantly rising tide of complaint. And what is the recourse? The recourse is for the United States Congress, in session duly convened and assembled, to take unto itself the duty devolved upon it as a result of the Constitution of the United States, and enact legislation pure and simple, specific and to the point, arbitrary, if you may call it such, providing—

No. 1. That the wealth and income of the United States shall be spread among the people.

No. 2. That there shall be enough money to discharge the debt structure.

No. 3. For the protection of our domestic markets.

No. 4. For getting what we can from the foreigners after these others things are done.

LOUISIANA'S CONTRIBUTION THAT HAS SPREAD INTO A PLAN FOR AMERICAN RESTORATION

Mr. LONG resumed and concluded his speech begun by him on yesterday, which entire is as follows:

Wednesday, April 3, 1935

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I desire to take about 5 minutes to present to the Senate something which has required 5 years of very serious study, and which, before we close the doors, I hope to have called to the attention of the Senate.

This morning, in the city of Washington, it is raining mud. The clouds are not sprinkling rain water alone; the rain water is mixed with mud resulting from the dust gathered hundreds of miles west of the Mississippi River. That condition, I understand, extends as far as the Atlantic coast.

In the years 1927 and 1928, when Congress had before it the question of flood control, any number of plans were tentatively proposed; and finally Congress adopted what was known as the "Jadwin plan." I was called to Washington as the Governor-elect of my State because of differences existing in the Louisiana delegation; and we agreed, with certain reservations, to undertake to secure the passage of the Jadwin plan, hoping later to secure its amendment.

In 1928, in the State of Louisiana, we undertook, through the State government, after I had become the Governor, to propose to the United States a plan for flood control. In other words, we proposed a comprehensive plan to care for the water in order that the lands of Louisiana should not be used as a floodway for the waters of the North, particularly in the springtime when the ice and snow begin to melt. So we got up a rather comprehensive plan which we called the "Louisiana plan." Later it was named, I think, the "Jacobs plan", because Mr. Jacobs was our chief engineer.

As a result of the presentation of that map, the Congress of the United States and the War Department later were led to make a study of the problems of the waterways, also the matter of irrigation and of navigation and of the generation of power; and this year a comprehensive study of the whole question was completed. It was presented in a volume which I have in my hand, which is entitled "Projects for the Development of Rivers and Harbors, Summarized From Reports by the Corps of Engineers to the Congress."

There is presented here, in the first part of this pamphlet, a map charting the country, with proposals for the control of all the waters, all the rivers, and improvements for the purpose of handling rainfall and the ice and snow which melt in the spring; so that in carrying out the Louisiana plan of 1928 and 1929 the engineers have proposed to the Congress of the United States arresting, impounding, and scattering the flood waters of the North throughout such States as Montana, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, and various States east of the Mississippi River.

That plan is so comprehensive that if it had been adopted a few years ago we should not now be concerned either with our problems of unemployment or with the dust storms or with the growing distractions now visited upon the West, and various pests which the people of that section are constantly fighting.

In order that we may understand a little about the necessity for this program, since many persons have allowed themselves to believe that it is only a flood-control problem, I wish to undertake to give to Members of the Senate just a few figures relating to phases of this subject which all of them may have taken the time to explore.

The great trouble in the West today is that there is no readily available water level. The water level in the Dakotas used to be almost up to the surface. In other words, in that western part of the country a number of years ago, when you dug a well you would strike enough water a few feet from the surface of the earth to furnish a family with whatever well water might be needed.

The water level has fallen in North Dakota in a period of from 10 to 25 years from 6 feet below the surface to 34 feet below the surface. In other words, years ago you could have dug down 6 feet and gotten well water; today you would have to dig farther than 34 feet to strike water.

In South Dakota the water level was a mere matter of inches below the surface. In from 2 to 25 years the water level of South Dakota has gone down from inches to 70 feet, and in South Dakota today one would have to dig a well 70 feet deep, or deeper, in order to strike water that could be used for supplying family needs.

Even in the State of Minnesota the water level has gone down from 5 to 24 feet; in Nebraska, from 4 to 26 feet; in Iowa, from 7 to 21 feet; in Kansas, from 2 to 13 feet; and in Missouri, from nothing down to 26 feet in some cases.

Mr. President, as a result of this falling of the water level, draining the lands of the North, the country around Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas has been constantly inundated by the floods caused by the melting of the snow and ice in the North in the springtime. That has been a growing scourge, by reason of the fact that as the Northern States began to cut their timber and to drain their lands, and to provide for a quicker handling of the rainfall, that much quicker did the waters gather in the rivers of Louisiana, Mississippi, south Missouri, and Arkansas, quickly causing scourges, rather than flowing in an orderly way over a space of months.

As the people of the North began to cut their timber and to drain their lands, and to promote various and sundry projects, they took from their own territory, from a water level that was almost at the surface in some States, or within a few feet of the surface, the water sadly needed there if they were to protect themselves from having it fall to a level as deep as 75 feet below the surface of the earth.

We have found that the Northern States, and particularly the Western States, and even the city of Washington, are in need of their own water.

The State of Louisiana did this country the service of calling this matter to the attention of the Congress and to the attention of the War Department, so that now there has been perfected a complete chart of waterways, flood control, irrigation, navigation, and I might say an almost physical panacea for the faults which now afflict the whole United States along the line of dust storms, drought, and flood scourges.

I want to get this map, which has been presented to the Congress, printed in the RECORD, which will require an order of the Joint Committee on Printing, and before completing the few remarks I may wish to make in the next few moments, I want to ask the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to give me his attention. This map which has been prepared in the course of long studies at a cost of $60,000,000, I wish to have printed as a part of my remarks, and with my explanation in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I offer the map, with the understanding that in order that it may be printed I will have to have an order from the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that if he will submit the map to the committee we will consider it. I do not know whether it is practicable or feasible to print it in the RECORD.

Mr. LONG. Yes; it is practicable. As a printer, I can tell the Senator that it will be all right.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wonder whether the Senator would incorporate a request for the printing of a record dealing with snow surveys in the North and West. It is most comprehensive, and is illustrative of the point the Senator is bringing out, and I think the information would be most advantageous. However, I believe both these things should be printed as a public document rather than as a part of the RECORD, because I find, from such little experience as I have had with such matters, that the printing of a public document is much less expensive than inserting a matter of this kind in the RECORD.

Mr. LONG. I will say to my friend the Senator from Nevada that I will be glad to have the report to which he has referred printed as a public document or in the RECORD. But the map which I hold in my hand can be drawn down to about one-half the size of a page of the RECORD, and I believe this study would be more beneficial than any information that could be read by the Members of the Congress, and it is very necessary at this time.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, whether my proposal is in keeping with that of the Senator from Louisiana or not, I think both requests should go to the Joint Committee on Printing and that they should follow the matter up.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask that this map and the matter referred to by the Senator from Nevada be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing to determine whether they can be printed in the RECORD or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senate for just a moment further, there has been a clamor on the part of the people of the West for irrigation from a time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. That whole problem may be solved from this study made by the War Department. There is a way made for a complete solution for every drought trouble and for every irrigation problem, as well as a plan for a complete power system throughout the length and breadth of the United States, from coast to coast, and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf. There is a complete plan for year-round navigation.

The study comprehends such things, for instance, as taking the Red River, which is a scourge to Louisiana, and is not a scourge to Texas, and diverting the Red River so that its waters would flow down through the State of Texas, where it is needed, and so that it would find its way through the Sabine River, rather than constitute a flood scourge to the State of Louisiana.

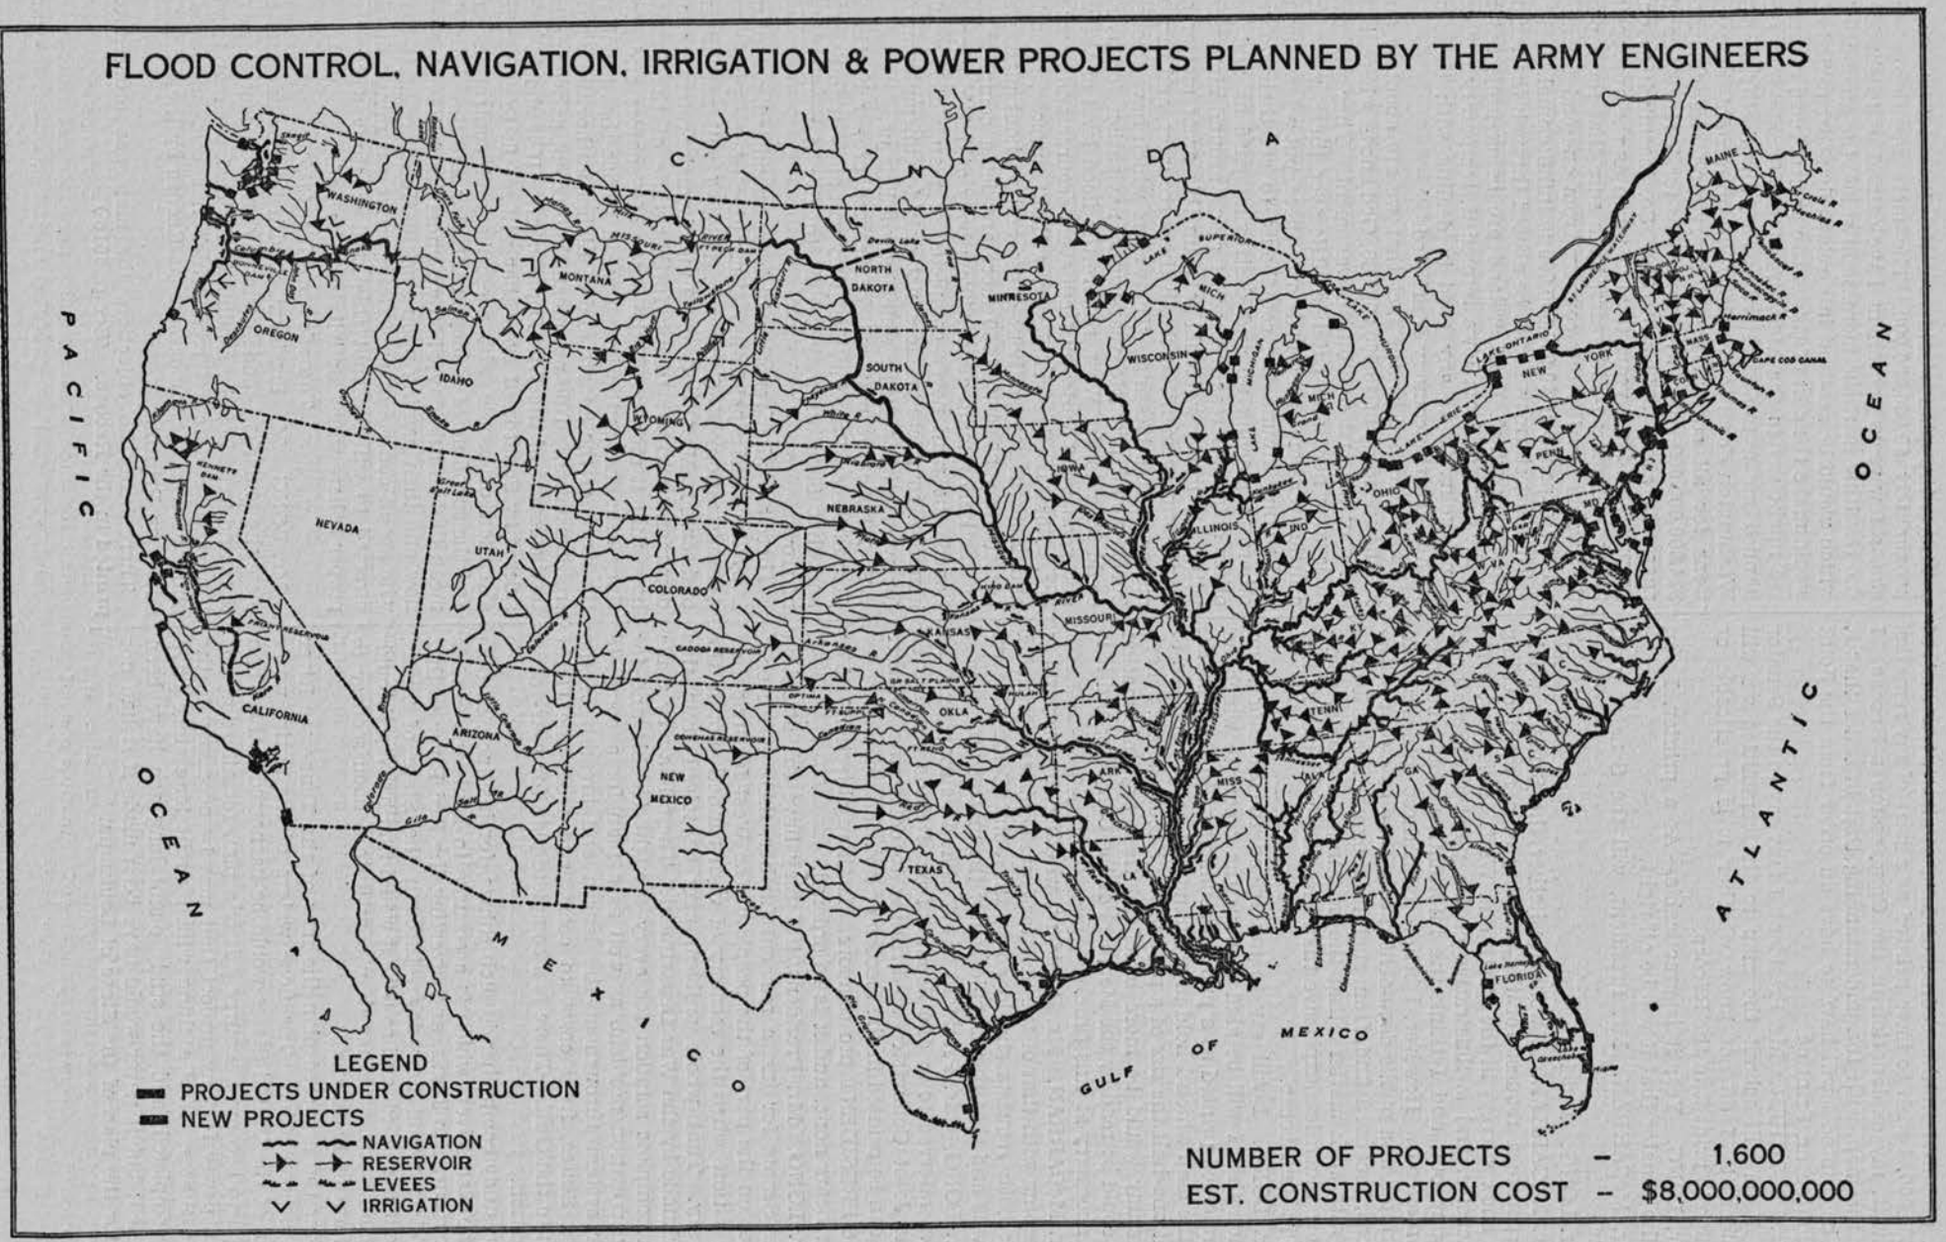
Under the proposed plan the flow of the Tennessee River could be controlled. The flood waters of the entire water system of the United States would be harnessed rather than allowed to become a scourge. It is a plan for affording the needed power for any project that may be necessary in the United States. It is a thing which ought long since have been completed, and the study ought long ago have been perfected; but it never would have been made if it had not been for the plan of the State of Louisiana.

The entire plan would cost the United States only approximately $9,000,000,000. The mere mention of such a sum a few years ago might have caused us to shudder, but the resulting intrinsic increase in value, the amount of taxes which would be received in a relatively short period of time, would make the cost of this entire project seem rather small.

I might say to the Members of the Senate that someone handed me a table yesterday showing that from George Washington down to Woodrow Wilson our entire appropriations for all our wars and everything else amounted to $24,000,000,000. Our appropriations for 1934, 1935, and 1936 aggregate about $24,000,000,000. So, inasmuch as our appropriations for 3 years total as much as the appropriations for some-hundred-odd years, I am sure that for a program that would develop this country from one end to the other a little expense of $9,000,000,000 is infinitesimal.

The dust storms will not be abated through the temporary expedients which I understand are being projected again. As the Senator from Iowa termed it, temporary pacification is not going to do any good in dealing with the scourges with which the country is afflicted.

I am saddened by the fact that we are about to authorize the spending of $5,000,000,000, God knows where, in about the way the last five billion was spent. They will patch a little over here and patch a little over there, mess around a little over here and a little over there, put a few poor devils to hanging around the courthouse to get their doles, and others to plowing up and destroying gardens and getting other doles, whereas instead of going around aimlessly and without purpose we could take up this great matter of internal improvement, settle all these scourges, and turn every menace into a blessing. The waters which have flooded the South would promote year-round navigation for us all; it could irrigate the West, restore the flood level of the water, and good could be drawn from every scourge and every menace. None the less, aimlessly, without purpose, relentlessly, and, I might say, without cause and without plan, we will fritter away $5,000,000,000 more and let a complete matter of this kind remain almost like a body of death, never mentioned, the plan never completed, a plan which would be almost a complete panacea not only for unemployment but for every other scourge which now afflicts us.



So I hope the map will be deemed proper by the Joint Committee on Printing, that they will allow it to be printed, and that Senators may see fit to give it some study tomorrow.

There are other reports which are submitted, one of which is by the Mississippi Valley Committee of the Public Works Administration, of October 1, 1934. I will not undertake to discuss it, Mr. President. I merely make reference to that document, without taking further time of the Senate. I hope that it may reach the study of Senators and perhaps those of higher authority. I mean I hope that it will reach the study of the Senate and of higher authorities who control legislation. I do not mean that except as a compliment to the report of the War Department. If it should be considered by Senators, I hope they will see fit to call it to the attention of people who prescribe and control legislation and the spending of money in this day and time. By that I mean that in this day when we understand that we here are now and then passing upon some perfunctory matter, those who are in control of prescribing what our minds should be directed to will see that this kind of study will reach its proper sphere where activity may be had.

Thursday, April 4, 1935

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to conclude and complete the remarks I made yesterday on flood control, navigation, and irrigation, by sending to the desk the map to which I have heretofore referred, which has been approved for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by the Joint Committee on Printing.

There being no objection, the map was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. (See p. 5016.)

REPLY TO CRITICISMS OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. Does the Senator desire to have me yield to him?

Mr. COPELAND. I want to go on with the bill at the earliest moment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I have no desire to enter into the discussion of the polemics of the tariff or oriental economics. I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate a printed document which I dare say has found its way in the mails to some of my colleagues, and no doubt others who have not seen the document may find it on their desks.

I produce a circular headed "New York Chamber of Commerce, 65 Liberty Street, New York, N. Y." This circular assumes to criticize and comment on the legislation of this and the other body and to set forth what it assumes to be some future course of consequence. But this organization, which by its name would be assumed to be wholly an American organization of gentlemen, a commercial agency of the country, with deference to their Nation and respect to the officials of their land, concludes by saying:

> The framers of the Constitution planned to have the Members of Congress decide how the money for which they taxed the people should be spent. This was done up to March 4, 1933. Since March 4, 1933, the Members of Congress have shirked this duty and have turned billions of dollars of the people's money over to the political accident in the White House for him to juggle as suits his whims.

This is a declaration from one of the great commercial bodies of the United States, which sends this slanderous assertion, lacking both decency and manner, depositing it in the mails, and addressing it to United States Senators, referring to the President of the United States in the exact words I have just read, referring to "the political accident in the White House for him to juggle as suits his whims."

Mr. President, at a time like this, when there is a disposition to evince disrespect for all law and a tendency on the part of certain organizations to disrupt the whole Government, at a time when there is no regard being paid to the fundamental institutions of the land, to have a great commercial body of this nature prepare a document solemnly and with deliberation casting such reflection upon the President of the United States, and upon the office of President of the United States, and send it across the land, to designate that office with the expressions of contempt they boldly offer, is a matter worthy of our most serious consideration. It should call for reflection by us as to the manner of these institutions, which, starting out to condemn what they feel is legislation adverse to their private interests, proceed to hold up to contempt and contumely the office of the President with the slanderous observation that the Congress has turned over money to him to do as his whims might dictate and his desire suggest.

I do not exactly know what the expression was intended to convey. It will leave the impression upon the public mind, of course, that the Congress shirked its duty, voted large sums of money derived from taxation against the people, and turned the funds thus appropriated into the hands of one whom they designate "the accident in the White House."

Mr. President, I do not presume it matters much to the President himself that there should be those with so little decency and such flagrant ill manners as to have written a declaration of this nature, and so lacking in common patriotism as to have mailed it through the mails to their countrymen. But one would assume that such a commercial band of the order these men are assumed to be would not have done such a thing, which tends all the more to bring into contempt the high office of the President to the minds of those who, as we see from the public press, are daily accumulating in number, and here and there from high places of authority call their conventions or their assemblies, hurling their anathemas at the Government, their threats at those in power, and their assertions of complete disturbance and destruction of the whole fundamental institutions of the United States.

I do not exactly know what this body of gentlemen means by saying that up to the 4th of March 1933 there had been nothing done by a President, that everything had been done by Congress, that previous to that date Congress had proceeded to act in each detail and to describe what should be done in directing the course of the Government.

It is well that the country knows the truth. There has been no course taken by this Congress regarding any subject whatever that is not along the line of a precedent which had been established and executed in the exact manner adopted by the present Congress.

What do these gentlemen, a commercial agency, mean by this slanderous falsehood? It is well known as a matter of history by my colleagues sitting about me that those of all political parties voted $500,000,000 to the discretion of a distinguished President, the then President of the United States, for use by what was known as the "Farm Board Administration." It is well known that through his discretion, trusting to an honor that was not at all impeached by even the slightest suggestion, that money was distributed and applied in such manner as seemed to the best welfare of the country.

In the same manner we proceeded to vest in this distinguished officer the right of changing tariffs on importations according to what he felt to be to the welfare of his country, the duty being sometimes executed through a board, and sometimes by his own individual suggestion. Thus we trusted the former honorable President, who acted according to his honest convictions, and thus, sirs, we have done the same thing in this body in exactly the same way.

When the former President, in his desire to rescue the country from what was a peril in respect to its financial institutions, summoned the banks to let him have 10 percent of the money they could control to place at his service that he might in some manner rescue the banks that were cracking and falling like shattered debris, can anyone complain of his being granted, and using, his discretion? We trusted to his honor. We were conscious that our trust would not be abused. Yet the honorable commercial body which makes this accusation in its official capacity against the present President would lead the modern generation to believe that something had transpired which had no precedent, was in violation of the Constitution, was not only in violation of the Constitution but in desecration of the Constitution of our land, and they are willing to hold up before the whole world the estimate of this great commercial body called the New York Chamber of Commerce when they designate the President of the United States as an "accident in the White House", and call this honorable body the Senate, one which has shirked its duty and violated the Constitution in vesting discretion such as has been referred to in the present incumbent, and such as has been adverted to in the President's honorable predecessor.

Mr. President, I know we cannot restrain the hand that mysteriously, covertly, and anonymously assaults. I know we cannot still the tongue that here and there will asperse the most honest, the most efficient. We recall in the lines of the bard, sir:

> No might nor greatness in mortality
> Can censure 'scape; back-wounding calumny
> The whitest virtue strikes. What king so strong
> Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue?

But, sir, while we may not be particularly concerned as to the effect on the single individual here or there, we cannot be indifferent to what these gentlemen, in their very high position, are doing to the vast mind of America by engendering lack of respect with regard to our institutions and by encouraging the desires in the hearts of those who are already assaulting our institutions by the thought that persons in high places are ready to have those institutions overthrown, and by rack and ruin lay low the mansions which the fathers have built.

It is because of the effect and influence of such a thing as this document that I ask if these gentlemen, such as they are, shall continue these assaults upon the institutions of the land, what shall we expect from the ignorant, the unfortunate, the miserable, the untutored, and those who are being misled by bad advisers and seriously corrupt counsel in America?

I did not rise to interfere with my friend, the eminent Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], to delay the progress of the passage of the bill which has to do with the health of the citizens of our country; but this communication being on my desk today, and no doubt in the hands of other Senators, I felt it should not escape the attention of those who are seeking to build up respect for merit, some regard for our institutions, some obedience to the law, and who wish to give some aid, Mr. President, in upholding the honor of the Republic.

I regret that such publication should have emanated from such a source; but I delight to feel that in this honorable body, whatever may be the differences of opinion as respects that which we call "politics", not one man could be found who would endorse the declarations or approve the policy suggested in this document. It is to the greatest degree ill-mannered and indecent, and must remain so in history.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics; and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the pending amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. May we have the amendment read? We have been basking in the agreeable sunshine radiated by the Senator from Illinois; but now we should return to the food and drugs bill, and I believe the amendment should be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the understanding of the Chair that three amendments are to be voted on as one. The clerk will state the amendments of the Senator from North Carolina.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 45, line 7, after the word "found", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, permit me to interrupt the reading of the amendment. I suggest that while we are waiting for the Senator from North Carolina to return to the Chamber I might bring up one or two amendments.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from New York permit me to read two telegrams?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I have received two telegrams, one from the McKesson Ogden Wholesale Co., of my State, reading as follows:

> We urge your opposition to so-called "Copeland food and drug bill", particularly portions requiring formula disclosures, as destroying in many cases property rights built up over many years; also, removal of the advertising control from Federal Trade Commission, where effective procedure has been built up through long experience. Would appreciate very much your support of so-called "Mead bill", as we feel it would be equally effective in protecting consumer. Your urgent consideration will be appreciated.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think the Senator will find when he reads the bill, as will also the sender of the telegram, that there is not anything in the bill which requires formula disclosure. It does require that the active ingredients shall be stated by name on the package; but the formula itself, and the secret measures involved in making it, are not required to be revealed to the public or reviewed by the Department.

Mr. KING. I may say to the Senator from New York that I am not sure that the suggestion he has made fully answers the suggestion which has been urged by the sender of the telegram to which I have referred. If all the ingredients of the product are to be stated, or the proportions in which they appear are found, might not that indicate the formula and be subject to the criticism urged by the sender of the telegram?

Mr. COPELAND. The concern which sends the telegram is a drug concern. I call the attention of the Senator, in order that he may reply to his correspondent, to the fact that where the ingredients are those which are recognized by the Pharmacopoeia, which we mentioned yesterday, there need be no mention of content as to the requirement of the label. If it is something not so recognized, the manufacturer must place upon the package the names of the active ingredients—not the quantities; just the names of the ingredients. The value of the formula to the manufacturer lies in the proportions, his use of the different ingredients, in order that there may be a mixture of his own and one which he thinks will render the product of peculiar value and popular with the user. So I may say categorically that the bill does not require formula disclosure in the sense feared by the sender of the telegram.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether there is any validity in the statement made by another company, which has wired me as follows:

> Will you please give your support to Senator COPELAND'S amendments to S. 5, and in particular support his amendment to exempt established proprietary food products made from private formula from disclosing list of ingredients on labels.

Mr. COPELAND. I am sorry to say that that provision is in the bill.

Mr. KING. That is to say, the bill contains the provision which this writer desires?

Mr. COPELAND. It does. I said yesterday that I yielded very reluctantly to that amendment as regards foods because such articles are simply mechanical mixtures. I would not yield when the able Senator from Michigan yesterday wanted the same provision applied to drugs.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator also make a statement for the RECORD as to the effect of this proposed legislation upon biological products, and the possible interference with the existing Serum Act of 1902, and the existing administration of biological supervision?

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will turn to the last page of the bill, page 56, and read lines 6, 7, and 8, he will see that it is provided that the provisions of this bill shall not be held to modify or repeal any of the existing laws of the United States, except as provided by paragraph (a) of section 717. That particular law mentioned by the Senator is not dealt with at all by this bill, and there is no thought of transferring that very well-done function of the Public Health Service to the Food and Drug Administration.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And no new authority over biological products is contained within the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Not the slightest.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Are we now under the order of amending the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will wait just one moment for a couple of short committee amendments, I shall be glad to yield to him.

Referring to page 2 of the bill, line 23, the Secretary of War has written asking that the Canal Zone be excluded from the operation of the proposed law. The Canal Zone is under such Federal administration anyhow that I can see no reason why the request should not be granted. Therefore, I move that on line 23, page 2, the period be deleted, and the words added, "and excluding the Canal Zone."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. On page 16, line 25, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted which struck out the words "or any other narcotic or hypnotic substance which has been designated as habit-forming by regulations as provided in sections 701 and 703" and which inserted in lieu thereof the words "unless a derivative is clearly not habit-forming." In other words, I desire to strike out the words in italics and let the other words stand.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the effect of the proposed change?

Mr. COPELAND. So that a great laboratory like the Parke, Davis & Co., working, as they are, to find substances which have hypnotic effects and yet are not habit-forming, if they should find one, would not be embarrassed by this language, which prohibits the use of any such thing. This is not now possible, because of rulings of the Food and Drug Bureau, and they are not permitted to make use of them as they desire. If the language is restored and the words in italics deleted as I have suggested, then when Parke, Davis & Co. come to Washington and present evidence that they have discovered a hypnotic which is not habit-forming it will be possible for that product to be put on the market without labeling it "Warning—habit forming."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question now is on the amendment of the committee, as stated by the Senator from New York, on page 16, line 25.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. At the bottom of page 30, line 24, after the word "paragraphs", I move to insert "(d)."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not quite clear as to the significance of the amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. It is to permit the laboratory to appeal to the committee which has to do with the making of new regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator in charge of the bill permit me to call his attention to page 2, line 16, and to make inquiry if it would be satisfactory to him to add the words:

Provided, however, That the term "drug" is not intended to apply to a medicine prepared and dispensed by a physician in the course of his professional practice.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will turn to page 17, line 4, he will find this language has been inserted in the bill:

Except when dispensed on the written order of a member of the medical profession.

Also, on page 2, line 5, he will find the words:

The term "drug" for the purposes of this act, and not for the regulation of the legalized practice of the healing arts—

And so forth.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator feels it is already comprehended and included within the measure?

Mr. COPELAND. I believe so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New York is correct, but section 402 reads:

A drug shall be deemed to be misbranded—

Then going to subdivision (d) to which the Senator from New York just called attention, it is provided:

(d) Unless the derivative is clearly not habit-forming, and, except when dispensed on the written order of a member of the medical profession.

It seems to me this deals merely with the question of misbranding, but would not comprehend the point made by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. COPELAND. The matter the Senator from Illinois has in mind is whether or not this measure interferes at all with a written prescription of a doctor.

Mr. LEWIS. The word "drug" is not intended to apply to preparations dispensed by a doctor himself in the course of his professional practice.

Mr. COPELAND. There is nothing in the bill which would interfere at all with the ordinary legal practice of the profession.

Mr. LEWIS. The able Senator does not think it is necessary to add the language I suggested?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think we need to add a thing to cover what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, may I offer an amendment now?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from New York to offer an amendment to add "(d)", in line 24, page 30, and that the amendment is still pending.

Mr. COPELAND. That was just to insert at the bottom of the page, after the word "paragraphs", the letter "(d)."

Mr. CLARK. Yes; I understood that; but I desire to address myself very briefly to that amendment of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I did not understand the Chair to state it was agreed to. I desire to submit some observations in connection with that amendment of the Senator from New York. Therefore, I move to reconsider the vote by which it was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from New York calls attention to a paragraph which very conclusively illustrates the vices of the bill, the obscurity and lack of clearness and direction of the bill. Let me read the section, and challenge any Senator, with the possible exception of the stepfather of the bill, as he described himself yesterday, the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], to tell what it means. I read:

(d) If any regulation promulgated by the Secretary under section 301, paragraphs (a) and (c); section 302, paragraph (j); section 304, paragraphs (a) and (b); section 401, paragraph (a); section 402, paragraphs (d), (h), (j), and (k); section 403; section 501, paragraph (e); and section 503, is declared invalid in any court proceeding, the Secretary may promulgate in substitution therefor a temporary regulation consistent with such decision. Such temporary regulation may be promulgated without notice or hearing and shall become effective at and for such time as the Secretary designates, but in no event longer than 180 days from the effective date thereof. On or before the promulgation of such temporary regulation the Secretary shall institute proceedings, as provided in paragraph (c) of this section, for the establishment of a new regulation.

Mr. President, that simply means that whenever any part of the act specified—and I dare say there is not a Senator who can tell what those sections are, or can tell from a reading of this section what he is legislating about—shall be declared invalid by a court, the Secretary of Agriculture, on his mere ipse dixit, shall be permitted, without hearing and without regulation and without review, for a period of 6 months, to put into effect any regulation he may deem consistent with the decision of the court.

I say that is a vicious system of legislation. When Senators, no matter how careful they may be in their study of the bill, are unable to know what they are authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to do, I say it is a vicious system of legislation for us to sit here and permit this section to be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am not familiar with this bill.

Mr. CLARK. Nobody else is, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. LONG. It is a scientific bill, and I am sure my friend from New York knows the subject. Does this paragraph undertake to say that if part of the bill is held unconstitutional, then, because it is unconstitutional, the Secretary of Agriculture may make any regulation of the subject he pleases?

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will read subsection (d), turning to a point near the bottom of page 30 and continuing to about the middle of page 31, he will find that it reads:

(d) If any regulation promulgated by the Secretary under section 301, paragraphs (a) and (c); section 302, paragraph (j); section 304, paragraphs (a) and (b); section 401, paragraph (a); section 402, paragraphs (h), (j), and (k); section 403; section 501, paragraph (e); and section 503, is declared invalid in any court proceeding, the Secretary may promulgate in substitution therefor a temporary regulation consistent with such decision.

I have just made the statement that there is not a Senator on this floor who can tell what those sections are; and I dare say that even the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who has put in so much time on the bill, would not be able to tell off-hand, without having his memory refreshed by the representative of the Food and Drug Administration of the Agricultural Department, what those sections are. If any regulation, no matter what it may be, under any of those sections shall be declared invalid by the courts, then for a period of 6 months the Secretary of Agriculture is to have absolute authority, subject to no review, without notice, without hearing, without any court procedure at all, to make any regulation he may see fit. I say that is an extremely vicious system of legislation.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to reply to the Senator from Missouri, if I may.

If the Members of the Senate will look on page 31, line 3, it will be found that we have there the word "consistent."

Mr. CLARK. In whose opinion consistent? In the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. COPELAND. If the court decides that this regulation is invalid, and states the reasons why it is invalid——

Mr. KING. Suppose he does not?

Mr. COPELAND. I cannot say about that. The distinguished lawyer from Utah knows better than I do what would happen in that case; but if the court does give the reasons why it is invalid, then and only then can the Secretary of Agriculture promulgate, in substitution therefor, a temporary regulation consistent with such decision. It might relate to some matter of very great importance to the public health, with the need of prompt action.

Mr. CLARK. But, Mr. President, who is to determine what is consistent? The Secretary of Agriculture, without notice of hearing, without review, in his own discretion or at his own whim, is to determine what is consistent with the court's decision. In other words, for a period of 6 months any citizen is absolutely deprived of his rights if the Secretary of Agriculture asserts that his temporary regulation is consistent with the holding before him.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to appeal to my friend from New York. This is going further than we have ever gone since I have been here, and we have gone some awful distances. To authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make a new law because the old one is declared unconstitutional I do not believe would itself be constitutional.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Not only is the Secretary of Agriculture to have authority to make a new law, but, when a regulation which he has made has been declared invalid by a court, immediately for a period of 6 months he is to have unrestrained discretion to make any sort of regulation he pleases, so long as he says it is consistent with the court's decree.

Mr. LONG. To begin with, I do not think this provision is constitutional at all. It does not set out any form. In other words, in order to allow an official to prescribe regulations which shall have the force of legislation, some form must be prescribed so that it may be known that he is acting under powers particularly prescribed. This provision says the Secretary may do whatever he may think is not prohibited by the decision of the court.

I think by such a provision the Senator from New York endangers the passage of this bill, which I desire to see passed. I think we need some legislation along this line, and I am one of the hearty advocates of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection at all to eliminating that language. In order that it may be brought before the Senate, I move a reconsideration of the amendment on pages 30 and 31, the whole of subsection (d); and I make the motion with a view to moving that it be eliminated from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment on pages 30 and 31 was agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before that is done, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from New York.

As I understand the parliamentary situation, there was an amendment pending, which was reconsidered; and the Senator from Missouri was arguing against the adoption of the amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that I was addressing myself to the whole section on the proposed amendment adding the letter (d).

Mr. NORRIS. It seemed to me that all it would be necessary for us to do, if it should be thought best to eliminate this language, would be to vote against the amendment. Would not that be sufficient?

Mr. COPELAND. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska that I have no objection to the elimination of the entire paragraph.

Mr. NORRIS. I may say that the paragraph appears to me to be rather objectionable. If we legislate in that way we shall be doing something that so far we have not done, although it may be necessary for us to take up that question.

As I understand, it is provided in this language that if any part of the section shall be held unconstitutional, the Secretary may make a rule having the effect of a statute. Suppose one judge holds part of the law unconstitutional, and then the Secretary sets up new rules having the force and effect of a statute, and some other judge holds that the Secretary's rules are unconstitutional. Where shall we be then?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. As the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] suggests, has the judge's power been exhausted, or can he go still further?

Mr. COPELAND. He can suggest wherein the regulation is objectionable.

Mr. NORRIS. If that is good legislation, and if we have reached the point where, when we enact a law, we must go on the theory that it may not be satisfactory to some judge and he may enjoin its enforcement, why not let him, when he holds it unconstitutional, announce the law that he thinks ought to be in effect? We have to meet with his pleasure anyway before we can get a law that is effective.

Mr. COPELAND. I may say to the Senator that the reason why I personally am willing to yield and eliminate the whole section is because since this bill came before us we added, on page 32, a provision for securing a new regulation. It might happen that the Secretary would not provide a new regulation or modify the one objected to by the court. In that event there would be difficulty about it. It was brought out in the hearings, not alone by the producers or manufacturers but by witnesses from the consumer group, that there should be some way by which an interested industry or representatives of the public might appear before the Public Health Committee or the Food Committee and ask that a new regulation be presented, or that a modification might be made in one already in existence.

Under the bill as we had it before that time, the request for a modification or a new regulation had to come from the Secretary himself; but now there is language in the bill which permits the industry or the public to ask for a change in the regulations. So I have no objection at all to the elimination of the paragraph.

Mr. LONG. As I understand, the Senator from New York has moved to strike out paragraph (d).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has moved to strike out subdivision (d). The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. I had started to offer an amendment——

Mr. COPELAND. Just one moment, Mr. President, if the Senator please. To implement the provision made by the action just taken, on page 29, line 2, after the word "paragraphs", I ask the insertion of "(d)" and a comma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be reconsidered. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I call the attention of Senators to page 42, line 1, where I move to strike out the words "other than by radio broadcast."

I ask Senators to listen while I read the sentence there where I undertake to strike out those words.

No retail dealer shall be prosecuted under this section for the dissemination in good faith, other than by radio broadcast, of any advertisement offering for sale at his place of business any article which he does not distribute or sell in interstate commerce.

In other words, no dealer is to be prosecuted for what he sells in good faith and for advertising it, except by radio broadcast. If he publishes in good faith an "ad" in a newspaper, or if he sends out a circular, or sends out a letter, he is not bothered, but if he accidently sends a word over the radio, he is to be prosecuted for that.

Mr. President, the provision is unnecessary, because if we turn back to another provision of the bill on page 37, subdivision (4), under section 708, we find this:

The dissemination of any false advertisement by United States mails, or in interstate commerce by radio broadcast or otherwise—and that includes everybody—

for the purpose of inducing, directly or indirectly, the purchase of food, drugs, or cosmetics.

It is to be prohibited under the preceding provision. In other words, it would prohibit false information being spread in any way, by newspaper, radio, or otherwise, and that is all right; I have no objection to that. That covers the radio, it covers a newspaper, and it covers a magazine. But on page 42 it is provided that no retail dealer shall be held responsible for whatever he advertises in good faith except by radio. He must not make a mistake by radio, but he can make any other mistake he wants to.

If it is desired that no mistakes be made, if it is desired that anyone shall be punished if he does not act in good faith, that is one matter; but to hold that a man shall be responsible for what he says over the radio, but that he can put the same statement in a newspaper and not be responsible for it, is an unfair discrimination and there is no basis to support it.

I therefore move that we strike out the words "other than by radio broadcast", for the reason that a preceding section of the bill amply covers all false information and forbids its dissemination. This other provision is simply one to eliminate the radio and place it in a separate category.

I do not give my support to favoring the newspapers in preference to the radio anyway, just as between us Members of the Senate. I have been able to make myself heard over the radio, when the newspapers would not let me be heard, and I am somewhat of the opinion that there is no reason to discriminate. Perhaps my friend, the Senator from New York, has had better luck the other way.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, when this provision was written into the bill last year, beginning, at the bottom of page 41, with the words "No retail dealer shall be prosecuted", there was great fear on the part of the small-town newspapers, the village weeklies, and so on, that the editor or publisher who wrote the advertising might somehow or other find himself in difficulty. At that time we had not included the language about the radio which has been quoted by the Senator from Louisiana. I am in agreement now that there is no reason why this language should not be deleted from the bill.

The idea originally was to take care of the case, for instance, of a small-town newspaper, such as one at Suffern, N. Y., where I live. The Suffern Independent, which is never for me, I may say, so I have no particular desire to advertise it; it is a bitter Republican paper, but, fortunately, its circulation is limited, though unfortunately for the present occupant of the chair [Mr. MOORE] it also slops over into New Jersey—and I use that term advisedly. It was thought that it would be all right to let the Suffern Independent run its advertising, even though it got into interstate commerce, but that we did not want the Rogers drug store in Suffern, perhaps, to devise a remedy for tuberculosis or cancer and be able to go on the radio up at Chester and advertise it widely as the "greatest remedy in the world" for such a disease.

As the Senator has said, this protection is provided for in the other section of the bill to which he has referred. I am very glad to join in the request that the language he has quoted be stricken from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 42, line 1, it is proposed to strike out the words "other than by radio broadcast".

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from New York, I have in my hand a letter containing several criticisms of the bill which the Senator has in charge. One of the criticisms refers to the definition of advertising, and the writer states:

There is too broad a definition of the term "advertising" in the bill. For example, "advertisement" is defined to include representation outside the label, such as correspondence between a manufacturer and the director of his research department in the development of a new product, where you are dealing with unknown questions as to the remedial value of a drug being developed.

I should like to inquire whether the criticism is a fair one.

Mr. COPELAND. It is perfectly absurd.

Mr. WALSH. What is the definition of "advertising" in the bill, and where is it to be found?

Mr. COPELAND. It is to be found on page 3, line 17. Undoubtedly the writer of the letter was speaking about one of the old prints of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I find that the bill provides:

The term "advertisement" includes all representations of fact or opinion disseminated to the public in any manner or by any means other than by the labeling.

Mr. COPELAND. That is the provision.

Mr. WALSH. So that the amendment submitted by the committee covers the objection made by the writer of this letter?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. May I read to the Senator another paragraph from this letter?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. It states:

In the section with respect to seizures of drugs there is a provision which appears wholly unjustified. This provision gives the chief of any district laboratory of the United States Department of Agriculture the power, without court order, to go out and seize a product in his discretion. Under the present act no seizure can be made without the consent and approval of the court, by its formal order. There appears to be no reason for modifying the present protective system of a seizure under court order, and for permitting a purely administrative discretionary seizure without court safeguard.

Mr. COPELAND. I fear the writer of the letter had a very old issue of the bill, because if the Senator will turn to page 45, he will find this language at the bottom of the page:

The article shall be liable to seizure by process pursuant to the libel; but if a chief of station or other employee of the Administration, duly designated by the Secretary, has probable cause to believe from facts found by him and duly reported to the Secretary that such article is so adulterated as to be imminently dangerous to health, then, and in such case only, the article shall be liable to seizure.

Mr. WALSH. It is quite apparent from what the Senator says that the writer of the letter probably had earlier copies of the bill. Will the Senator state in general whether the provisions which have been subject to criticisms such as this writer has presented to me have been corrected in the later copies of the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Every criticism which the Senator has mentioned in this colloquy has been fully met by this print of the bill, and no such violations of the feelings and pocketbook of the Senator's constituent, as he indicates he fears, will be suffered by reason of what has been done.

Mr. WALSH. I judge there has been a rather radical change in the text of this bill as compared with the earlier bills which were presented.

Mr. COPELAND. Very radical.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. If I understood the criticism contained in the letter which the Senator from Massachusetts read, it went to the provision of the proposed law which is still in the draft now before the Senate, which declares in effect that a misbranded article is an adulterated article and may be considered for purposes of punishment under the law as adulterated; and, if I am correct in my assumption that that is what the correspondence of the Senator from Massachusetts is directed to, then the provision has not been corrected in the present draft.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator refer to the first criticism I read to the Senator from New York, or the second?

Mr. CLARK. The second.

Mr. WALSH. That deals with seizures.

Mr. CLARK. That involves the question of seizures.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. Seizures are authorized for adulterated articles. However, in an earlier section of the bill articles which are only misbranded are declared to be adulterated, by definition, and therefore, in my judgment, that is what the correspondent of the Senator from Massachusetts is directing himself to.

Mr. WALSH. Is it correct that articles which are merely mislabeled may be seized under this bill?

Mr. COPELAND. They may be seized if adulterated.

Mr. WALSH. If adulterated?

Mr. CLARK. They may be seized if declared by definition to be adulterated.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, if they are adulterated, they ought to be seized.

Mr. COPELAND. If both Senators will wait a little bit, that is the thing I am now going to talk about.

Mr. CLARK. Let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts that that is precisely the proposition to which the amendment offered on yesterday by the Senator from North Carolina, which has not been disposed of, was directed.

Mr. WALSH. I was not in the Chamber when that subject was discussed.

Mr. COPELAND. I think if Senators have no other matters to present, the three amendments presented by the Senator from North Carolina might well be considered at this time. Personally, I should be glad to have considered the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina, in which reference is made to page 45, line 7. That is the subject referred to just now by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I was wondering if the Senator from New York would accept the first amendments offered by my colleague, the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], in view of the fact that they merely call for the transfer of two lines from one section to another. I refer to page 13, where it is proposed by the amendment of the senior Senator from North Carolina to strike out lines 19 and 20.

Mr. COPELAND. I am familiar with what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And it is proposed to insert the same lines on page 15, under section 402, making an additional subsection.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from North Carolina has introduced three amendments, as the junior Senator from North Carolina has said.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The other amendment, the third, of which the Senator made mention, is on page 45, line 17.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes. If the third amendment shall be defeated, as I sincerely hope it may be, I shall have no objection to the passage of the other two. That is the reason why, if the Senator will bear with me, I should like to have us consider the long amendment first.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I have asked that the three amendments be considered together. Nothing will be accomplished unless the third amendment shall be adopted. I think the Senator from New York will agree with me on that.

Mr. COPELAND. I agree with that.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well; then I ask that the three amendments be considered together.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. I asked unanimous consent to have that done when I introduced the amendment and it was granted.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. Then these three amendments in a package are presented to the Senate.

Mr. President, if these amendments, plus one presented by the Senator from Missouri, which is also a blanket amendment, which proposes the transfer of supervision of advertising to the Federal Trade Commission shall be adopted, I shall have no further interest in the bill. The provisions affected by all these amendments are those which implement and make possible the successful administration of the proposed law.

May I ask Senators how they feel about the Senate continuing in session? I think I am sure to speak an hour on this subject.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that since he is going into the whole subject matter of the bill, and since I propose at the conclusion of his remarks, if I can secure the floor, to address myself to a motion to recommit which I intend to make, it seems to me we might as well start in in the morning and make a clean sweep of it.

Mr. COPELAND. I leave it wholly to the Members present to decide what shall be done.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator is now presenting the controversial features in the bill, and I propose to address myself to the same subjects.

Mr. COPELAND. We have come now to the heart of the opposition; and, as I said a moment ago, if these two groups of amendments shall be adopted, I shall have no further interest in the bill. We might just as well stay under the law as it is at present, and there would be no added protection to the public under the provisions of the new bill. Therefore we come to the very fundamental question; and I am willing to be governed wholly by the wishes of Senators on both sides of the Chamber as to whether we shall proceed now, or whether we shall recess until tomorrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question? He has stated that he intends to move to recommit the bill. What does the Senator believe could be accomplished by recommitting the bill?

Mr. CLARK. I may say to the Senator from West Virginia that I believe this might be accomplished: The bill might be taken up paragraph by paragraph in the committee, for which an opportunity has never been afforded in the nearly 2 years that the bill has been before the committee, in order to correct such vicious misuse of language as has repeatedly appeared here in its consideration in the Senate, to eliminate some of the jokers which have appeared, some of which already have been eliminated and some of which have not, and to decide on particular questions of policy, such as whether or not the aims expressed in the President's message shall be accomplished by amendment of the existing law which would preserve the great body of decisions which have been made under that law during a period of nearly 30 years, and also preserve the laws now existing in 46 States, based on the present law, or whether it is necessary to write a new law; also the question of whether or not it is necessary to take from the Federal Trade Commission the jurisdiction which it has very efficiently exercised for a period of a good many years, in order to confer greater power on a bureau in the Department of Agriculture, and other questions of general policy. These things have never been thought out in the Committee on Commerce. There has never been an opportunity for any adequate discussion in the Committee on Commerce of any of these very essential propositions. During my service on the committee there has never been any consideration of any draft of the bill which has been presented to the committee at any meeting previous to the meeting at which the motion was made and adopted to report the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri is making a very serious indictment of the procedure of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COPELAND. O Mr. President, I have no objection. I do not resent it. Let the Senator from Missouri go as far as he likes.

Mr. CLARK. I am perfectly willing to leave that question to any member of the committee. I have been a very constant attendant at the meetings of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator from Missouri believe if the bill were recommitted the changes which he has in mind could be made without impairing the protective features of the bill so far as the public is concerned?

Mr. CLARK. Let me say to the Senator from West Virginia that I am as much in favor of the strongest kind of protective features, so far as the public is concerned, as either the Senator from West Virginia or the Senator from New York or anybody else inside or outside of this body. But I do not believe it is necessary to declare a crutch to be a drug, to declare a misbranded article to be adulterated, to indulge in all sorts of subterfuges and jokers and loose terms such as are contained in the bill, in order to accomplish the purpose defined by the President so clearly and so adequately in his message.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I absolve every Senator. What I have to say I do not wish to be interpreted as applying to any Member of this body.

I want to know, and I want the Senate to decide, whether the patent-medicine manufacturers who have been exploiting the American people for the last quarter of a century, who have been able to put upon the market alleged remedies for tuberculosis and cancer and syphilis and other diseases well known by the medical profession not to be reached by those remedies—I want to know whether the Senate of the United States is going to take the position that the patent-medicine advertiser and manufacturer, the vilest man on the face of the earth, because he is taking money from innocent people making them believe that they are going to be cured, shall be permitted to continue in those practices.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I do not yield. I have already said I absolve all Senators. I am not talking about Senators. I am talking about the hidden influences which reach into this body, not alone as regard " vested interest " and other interests, but also as regards this great big vested interest which has to do with the very dearest and best thing in life—public health and individual health. If we are going to permit this bill to be emasculated and to permit the continuance of advertising in various newspapers of such vile truck as I have before me in a photostatic copy of a newspaper, all taken from one issue of the paper of the 15th of January 1935, I want the Senate to decide it for itself. I ask Senators to read this copy, because in the presence of this audience, made up of fine women and some children, I could not read aloud what I find here.

If the Senate of the United States is willing to have the Federal Trade Commission go on through another 22 years and fail as during the last 22 years to protect our people against such fraudulent things, such vile and outrageous things, I am satisfied to go down with my colors flying.

Every Senator can speak for himself, but if he desires to emasculate the bill and to make it impossible to seize articles which are being sold daily and which cannot be controlled otherwise than by the enactment of such a law—if Senators desire to do such a thing, let them vote to continue to send the advertising to the Federal Trade Commission, and do away with the possibility of seizure in the market of those things which have to do with invasion of the health of our people.

Mr. President, I am sorry I speak so feelingly, but I have a right to speak this way. This problem has been my training for years. I have had occasion to administer a law like this. I know of the difficulties involved. I know the name of every vile patent medicine which is seeking here now, through its influences in legislative halls, to defeat a fine piece of legislation.

Do not think I have any pride of authorship in the bill. I am not going to be distressed as an individual whether we pass a bill which carries my name or not, but I am going to find out, if I can, how many Members of the United States Senate are willing to perpetuate the conditions which have existed in the United States year after year. I venture to say that the cemeteries contain the bodies of millions of American citizens who have been killed by products which we are seeking to take off the market.

If there are Senators who are so interested in the vested interests, so fearful of disturbing somebody who has been doing this sort of thing, all right, let them vote to destroy the bill, let them vote to prevent seizure, let them vote to send the advertising to the body which has failed for a quarter of a century to do this work.

Talk about sending these matters to the Federal Trade Commission! A lawyer friend of mine who is said to have an income of more that $100,000 a year confided to me on yesterday about a case in which he was retained in 1922. He said there was a notice sent out by the Federal Trade Commission that his client was disobeying the law. He said that in 1929, 7 years later, his client got a " cease and desist order ", and from 1929 until this month he has been able by injunctions to stand off action, and now after 13 years the case is in the circuit court of appeals! If Senators want to " protect " the American people by that sort of procedure, let them do it. I myself do not want to do it.

This bill, about which some persons in the United States are so sensitive, is not a brand new thing. The law at present prohibits the placing upon a label false or misleading claims in any particular. It prohibits false and fraudulent claims, but only so far as the label is concerned; and what is advertising but an extension of the label? No one questions, no one can question, that the Food and Drug Administration shall pass upon the quality of the product, shall pass upon the material upon the label, shall pass upon the material which goes with the package; and what is advertising but an extension of the label and of such printed material?

Mr. President, if there be those here who wish to break down the proposed law, who wish to leave us right where we are after these years of splendid administration of the Wiley law; if there be those here who are unwilling to have that law extended to cosmetics and extended to advertising; if there be those who feel that way about the matter, all right. Let such Senators vote that way. So far as I am concerned, however, I am going to pass this bill as it is, if I can.

On the other hand, if the majority of this body say that it must be emasculated and all the teeth taken out of it, and that we are to be no better off after it shall have been passed than we are at present, I am satisfied to let dear old Dr. Wiley's law stand where it is. That is a good enough law for me if we cannot enact these other provisions which will take care of modern advertising and give us decent protection for the men and women and children of the country. That is where I stand.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the Senator whether there is any question about the members of the committee having had full opportunity to analyze and study the bill before it was reported?

Mr. COPELAND. Ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. He was a member of the committee.

Mr. WALSH. I am in accord with the views expressed by the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. I am sure the Senator is.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the Senator from New York once refused to yield, and I do not like to ask him again; but, in view of the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts, I do ask the Senator from New York to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COPELAND. I will yield the floor if the Senator wishes to make a speech.

Mr. CLARK. No; I do not wish to make a speech. I do desire the floor later in my own right; but in connection with the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts, the statement I made was that the bill had never been taken up paragraph by paragraph in the ordinary course in the Commerce Committee during the last 2 years of its consideration. I said that on each occasion, when the committee had been asked to consider the bill, they had been asked by the chairman to consider a new draft of the bill, presented to the committee that morning, and that an opportunity was always refused—notably on the occasion when the bill was actually reported—to consider the bill in detail and paragraph by paragraph.

I ask any member of the committee who desires to do so to contradict my statement in that regard.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to three volumes of hearings which I have here.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. It was suggested a moment ago by the Senator from New York that probably it might be wise to recess now and go on in the morning.

Mr. COPELAND. Perhaps the Senator thinks adjournment would tend to peace?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I am trying to help the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not desire to be helped. I am much obliged to the Senator, but I do not desire the help he proffers.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think we are now right up to the important point of the bill, and there is such a small attendance of Senators that I thought it would be helpful to the Senator from New York to have a larger attendance.

Mr. COPELAND. I am going to get a few things out of my system before we take a recess.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New York will get them out of his system.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not insist on a recess. I was really seeking to help the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do not know who wrote the original bill. I did not. Senate bill 1944 came down here, and was called the "Tugwell bill." I do not know who wrote it. I was asked to introduce it. That was in June of 1933. I introduced the bill, and I confess that I never read it until October. When October came I realized that pretty soon we must have some hearings, and when I read the bill I was shocked to think I had introduced a bill like that, giving arbitrary power to the Secretary of Agriculture. I am not reflecting on any individual Secretary of Agriculture, but I was shocked to find that I had introduced a bill giving arbitrary power to any official who might hold that position. A subcommittee was appointed, consisting of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], and myself, and we held hearings in December; and here are the hearings [exhibiting volume].

Out of that came another bill. That bill was presented to the committee, and dealt with at considerable length by the committee. It was made clear to me that it was necessary to have some more hearings; and so from February 27 to March 3, 1934, we had some more hearings. Out of that came a bill which was brought here so late in the session that it had no chance to be given consideration.

This year a third bill was introduced.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, are those the hearings of this year?

Mr. COPELAND. No; those hearings are last year's hearings. Those were in December 1933 and in February and March of 1934.

Then this bill came along, and there were hearings on it during the month of March, presided over by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] was ill, and I sat in the committee by courtesy of all concerned, and I suppose because, as Chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I had some privileges.

Those hearings were printed, and before they were bound a complete copy in sheet form was sent to each member of the committee 1 week before the committee was to meet. With this set of sheets was sent a letter saying that a week later there would be a meeting of the committee to consider the bill; and a copy of the proposed bill, with the amendments which grew out of it, attached to these sheets, was sent with the letter.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. So far as the subcommittee was concerned, I think the Senator from New York will agree that the subcommittee was not appointed or empowered to consider the bill. It was appointed simply because the Senator from New York himself did not desire to preside over the hearings; and as a personal matter he requested me to be chairman of the subcommittee and to preside over the hearings. The subcommittee had no authority whatever to consider the amendments proposed or to report on the bill one way or the other.

The Senator from New York has stated that he sent out these galley proofs a week before the meeting of the Commerce Committee, and it is possible that that is true. From my own personal experience, I desire to say that I received the galley proofs 2 days before the meeting at which the Senator insisted on reporting out the bill without detailed consideration in the committee, and that when the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] in the committee proposed that the bill be taken up paragraph by paragraph for consideration, and that an opportunity be afforded to consider the language and the various lines of the sections, the chairman refused to permit that to be done and insisted that the bill must be reported out that day, and, by a vote of 9 to 6, the bill was so reported.

Mr. COPELAND. All of which proves what?

Mr. CLARK. All of which proves my preliminary statement that this bill has never, at any stage in all the hearings which have been held or at any of the times it has been before the committee, been taken up by the Committee on Commerce in the ordinary, customary method for consideration and perfection by the committee, which might have eliminated all of the jokers and catch phrases that are now found in the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. It is very apparent to me that, so far as the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from North Carolina are concerned, they have not had any trouble in studying the bill and finding where the "jokers" are.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from New York a while ago called my attention to one which had escaped me, by offering an amendment to it; and when I read the section and called attention to its legal import, it became apparent that it was so outrageous and so indefensible that the Senator from New York, with the consent of his mentor from the Agricultural Department, agreed that the paragraph should be stricken out of the bill; and it was so done on his own motion.

Mr. COPELAND. I congratulate my mentor.

Mr. CLARK. So do I.

Mr. COPELAND. I had not realized that my mentor was leading me by the hand; but I bow to him, and say that I am glad that he is my mentor. I like to have a mentor like this man, who is interested in the public health and in the public safety and who is desirous of saving the lives of people.

The Senator says that he had these sheets in his possession for 2 days before the meeting of the committee. I took pains to see to it that the sheets were delivered to the offices of members of the committee a week before the meeting, and they were so delivered at every office. If Senators had no time to study the galley proofs before the consideration of the bill was begun by the Senate, we have been going along with the bill on the floor of the Senate all this week, 4 days, and if any Senator was sufficiently interested to study it, he certainly has had the time and opportunity. If he did not care to study it, he was certainly getting letters from home. Among the letters that every Senator received are letters from vile patent-medicine manufacturers, who do not want any regulation. I am happy to say, so far as they are concerned, that they will still have the Wiley law to contend with, even if they should succeed in defeating this measure, which is no more than an extension of that law to cosmetics and to advertising.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am sure the Senator from New York would not wish to leave the implication that the only critics of the bill and the only persons who have sought to amend it are those who qualify under the description he has just given.

Mr. COPELAND. I absolve the Senator absolutely. I think most of the criticisms which have been offered here have been very worthy and very proper ones. But the fact remains that there is, in effect, a conspiracy on the part of these patent-medicine men—and some of them are sitting in the gallery right now as I speak—seeking to defeat the bill. Then there are certain newspaper interests who are so afraid that they will not be permitted any more to run the vile advertising which I have exhibited, who are so afraid that their dividends will be affected by this attack upon their revenues that they are here in force, and possibly, though I pray not, they may have influence enough to beat the bill.

I know what will be said by every mother in the United States, by every decent citizen who believes in purity of drugs and in proper foods, who believes our people ought to be protected in the use of cosmetics from such blindness as was suffered by the girl whose picture I exhibited, every person who believes that advertising should be truthful and regulated by somebody. I know what a flood of protest will come, so I am satisfied, if I shall be defeated in my efforts to pass the bill, it will be an honorable defeat, and I will be satisfied to accept that sort of a defeat.

Mr. ROBINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Arkansas will not now ask for a recess, in view of the fact that the Senator from New York has consumed nearly an hour making a very vicious attack on everybody opposed to his bill. I desire to address myself for a few moments to the remarks of the Senator from New York.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I thought perhaps we could take a recess at this time and resume tomorrow. If the Senator wishes to proceed now, I have no objection.

Mr. CLARK. I wish to make a few remarks in reply to the Senator from New York. In view of the plain implication of the Senator from New York that every Senator who has criticized his bill, or has desired to proceed in an orderly manner and after action by a committee on the language of a most important, technical, detailed bill, is controlled by patent-medicine or vicious interests, as he says, I should like to say that, so far as I am concerned, I have no connection, direct or indirct, with any patent-medicine manufacturer or the manufacturer of any foods such as the clients of Mr. Dunn, who has been broadcasting in favor of the bill during the last 2 weeks, or with anybody else.

Furthermore, I should like to say that I am heart and soul in favor of the purposes announced in the President's message for amending and broadening the present law to such extent as may be necessary.

Two years ago, when the Senator from New York introduced a measure, the name of the author of which he now says he does not know, but which bore the name of the "Tugwell bill", and which he has told the Committee on Commerce he now abhors, and did as soon as he read it, I did not conceive that it was necessary either for the Committee on Commerce to report it without consideration, or for the Senate of the United States to adopt it without proper consideration.

When the Senator from New York, after the hearings a year ago last fall, came back with the first of these nearly 20 different drafts of the bill, and came into the Committee on Commerce on the morning when the draft had first been furnished to the committee, and requested and insisted that the bill be reported without consideration and without hearing, I did not conceive then that it was my duty, as a Member of the United States Senate or as a member of the Committee on Commerce, to vote to report that bill, and I voted against it.

On the numerous occasions since, when the Senator from New York, for whose professional opinion I have the highest respect and of whom I am personally exceedingly fond, would come in with a different draft of a bill, when no opportunity had been given the members of the committee to examine it, and would ask as a matter of personal courtesy to him that the bill be reported without consideration, I still did not feel it was my duty, as a Member of the Senate or of the committee, to vote to report it.

The Senator from New York has begged the question constantly in the Committee on Commerce and in the Senate when he has said that anybody who is opposed to the bill in its present form, quite a different draft from the many drafts which have preceded it, is opposed to the principle of amending the food and drug laws of the United States and affording protection to the public.

The Senator from New York has never yet, in the committee or in the Senate, explained why it was necessary to wipe out all of the great mass of decisions which have been rendered by the courts of this country during the last 30 years under the Wiley Food and Drugs Act, and to get away from the laws of the 46 States based on those decisions, and adopt an entirely new system, except as may be desirable for the purposes of extending a little new authority to the Department of Agriculture and allowing the distinguished Senator from New York to get his name on a bill.

Neither the Senator from New York nor anyone else has ever dared criticize the administration by the Federal Trade Commission of the advertising laws as they exist at present. The fact is that under the present law the Federal Trade Commission has only had jurisdiction over advertising which constituted unfair competition. Under their very limited jurisdiction they have built up a machinery, they have exhibited a willingness and a competency to deal with that situation, which makes it certain that all that is necessary now is to extend their jurisdiction to include the new subjects matter contemplated in the pending bill, rather than to take away their jurisdiction and turn it over to an entirely new agency, the Food and Drug Administration of the Department of Agriculture.

These are a very few of the matters mentioned by the Senator from New York, but the fact is, Mr. President, that in the consideration of the bill we have come upon joker after joker, upon the use of language which cannot possibly be justified either in law or in reason.

We have found that a crutch and a set of scales are to be designated by law as drugs. We have found that a drug which is misbranded is to be treated as adulterated. This afternoon we came across a section which provided that, after one of the regulations to be made by a bureaucrat under this proposed act had been declared invalid by a court, the same bureaucrat would have authority to make a new regulation which would be in force, without notice, without hearing, and without review, for a period of 6 months.

I say, Mr. President, that if the bill shall be recommitted, there should be no necessity whatever for a delay of more than 2 or 3 days. If the Senator from New York will do what he has never done, call his committee together and put the bill before them paragraph by paragraph, line by line, and word by word, for consideration and definition, the subject matter may well be cleaned up in 2 or 3 days, and a bill reported back which will conform to the President's message, and accomplish every aim set forth in the message, and, at the same time, not be full of jokers and innuendoes and hidden powers for the bureaucrats of the Department of Agriculture.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 4, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, author of all good and never far away from Thy children, we would listen to Thy whisper: "I will guide thee with Mine eye." Enable us to cherish sincere, sensitive, and responsive souls toward Thy rich and assuring promise; then Thou wilt preserve us against every false way. Keep us from being victims of misconceptions, prejudices, and illusions. Courageous in the denunciation of the wrong, clear in the declaration of the right, may we stand as leaders in national, civic, and social welfare. Inspire us with Thy word: "To them that love God, all things work together for good." Help us to live in the spirit of submission in trust and in hope, believing that in many and in unexpected ways Thou wilt make our work fruitful and bring it to a fine consummation for the good of our country; so grant it, blessed Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SCHOOL HOUSING SITUATION IN MISSISSIPPI—OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter addressed to me under date of March 10, 1935, from two very prominent educators in the State of Mississippi on the condition of our school system.

I ask also to extend my remarks and include a short resolution adopted at a mass meeting in Lauderdale County, Miss., urging legislation on old-age pensions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am very proud, indeed, to have the pleasure of placing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following letter written to me under date of March 10, 1935, signed by W. G. Eckles, director public building service, department of education of the State of Mississippi, and which said letter was approved by W. F. Bond, State superintendent of education in Mississippi. The letter is as follows:

JACKSON, MISS., March 10, 1935.

Hon. AUBERT C. DUNN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DUNN: Under separate cover I am sending you today some facts concerning the school-housing situation in Mississippi.

Last year we made a detailed study of the physical plant facilities of every public school in the State. The results of this survey show unmistakably that Mississippi is very deficient in school-plant facilities. The average investment in the school plant per child enrolled in school is only $69 for Mississippi. This is the lowest average investment of all the States of the Nation. This average for the United States is $250. A copy of the general summary of the survey is in the package I am sending you. I invite your attention especially to pages 23 to 26.

Of course, our Negro schools are much more deficient than are the white schools. The investment in plant facilities per enrolled child for the white schools of Mississippi is less than one-half the average for all races in the United States.

Recently the city and county superintendents of education were requested to make up an inventory of needed school-plant improvements which, under favorable conditions, they would make in a 1-year program. A tabulation of the estimated cost of these improvements by counties is enclosed. As you will see, these estimates total $16,276,722.34, of which some $13,000,000 is for white schools and the remainder for Negro schools.

To make substantial improvement to our deplorable school-plant situation we will have to have Federal aid on a very liberal grant basis. Only a pitiful few of our school districts have been able to build school buildings under the P. W. A. program. We appreciate this aid, but we know that these communities were most able to get needed improvements without outside aid.

While Mississippi's investment in the school plant is lowest in the Nation, we are almost 50 percent above the national average in the percent of taxable wealth invested in the school plant with 0.58 percent as compared with 0.40 percent, the average for the Nation.

We appeal to you, our other Congressmen, Senator BILBO, and Senator HARRISON to give us your active support in getting Federal aid which will permit us to provide reasonable plant facilities for the school boys and girls of the State. While it would take a total of $100,000,000 to bring Mississippi up to the national average investment per child, we ask for only $20,000,000 for a 2-year program. We are convinced that if this aid is made available on a liberal enough basis, we could provide facilities where they are most needed. Such a public-works program would offer advantages not to be found in any other program.

1. The efficiency of the schools would be greatly increased.
2. The spread of employment would be ideal, reaching all sections of the State.
3. A high percent of the money expended would be for labor.
4. The facilities secured would serve a large group of people for a number of years.
5. A great saving in local tax money would result, because local communities will have to bear the whole burden unless Federal aid is secured.

May we not depend upon you to help us in this program?

Should you care to have additional information, we will be glad to supply you with it.

Thanking you for the fine things you have already done for schools and with best wishes, I am

Cordially yours,

W. G. ECKLES,
Director School Building Service.

Approved.

W. F. BOND,
State Superintendent of Education.

Mr. Speaker, the State of Mississippi has undoubtedly been as reasonable, if not considerably more so, in its requests for emergency help for schools than any other State in the Union. Our people have made great progress in education, and we are proud of that progress; but because of general agricultural conditions, such as deflated markets, the lowering of assessments in towns and cities because of the inability of our people to pay taxes on what otherwise would be normal assessments, we are now greatly handicapped in not only keeping our schools open but also in repairing and replacing many plants that are so vitally necessary to our school systems, and I am proud to have had the pleasure of placing into the RECORD such an intelligent letter from such recognized leaders in the field of education.

It is needless to say that I shall certainly cooperate with them to the fullest extent in getting my State's just proportion of emergency money which we are entitled to from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following resolution adopted in mass meeting in Lauderdale County courthouse, March 23, 1935, Meridian, Miss.:

TO NATIONAL OFFICERS

To our Honorable President, United States Senators, and Congressmen, especially to our 2 Mississippi Senators and 7 Congressmen:

We pray of you to hear our voice and expressions as embodied in the following resolutions:

We, the citizens of Lauderdale County over 60 years of age, assembled in the court house Saturday night, March 23, after consideration of the various social security legislation and pension plans now being considered by Congress, ask you to embody the following provisions in any social legislation or old-age pension laws enacted:

We pray for immediate and sufficient appropriation to care for those above 60 years of age; at the same time put into effect the public program to care for those that are younger than 60.

We ask the old-age pension begin at 60 and not at 65, as now proposed, and that the law guarantee that the State laws pay this pension at the age of 60, this to begin immediately instead of in 1940, or, give the States now having pension laws 1 year to reduce their limit which are from 70 to 65 years of age.

We further ask that the maximum should not be fixed, but should provide that pension payments be made to insure healthy and decent living conditions for the aged. If the limit must be fixed, let the minimum be not less than $30 per month gross (Federal and State).

Should you enact old-age insurance along with immediate pension law, or instead of immediate payment of old-age-pension laws, we ask that the system plan be changed to take effect immediately instead of in 1937, and embody the above-mentioned provisions as to age limit and amount paid as above stated.

We commend our President upon this step toward obtaining for the aged assistance that they may spend their remaining days in decency, in peace, and in security in their own homes, and assure each Senator and Congressman supporting our cause that our appreciation will be like unto that given in rescue of a drowning person.

According to Government statistics, over seven and a half million people in America are dependent upon charity or are on the F. E. R. A. list. These, with millions of others between the ages of 60 and 65, who are not included in the present Federal old-age security laws, join us in praying to you for relief immediately and the change from the humiliating dole system now in force, if not cared for by their children.

We respectfully, humbly, and obediently do hereby remind you of your campaign promises, and the confidence we have in you to carry this out, regardless of the pressure brought upon you contrary to our interests.

Respectfully submitted by our officers signed below and of citizens in assembly.

Dr. M. W. GANTT, President.
Rev. J. W. BRAND, Secretary.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes out of order.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky, but I hope no other gentleman will make a similar request. The committee was delayed almost 3 hours yesterday in its effort to take up this bill. Members of the House are interested and want to consider this war-profits bill, and I hope other requests will be delayed until a future date.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I had hoped that I might be allowed to address the House for 3 minutes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Kentucky having 3 minutes each in which to address the House, but I shall be constrained to object to other similar requests.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, for just a few minutes I desire to call to the attention of the House some matters that have occurred in the last few days, about which I think the House of Representatives should have information.

References have been made in the press to certain statements and testimony before certain committees of the House of Representatives on the subject of national defense. Personally, I am a fixed, immovable advocate of adequate national defense. I do not believe in fighting, and therefore I believe that adequate preparations for war is the surest guaranty that we shall not have a war. [Applause.] A few days ago a gentleman who is possibly in a position to know as well as any other man in the country, Mr. David E. Lilienthal, one of the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority, made the statement before the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives that in case of a great national emergency, or in case of war, the United States would experience a grave and serious shortage in electric power.

In view of our experiences of the last great World War and of the years that have followed, in view of the recollections of that great conflict, and in view of the rapid development of industry since the World War and the rapid strides in power development by private industry in this country, it was alarming to me and doubtless to other members of my committee to hear such a statement coming from such a source. If it be true, gentlemen, it constitutes an indictment against the Army of the United States, against the General Staff, against the Chief of Ordnance, and against our entire national-defense organization. I do not believe it is correct; I think it is a mistaken statement; but in order that Congress and the people and the country may know whether or not, after the disasters of that war and 16 years' time within which to study and plan, our national defense has been neglected, I shall introduce within the next few minutes a resolution asking for an investigation of this particular subject.

With the great and marvelous system of power development that we have in this country, reaching into every industrial plant throughout the land and into every factory adapted to the production of war supplies, is it possible that our national-defense establishment has gone to sleep at the switch and failed to consummate arrangements for immediate conversion of these great industrial plants already electrified into peak production of the munitions of war in case of emergency? Is it possible that after our terrible experiences of the last 5 years of depression and our contemplated vast expenditures of money we are still derelict in this minor point? No, I do not believe it; but I shall undertake to find out about it.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR STATISTICAL STUDIES

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 857) to authorize the Department of Labor to continue to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes, and consider the same.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this bill continues the authority of the Department of Labor to furnish these statistics when the people asking for them pay the costs?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. And, so far as the Government is concerned, no expense whatever is attached to it?

Mr. CONNERY. Not at all. The only reason I am bringing it up now is this: These two bills have been on the Consent Calendar, but I am informed by the Department of Labor that this law which is now on the books expires April 12, which will be before the next Consent Calendar day.

Mr. SNELL. And there is real demand for these statistics?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; there is great demand.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to authorize the Department of Labor to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes" (73d Cong., ch. 118, 48 Stat. 582), and the authority therein conferred shall be, and hereby are, extended until April 13, 1937.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, through the courtesy of Mr. Julian Byrlawsky and the Warner Bros., as a compliment to the House Committee on Labor, there will be shown in the Caucus Room of the old House Office Building on next Monday night, April 8, a picture which has never yet been shown to the American public, entitled "Black Fury", featuring Paul Muni. Last evening I had the privilege of a private preview of this picture, which is a most dramatic and colorful drama of life in the mines, and gives a realistic portrait of conditions in mining communities during the progress of a strike. I take pleasure in inviting every Member of the House to be present at 8 o'clock in the Caucus Room of the old House Office Building to see this picture. I suggest, in view of the limited seating capacity, that Members confine themselves to one guest.

AIR MARSHAL ITALO BALBO AND GENERAL PELLEGRINI

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1605), authorizing the President to present Distinguished Flying Crosses to Air Marshal Italo Balbo and Gen. Aldo Pellegrini, of the Royal Italian Air Force.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is this bill? Is this a Senate bill?

Mr. TURNER. It is a Senate bill and it has been considered by the Military Affairs Committee and unanimously reported out for passage.

Mr. SNELL. Is there a similar bill on the House Calendar?

Mr. TURNER. No.

Mr. SNELL. The Senate bill has been considered in committee?

Mr. TURNER. We considered the Senate bill in committee.

Mr. SNELL. It is a unanimous proposition?

Mr. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What reason is there for taking up the bill at this time?

Mr. TURNER. I have a note here which will explain the reason.

The Honorable Breckenridge Long, American Ambassador to Italy, has been invited by Air Marshal Italo Balbo, now Italian Governor General of Tripoli, to be his guest in Tripoli during April. The passage of this legislation by the House within the next 10 or 12 days would make it possible for Ambassador Long to present the medal during his visit, and both he and the Department would be grateful for prompt action in this regard.

Mr. SNELL. If we could go over there, too, it would be very much better.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to present Distinguished Flying Crosses to Air Marshal Italo Balbo and Gen. Aldo Pellegrini, of the Royal Italian Air Force, in recognition of their formation flight with 24 seaplanes to the United States and back to Italy, which was an event of national importance, a great aeronautical achievement, and a mark of the good will between Italy and the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address made by myself yesterday at Binghamton, N. Y., on the new deal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address which I made yesterday before the Exchange Club of Binghamton, N. Y., on the "new deal":

My friends, it is my purpose to divide my thoughts into three divisions. First, to answer some of the criticisms of the "new deal"; second, to point out some of the accomplishments of the "new deal"; and, third, to show how the policy of the "new deal" promotes world peace.

Now, after 2 years, Mr. Herbert Hoover comes out of the storm cellar and says there wasn't any storm. It is wonderful what 2 years of rest has done for Mr. Hoover's mind. Why, 2 years ago he couldn't think of a thing to do to save the country, and now, 2 years later, he is becoming very fertile for ideas. Personally, I think Mr. Hoover is a fine, cultured, high-class gentleman, but as a statesman he is a good food administrator.

During the war he brought us wheatless, eatless, meatless, sweetless, heatless days, and then he brought them back for the depression. I suppose he thought that if it was good for us to Hooverize during the war that it was good for us to Hooverize during the depression. So, although as a man he is a fine citizen, as a leader in the economic field he still ranks higher as a great engineer.

It must take lots of nerve for those who ran our Government into this terrible depression to stand off now and criticize the man who is leading us out of it. I admit that Mr. Roosevelt is not getting us out quite as fast as Mr. Hoover got us in, but he is doing a pretty good job at that. But it must take lots of nerve for Mr. Hoover to criticize the "new deal." I should think that it would take almost as much nerve as it did for the fellow who murdered his mother and father and then plead to the court for mercy on the grounds that he was an orphan.

My friends, the criticisms of the "new deal" are superficial, and if you notice, they are destructive criticisms. They are not constructive. Anybody can make destructive criticisms about a man who is doing something. Always when you compare the actual with the theoretical, the actual suffers. But in this case the fact remains that the "new deal" is actual and is actually taking us out of the depression.

Of course, there are those who will complain, and in many instances they are benefiting by the very Government they are complaining at. The other day I heard a man complaining about the "new deal." He said, "I ain't got no liberty. I can't get a job without going and getting a card first."

"Why," I says, "man alive, before the 'new deal' you couldn't get the card, let alone a job."

Another man was trying to get a loan from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to save his home. He had gotten offended at one of the clerks and was cussing the whole "new deal." Of course, he wouldn't have needed the loan in the first place if it hadn't been for the "old deal", and he wouldn't have had any home to worry about if it hadn't been for the "new deal." But here is a Home Owners' Loan Corporation set up by the "new deal" to save his home from foreclosure, and yet he doesn't see the political philosophy back of a humanitarian government that has raised human rights above property rights.

When I was a soldier in France there was criticism of the Y. M. C. A. Some of this criticism may have been justified, most of it was not. We drank their hot chocolate, ate their doughnuts, and then cussed them because they didn't have something else to give us. They furnished us stationery to write home on and then mailed our letters for us. One day one of the Y. M. C. A. men found a letter in the mail box addressed to God Almighty. Not even a Y. M. C. A. man knew what to do with it, so he opened it.

It said, "Dear God, please send me a hundred dollars to pay off the mortgage on our home place back in Tennessee. We are about to lose it."

That touched the Y. M. C. A. man's heart, and he went around among his friends and raised $90. He put it in an envelop and mailed it back to the boy. The next week he found another letter in the mail box addressed to God Almighty. He opened it.

It said, "Dear God, thanks for the money which you sent me, but God, the next time you send me any don't send it through the Y. M. C. A. Them boogers took out $10."

It seems to me that that story illustrates the present situation pretty well.

The most often heard criticism is to refer to the whole "new-deal" program with the implication that the total amount of money called for must be made up by taxation. My friends, that is misleading, because a Government loan is not a Government gift.

For instance, when the corn farmers were selling their corn at the ruinous price of 10 cents a bushel the Government stepped in and loaned the farmers 45 cents a bushel on that corn in sealed cribs. Most of that corn was sold at from 75 cents to 90 cents a bushel. Those loans were paid back with 5-percent interest. That money won't have to be raised by taxation. But the Government saved the corn farmers $160,000,000 that otherwise would have gone to the gamblers on the grain exchange.

Then, again, the Government loaned farmers on their livestock. I have some cattle on my ranch in northwest Oklahoma. The Government loaned me some money on those cattle to keep me from having to sacrifice them at a ruinous price. I have already paid back over half of that loan out of the sales from the cattle. Cattle are worth three times more now than when that loan was made. That money won't have to be made up by taxation. The Government will get that money back, with interest. But the Government saved the livestock industry in this country by those loans.

Then, again, there is the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the purpose of which is to refinance banking and industry. There is one R. F. C. loan on which the Government is pretty sure to lose money. It was made while Mr. Hoover was President. They loaned Charley Dawes $90,000,000 on his failing bank in Chicago. They interpreted R. F. C. to mean "Relief for Charley."

Yet even with that loan Jesse Jones' report of February 7, 1935, shows total loans under section 5 amount to a little over three and a third billion dollars, while the repayments already amount to over $2,000,000,000. That money will not have to be paid by taxation.

Then, again, some people have the erroneous idea that the Federal Housing program calls for tax money to support it. But the Government in this case is only attempting to stimulate recovery by encouraging banks and loan companies to lend their own money for building and rehabilitation. The Government guarantees the loan up to 80 percent of its value. Therefore the Government is not spending the taxpayers' money on the housing program.

Then, again, there are the loans on the homes. These are not gifts. Before a citizen could get one of these loans an appraiser had to appraise his property. Then a second appraiser had to check the first appraisal. Government attorneys then examined the title. It had to be cleared. Then the citizen and his wife had to sign the mortgage to the Government. Before that citizen can give title to that property that loan must be paid off. The Government has first mortgage on that property.

The Government not only won't lose on those loans but will actually make money and at the same time help a distressed and stricken people.

My friends, if the grain that represents bread, if the livestock that represents meat, if the banks and factories that represent commerce and industry, if the fertile fields that represent the producing power of this country, if the real estate that represents the homes of America, if the character of the American people, if all of this is not good security, then we do not have any security in this Nation, because that represents America; that is America.

Therefore I must conclude that these Government loans are not Government gifts and will not have to be paid for by taxes.

Then again the money that is used to pay the farmers for reducing their wheat and cotton acreage is being raised by the processing tax. The report from the Department of Agriculture showed that up to January 1, 1935, the processing-tax receipts were $640,000,000 plus, and the rental and benefit payments were $527,000,000 plus. So you see, my friends, that program is paying its own way.

Then again there are those critics who would have you believe our Government is about to go broke. The President by reducing the gold content of the dollar placed a credit in the United States Treasury of $2,000,000,000, and can legally still further devaluate 10 cents more on the dollar and place an additional credit to the Treasury of $800,000,000, making a total of $3,600,000,000 to the credit of the United States Treasury; and yet some would try to frighten you into believing that our Government is about to go broke.

Do you know how much monetary gold there is in the world? In round numbers, $17,000,000,000. Do you know how much of that is in the vaults of the United States Treasury? Nearly half of the total world supply. There is over $8,000,000,000 of gold in the vaults of the Treasury today now.

Why our Government could pay every greenback piece of paper money in the United States off in yellow glittering gold and have over $3,000,000,000 left in the Treasury; yet some of the critics of the "new deal" would try to frighten the people about our money.

During the last campaign one of the critics of the "new deal" was speaking to a big crowd at a country picnic. He was making fun of the "new deal's" alphabet relief. "Why," he says, "there's the A. A. A., the N. R. A., the F. E. R. A., and all the other combinations. You can't think of any combination of letters in the alphabet that doesn't stand for some form of relief. Can anybody here think of a combination of letters that don't stand for some form of relief?"

An old farmer yelled out, "Yeah; G. O. P.!"

The window washer on the skyscraper up there does not see the building. He does not see the foundation supporting the structure. He does not see the different stories of useful offices. He doesn't see the sweep of architectural beauty of the skyscraper. All he sees is the dirt on the window right in front of him.

Friends, don't just look for the dirt on the window. Back up and take a look at the whole great structure and the foundation stones of the "new deal," this new political philosophy or rather old one, I should say, for it harks back to Thomas Jefferson. It is the doctrine of equal opportunity. It would give every man the right to a job, the right to feed his children when they tug at his coat and ask for bread. It is the doctrine that says every man has a right to food when he is hungry, clothes when he is naked, and shelter from the storm, in return for his labor.

One time one of the best-to-do citizens of a little village down in Louisiana went over to the neighboring city and brought home a brand-new manufactured wagon, the first "store-bought" wagon to make its appearance in that district.

When he drove it up in the village street and stopped it there was immediately a great crowd of spectators. They began at once to criticize the wagon. One said the wheels were too weak; another said the hub was too large. Another said it was too narrow gage, and so on. Each one had some fault to find with it. Finally, they seemed to exhaust their own repertoire of criticisms, so they turned to an old darkey and asked him what he thought about the new wagon.

"Well," he says, "I'se got the same fault to find wid dat wagon dat the rest of you have. Dar's only one thing de matter wid dat wagon, and dat is dat hit ain't mine."

I fear that Mr. Hoover's memory is too short. It would seem that he has forgotten the prices of farm products 3 years ago. The story goes that a fellow was walking along the road and he saw a man over in his corral shearing a sheep, and he was holding the sheep by the tail while he cut off its wool. "Why", said the traveler, "that's not the way to hold a sheep when you shear him. You should hold him by the head."

"Yeah, I know it," said the man in a rather embarrassed manner.

"Then, why don't you hold him right?"

"Well, you see, I voted for Mr. Hoover when he first ran for President, and he was elected, and cattle went down, hogs went down, sheep went down, wool went down, lambs went down, and I just can't look this sheep in the face and take his wool."

So now in just 2 short years Mr. Hoover has forgotten 25-cent wheat, 10-cent corn, and 4-cent cotton. I fear also he has forgotten the election returns of 2 years ago. In that election Mr. Hoover reminds one of Moses. The Lord buried Moses where the people couldn't find him, and the people buried Hoover where the Lord couldn't find him.

SOME "NEW DEAL" ACCOMPLISHMENTS

This depression really began in 1920 when the financial masters deliberately and intentionally contracted the credit by calling in the loans to the little country banks. These little banks had loaned on livestock and on crops and they could not pay. They began to close their doors. They folded up like camp stools. Gradually and slowly but surely times got worse. Then the clouds of depression began Hoovering (hovering) over us. In the period from 1920 until 1932 over 7,000 banks in the United States went broke.

Immediately, upon Mr. Roosevelt's inauguration, he took action; he closed every bank in the Nation. When those banks opened, they were underwritten by the Government itself. He followed quickly with an insurance-deposit law, insuring the deposits of the people. Today your deposit is guaranteed by the Government of the United States. When you support the "new deal" you are supporting that.

Then he went over our Nation and gathered up the young boys. He took them out of the box-cars and out of the alleys and off the streets and placed them in clean conservation camps, with three squares a day. Through them he sent back to their mothers and sisters and brothers money that meant food and clothes and shelter. When you boost the "new deal" you are boosting that.

Then he passed the air mail contract law, that prevents fraud in the air mail contracts.

He also set up the Communications Commission for the control of the telephone, telegraph, and radio corporations in order to protect the people against unfair rates from these utilities.

Furthermore, he set up the Tennessee Valley Authority as a yardstick for measuring the cost of electricity. He established similar power projects at different places over the Nation. These stand like a gun behind the door, a threat to prevent the power companies from imposing unfair rates upon the people.

Furthermore, the "new deal" recognition of Russia is an entering wedge to the regaining of our lost foreign markets.

Then, again, through the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the President has distributed millions of dollars to bankrupt farmers in the form of rentals and benefit payments, making it possible for those farmers to buy shoes for their children. How could anyone object to that?

Then, again, the "new deal" investigated the house of Morgan, the most powerful banking institution in the world, and showed how J. Pierpont Morgan was evading the income-tax law, and exposed the names of high officials who were allowed to purchase their stock at a special price $17 below the market.

The "new deal" prosecuted Mr. Mitchell for evading the income-tax laws, and showed how worthless foreign securities were sold to the unsuspecting public.

The "new deal" has pending now a suit against Andrew Mellon, charging him with evading the income tax to the amount of over $3,000,000.

Surely, my friends, you must applaud the "new deal" for requiring the high and might to obey the law as well as the average citizen.

When Mr. Roosevelt came into office he found crime running rampant. He told the Federals to get busy. What has been the result? Insull, Kelley, Bates, Bailey, Dillinger, "Pretty Boy" Floyd, "Baby Face" Nelson, Bruno Hauptmann. Never in the history of America has there been such a drive on crime; when you approve the "new deal", you approve that.

Then he set up the public-works program, through which he beautified parks, constructed roads, built bridges, graded school grounds, built air fields, and constructed reservoirs.

Then he set up the N. R. A. and through it put back to work 3½ million workers and raised the wage level 26⅛ percent.

Then he set up the F. E. R. A. and through it fed the great army of unemployed. Millions of cattle were purchased from the drought-stricken areas and fed to the hungry.

Then again through the Agricultural Credit Corporation thousands of farmers have been refinanced at lower rates of interest and for longer terms, making it possible for them to save their property.

Then again he set up the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and through it saved the homes of thousands of citizens from foreclosure. He kept a roof over the heads of the distressed home owners.

No farms foreclosed, no livestock foreclosed, no homes foreclosed. The auctioneer's hammer has been thrown away during the depression. To approve the "new deal" is to approve that.

"NEW DEAL" PROMOTED WORLD PEACE

The third point which I wish to discuss is the "new deal" and world peace. I wonder how many of you could tell why the marines were sent to Nicaraugua, following the outbreak of the Nicaraguan revolution? Through the press we were told they were sent to Nicaragua to protect American lives, but it developed that no American lives were in danger.

Then we were told that they were sent down there to protect American property, but when we discovered that the United States owned no property in Nicaragua except a Canal Zone right that never was questioned, we asked for better reason. Then we were told that they were sent down there to hold a just election. Somebody suggested that the marines be sent to certain cities in the United States, and we laughed that off.

The truth is, United States capitalists had investments in Nicaragua to the amount of $18,000,000 plus. These investments were in the form of oil titles, titles to gold mines, and loans to the Nicaraguan Government. If that Government should be overturned by revolution, as it no doubt would have been save for the intervention of the United States troops, then those loans and titles would be destroyed, but if that Government which appeared to be the weaker and less popular, were kept in power at the point of American bayonets, those titles and loans would remain intact.

In short, it cost the Government of the United States six and one-half million dollars to protect private investments in Nicaragua amounting to over $18,000,000.

It cost us the lives of 150 Americans and 450 Nicaraguans and the confidence of the Latin American people in our claim that we were a peace-loving nation. For at the same moment that President Coolidge was standing on the floor of the Habana Peace Conference delivering an address on world peace and brotherly love the newsboys on the streets were shouting "Forty Nicaraguans killed in American air raid!"

In my opinion, when a man invests his money in a foreign country, that is a commercial venture. If he makes a gain, he has a right to it. If he has a loss, he has a right to that, too. As long as American citizens in a foreign country are not discriminated against because they are American citizens, then their losses are not the affair of the Government of the United States.

Why, the coconut growers of South America would make more money if the monkeys did not carry away their coconuts. Then why not send the marines down there to herd the monkeys away from the coconuts? It would be the same proposition and much more humane.

After Mr. Roosevelt's election, he called the last United States marine out of Nicaragua. Therefore the "new deal" has launched a new foreign policy, so far as the protection of private investments in foreign countries is concerned.

Those who invest abroad should have every protection that any foreigner has, but they should not expect to wrap the American flag around every dollar that they invest in foreign countries.

Thus, President Roosevelt has placed peace above profit; has by that action declared that blood is more precious than gold.

Then again when civil war broke out in Cuba the newspapers and periodicals of this country were full of agitation urging that the United States send a battleship or the Marines to put down the revolution in Cuba.

It seemed that United States capitalists who had investments in the sugar business in Cuba were eager to have the Government step in and protect their investments. For years the investors in the sugar business have made millions from their investments. Those investments were legitimate, I suppose, and perhaps commendable, and when there is a profit, the investors have a right to it, but when there is a loss, so far as I am concerned, they can have that, too.

According to the magazines and newspapers, about 90 percent of Cuba is owned by United States capitalists. We have been called Cuba's big brother, but it looks more like we are the "sugar daddy."

At any rate, there was great agitation for sending a military arm of the Government to Cuba to put down that revolution in order to protect the private investments of United States capitalists. But once more President Roosevelt came forward with a new policy so far as investments in foreign countries are concerned.

He announced that there would be no intervention in the domestic affairs of Cuba, once more placing peace above profit, once more making a long stride toward world peace.

Furthermore, it has been customary in the past to allow the manufacturers of munitions in the United States to peddle their wares in every country, and they have, even to the point of endangering world peace, to the point of violating the neutrality of the United States, sold their engines of war to belligerents.

During the World War, when President Wilson had asked that the citizens of the United States maintain strict neutrality, there were some so eager for profits that they endangered the lives of passengers who took passage on the Lusitania. They endangered the peace of America in order to sell one more cargo of death, for it was discovered by examining the clearance papers that there were munitions on board the Lusitania.

But under the "new deal", when war broke out between Paraguay and Bolivia, President Roosevelt came forward once more with a new policy in world statecraft. By proclamation he placed an embargo on the shipment of munitions from the United States to either one of those belligerents. Encouraged by the example of the United States, 18 nations of the earth declared an embargo on the shipment of munitions to those two warring nations.

Thus, my friends, the "new deal" is making long strides toward world peace.

Finally, President Roosevelt announced that he was asking a committee to draw up a plan to take the profits out of war. The "new deal" started a Senate investigation committee to investigate the profits and methods of propaganda used by the manufacturers of munitions.

That committee is still in session. Although foreign nations shunned the light of day on the activities of their manufacturers of munitions, this committee has flung open the door of the bluebeard of war. It has built public sentiment that will make it possible to pass legislation in the near future, I hope, to make war profitless.

President Roosevelt has given this program his full sanction and support. He has asked Congress to bring out legislation that will make it impossible for any person or business to profit from war, and when this shall have been done the longest single step will have been taken toward world peace.

My friends, this is the "new deal", a humanitarian program, a program of the "forgotten man", a program that places human rights above property rights, and a program of world peace that makes the United States consistent when we claim to be a peace-loving nation.

This then, my friends, is some of the program already achieved by the "new deal." It is, in my opinion, one of the greatest programs ever accomplished in the same length of time, and the "new deal" is still working on constructive measures that will result in utmost benefits to the individual, that will help redistribute the wealth of the Nation, that will make it possible for the laboring man to earn more than just a bare living, that will make agriculture profitable, and that will make it possible for America to live at peace with the other nations of the earth.

My friends, these are some of the accomplishments of the "new deal." Let us therefore salute Franklin D. Roosevelt, the leader in this great humanitarian program, the "new deal."

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 4 minutes and to speak out of the regular order.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Montana has advised me that, at least in part, he desires to discuss the bill which we propose to consider in a few moments. It seems to me that the regular order would be to wait until this bill is under consideration. I regret that the time was parceled out more than 30 days ago, but the gentleman will have ample opportunity under the 5-minute rule to discuss this matter.

Mr. MONAGHAN. If I should accede to the gentleman's request that I entirely exclude any reference to the pending measure, would that satisfy him?

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman will do that, he could conclude in 2 minutes.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I modify my unanimous-consent request to address the House for 3 minutes instead of 4 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I should not have arisen today to speak out of the regular order were it not that I felt constrained patriotically so to do. In this country today, we who are Members and receive mail know there is an urgent and insistent demand to take care of the aged people, and by so doing to create an opportunity for the young men and the young women who are constantly graduating from the schools and colleges of America with a highly specialized training, not to speak of the thousands and millions of other unemployed citizens who should be given an opportunity to earn their bread as decent, honorable Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I have been reliably informed that through parliamentary trickery and chicanery we are going to be prevented, in large measure, from having a direct vote on any adequate pension legislation during this session of Congress. I feel that would be a travesty upon the American public. The rules of this House were established for orderly procedure, not to destroy the will of the people. If the Rules Committee of this House reports out the security bill, which is, as one of my good friends from Colorado termed, "a plan without a pension", it will be perpetrating a fraud upon the American people today. The American people do not want a pension where fathers and mothers, honorable, decent American citizens, must go before an officer of the law, raise their right hands to the high heavens, and say they are paupers before they may become eligible for a pension.

Two years of untiring and ceaseless struggle on the part of President Roosevelt and the Congress, yet 11,000,000 people are still unemployed.

The malady affecting our Nation is maldistribution of wealth. Machine production from endless chain belts to mighty steam shovels occasioning compulsory, permanent unemployment is the landmark of that uneven distribution, where the few have much too much and the many have little too little.

Proper and effective regulation and legislation would conquer that condition. Jobs and jobs alone can accomplish real recovery. One successful method offers itself: Pension those noble men and women who pioneered the upbuilding of industry and commerce to make the glory of our Nation. Is it not strange that nations will adopt the most drastic measures to make war, a brutal activity of human destruction, successful, but hesitate to enact extreme measures to make employment secure and old age happy and free from worry and care?

Old-age pensions become effective only when sufficiently high to encourage men of all occupations, even in the more remunerative walks of life, to abandon their posts and create opportunity for other men. A pension should, therefore, provide the necessities of life and comforts that should accompany one's declining years. A bare pittance is not what the American people want. To work successfully, a pension must be adequate. Loud and insistent is the demand for a pension and not a pauper's dole.

It is estimated the proposed administration bill will pension only 999,898 aged persons. Actuarians say there are approximately 8,000,000 men above the age of 65 in the United States. Granting that to be accurate, removal of those 8,000,000 men from pay rolls would create opportunity for the reemployment of that number, and that in turn would create necessity for supplying their additional needs. Such increased purchasing power would occasion the reemployment directly or indirectly of the 11,000,000 persons now unemployed.

I charge any bill to be unwise which compels a proud American to bow in humble submission and take an oath of poverty before he can qualify for a pension. Any measure is open to challenge which conscripts the home of an individual upon the death of the pensioner or his widow. Better pass no pension at all than set the cause of social security back many years by providing such an inadequate sum of $15 monthly as a Federal contribution, and that only to be allowed if and insofar as the States match the amount.

A lower age limit is necessary for two reasons: First, the Government itself, in many instances, and many industries will not employ men above the age of 40. Second, in many hazardous industrial occupations the life expectancy does not include 60 or 65 years. The age limit should be sufficiently low to embrace these two classes.

At the last Congress a retirement system for railroad workers was enacted. We hope the liberal-minded United States Supreme Court will uphold its constitutionality. Its minimum was $68; maximum, $124; and age limit, 65. Put into operation in towns where railroading was the exclusive industry, all of the unemployed railroad workers were reemployed, and men for the train service were actually sought. On the basis of that experience alone, is it not reasonable to presume that a proper pension, covering all industry, would end the depression overnight?

The assertion is sometimes made that an old-age pension is a palliative, but experience teaches that it would be necessary under any system of government envisioned. With the "hope that springs eternal in the human breast", seldom is provision made against a nonproductive old age. Can you conceive a sadder sight than a former successful man plunged into bankruptcy through no fault of his own, driven to suicide or the poorhouse? A pension system would abolish that abominable, cancerous growth upon the body, political and social—the poorhouse—from this civilized Nation.

I do not feel that anyone can justify a vote for a pension which would not adequately care for the aged people of this country. I feel that in passing the so-called "Lewis bill" the House would be derelict in its duty to the American people, who are demanding an adequate pension.

Mr. Speaker, it is the only way to solve the depression.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is a source of great regret and only the persuasion of our beloved and much admired friend could induce me to agree. We must make progress, and I hope the gentleman will not speak beyond 3 minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I give the House warning now that I shall object to any further speeches. We have a very important bill to take up here, and if we do not take it up we will soon be placed in the same category as the body on the other side of the Capitol as far as wasting time is concerned. I think we should have no more speeches after this one.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the action of the Attorney General in withdrawing his appeal in the Belcher case is to be regretted. It clearly indicates an unwillingness to risk the Supreme Court's passage upon the issues involved or else it must be taken as a confession that the National Industrial Recovery Act transcends the law and is ready for discard.

It is difficult, Mr. Speaker, if not impossible, to properly appraise N. R. A. It has probably done some good but, undeniably, it has done much harm. On the whole it represents, in my opinion, the worst legislative blunder of the century. [Applause.] It is contrary to the nature of the people and is destructive of liberty. I have never been able to understand how anyone could have brought himself to the point of favoring it. Certainly, no one will content for its continuance in its present form. It is vicious in principle and has been despotic and idiotic in administration. [Applause.]

With the grip of an iron hand it has strangled small business and gloated over the wreckage which it has wrought. If we reenact this measure and make it a fixed and permanent policy of government, then free representative government in America is dead. I am sick of this governmental regimentation of business and of life. [Applause.] I do not want America to lose the art of freedom. I do not want to see the institution of free government perish. I am anxious, Mr. Speaker, that we take our feet out of the quicksand of this state socialistic nostrum and set them once and for good upon solid ground. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] was unable to be present yesterday on account of illness. I request that he be given leave of absence for the rest of the week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection?

"I LOST NO ONE OF IMPORTANCE"—NAPOLEON TO MARIE LOUISE

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection?

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take as the text of my remarks the following paragraph from a letter written by the Emperor Napoleon to his wife, Empress Marie Louise, after the sanguinary battle of Bautzen on May 30, 1813:

My health is good. I lost no one of any importance. I put my losses at 3,000 killed and wounded.

This letter, just made public, throws a flood of light on the inhuman characteristics of the butcher who terrorized Europe over a century ago. More than that, it shows the mental attitude of all of Napoleon's ilk, including international financiers and munitions dealers of modern times, who are perfectly heartless in their willingness to soak battlefields in the blood of fine young men and bathe nations in tears if by so doing they can attain their own selfish objectives.

One can easily visualize the honest, confiding peasants of France, consumed by a hero worship that knew no bounds when the call from the emperor comes, tearing themselves away from their weeping wives and children, leaving their little huts and homes which they will never see again, giving up all that life holds most dear to rush to the alluring standard of Napoleon. One can almost hear the cheering and the tumultuous shouts of "vive l'Empereur!" and with the eye of imagination one can note the ecstasy with which these deluded mortals throw their lives into the scales on the side of their supreme idol as if it were a rare and blessed privilege to be permitted to die for the great Napoleon. One can see them fighting like demons at Jena and Austerlitz, at the bridge of Lodi, and on a score of other bloody battle grounds, carrying the banner of Napoleon through hell itself.

AND THEN COMES BAUTZEN

And then comes Bautzen. Three thousand of these loyal, loving human pawns fall before the rain of lead; and then, in summing up the results of the battle, the incarnation of imperial villainy who led them to their slaughter dismisses them with the brief paragraph—

I lost no one of any importance.

The man who discovered these century-old letters of Napoleon and gave them to the world has made a contribution to history without a parallel. Among all of the human documents recorded on paper, on papyrus, on stone from the very beginning of time he has found the very acme of heartlessness; this expression of Napoleon—

I lost no one of any importance.

AT NAPOLEON'S TOMB

A few years ago I stood at the palatial tomb of Napoleon on the banks of the Seine he said he loved so well. I looked over the balustrade at the sarcophagus where rest the remains of that incarnation of blood and murder, encircled in magnificent panoply by the battle flags he had captured, and I could not become enthused, even amid these surroundings of imperial majesty, because I thought of the homes he destroyed, of the widows and orphans he made, of the suffering he caused in nearly every household in Europe in his amazing career of conquest and of violence. My thoughts went back to the women and children, who are always the most heavily penalized of all of the victims of war—in this case the loved ones of the peasants whom Napoleon led to violent death, and whom, as the record now discloses, he described as not being "of any importance."

As I stood there I said to myself that when I returned to America I would visit another tomb where I knew my emotions would be different. I said to myself that I would visit the tomb of the man who represents in history the very antithesis of Napoleon, the man whose philosophy was a ringing challenge to tyrants and a beacon of hope to all of the human race. I said to myself that on the first possible occasion I would visit the tomb of Thomas Jefferson and pay my humble tribute to the man of incomparable heart and vision who wrote into the preamble of the Declaration of Independence the precious doctrine that "all men are created equal."

AT JEFFERSON'S TOMB

Not until quite recently did I have an opportunity to carry that resolution into effect. As I stood on that Virginia mountainside, while the rays of early morning gilded the shaft where rest the remains of the greatest humanitarian since Jesus of Nazareth, I was thrilled as I never had been before.

"Here," I thought, "lies a man whose passion it was to save and to serve and not, like Napoleon's, to destroy humanity. Here lies the great champion and defender of the common people. In this hallowed presence let no one dare say that the common man is of 'no importance.'"

And I was especially thrilled by the inscription on his tombstone which he himself wrote and commanded to be placed there. It reads:

Here lies Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of American Independence, of the statute of Virginia for religious freedom, and father of the University of Virginia.

Not one word in that inscription to indicate that he had been a Member of Congress, minister to France, Secretary of State of the United States, and President of the United States. He wanted to be remembered by posterity not for the positions of distinction he had held but for the service he had rendered to humanity. That was Thomas Jefferson, the most incomparably grand figure in American history.

DEAD BUT STILL ON HORSEBACK

Napoleon is dead, but the spirit of Napoleon is still on horseback throughout the world. Dictators are thrumming the strings of war and getting ready for another mass slaughter. A tempo of heartlessness very similar to that expressed by Napoleon in his now famous letter runs through the pages of the testimony brought out by the Nye Senate Committee in its investigation of the munitions racket. A very striking Napoleon-like incident occurred in Chile 9 months ago, described on page 1995 of the hearings, when representatives of an American munitions firm gave a demonstration of the efficacy of their war gas by herding 120 prisoners in a penitentiary, locking the door so their trembling victims could not escape, and then squirting the gas from a 20-gage shotgun shell at them to see how they would react.

"I gave a demonstration on about 120 prisoners. It was a great success", reported the agent to the home company.

"Just human guinea pigs", commented that brave soldier, Senator BENNETT CLARK, who was examining the witness.

DOWN NAPOLEON'S ALLEY

While that demonstration was a small one compared with Napoleon Bonaparte's large-scale operations, it was right in Napoleon's line, and I have no doubt Napoleon would have cordially endorsed BENNETT CLARK's description, for he regarded human beings as guinea pigs, properly subject to being operated on and experimented with at any time.

But I wonder what Jesus of Nazareth would think of that "demonstration" down in Chile, Jesus who was so compassionate; whose heart was touched by every tale of human suffering; who held up as an example for all ages the mercy of the good Samaritan in helping the stranger out of the ditch and whose excoriation of the rich man for his treatment of Lazarus, a seeker of crumbs at the rich man's table, was the most terrible visitation of Divine wrath ever poured on any individual. I cannot imagine that Jesus would be pleased with the spectacle of men—convicts, it is true, but still men bearing the image of their Maker—being stood up in a row and used by munitions men as targets on which to try out their war gases.

And how like the old Napoleon himself in his disregard for the people "of no importance"—that is, the men who have to die in war—was the vice president of an American munitions firm who in 1928 wrote to Vickers, Ltd., a British munitions concern:

It is too bad the pernicious activities of our State Department have put the brake on armament orders from Peru by forcing the resumption of formal diplomatic relations with Chile.

Think of that! Think of the hundreds, if not thousands, of fine young men who probably would have been slain, of the mothers' hearts that would have been broken, of the homes that would have been wrecked, of the wives that would have been made widows, and the children that would have been made fatherless if these armament orders had not been canceled and then examine your conscience to see whether you agree with this gentleman that the State Department was guilty of "pernicious activities" when it brought about the resumption of diplomatic relations between these belligerents! If the sons of munitions manufacturers were out on the firing line I do not think these manufacturers would look with so much disdain on the well-meant efforts of the State Department to bring about peace. I think that for once their fatherly instincts would get the upper hand of their love for profits. Can you imagine a more heartless communication than the one above referred to?

Similar to that Napoleonic outburst was one by Sir Charles W. Craven, of Vickers, who, in a letter to the Electric Boat Co. in January 1933, expressed concern lest Geneva "or any other troublesome organization" should abolish the large submarines. Troublesome? Why? Because Geneva's peace activities were threatening to interfere with the sale of warships.

OUR LOW SPIRITUAL ESTATE

When I observe how selfishness has taken possession of men's hearts, how strife is deliberately engendered for profit or other selfish ends, how the spirit of brotherhood has been driven away by the spirit of "the devil take the hindmost", I sometimes marvel that the Almighty does not destroy the earth. It sometimes seems that we have lost all sense of spiritual values. I believe the depression through which we are passing, with its pandora box of woes, is a backwash of war; and yet, with a blindness that beggars description, nations go on and on piling up armaments and preparing for more wars.

REAL AND IMMINENT DANGER OF WAR

And war will come as inevitably as tomorrow will succeed today unless we get back to God; unless we get away from the Napoleonic idea that human beings are of no importance, and direct our thoughts and purposes to the brotherhood of man as exemplified in the philosophy of Jefferson. It was Jefferson's hope that every home should be the owner's castle; that in every humble cabin, no less than in marble palaces, peace and happiness should have unrestricted opportunity to reign; that every mortal under the American flag should have full enjoyment of the inestimable franchise of freedom.

Jefferson did not know and of course could not foresee the extent to which the plots and machinations of tyrants and professional war makers might become a constant menace to the peace and happiness of the people of America. If he could have had that vision I think he, who was so emphatic a proponent of the theory that "all men are created equal", would have insisted that there should be written into the Constitution of the United States a provision that all men shall be equal when it comes to the highest and most sacred act of sovereignty—the issuance of a declaration of war.

I am confident he would have foreseen that the way to exercise that right of equality is at the ballot box in a war referendum. Knowing the innermost heart of Jefferson, as I think I do, I believe he would have abhorred a condition that enables professional war makers to force a declaration of war, and that he would have insisted that such a declaration must in all justice be the solemn, consecrated act of the people themselves who have to suffer and die and pay the awful costs of war.

The bill now before the House (the McSwain bill) is intended as a deterrent to war, but with all due respect to its well-meaning author I doubt whether it would have any appreciable effect in that direction. There are various proposals before the Congress for statutes to take the profits out of war, but a mere statute does not meet the requirements. The malign influences that maneuver a nation into war will instantly and unceremoniously knock into a cocked hat any statutes that conflict with their purpose. Before their onward sweep statutes are only scraps of paper, to be changed and repudiated and discarded at will. The law we are enacting today might be repealed by the next Congress or the next day by this same Congress. Let us not deceive ourselves. What we are doing here this afternoon is perfectly futile as far as erecting a barrier to stem the tide of war is concerned. That can only be done by something solid, something that cannot be repudiated when the war crisis comes; in other words, by a constitutional amendment which has permanency and stability.

AN AMENDMENT THAT HARMONIZES WITH JEFFERSON AND LINCOLN

In harmony with what I conceive to be true Jeffersonian philosophy and in the interest of the common man, who was so dear to the heart of Jefferson and Lincoln, I have introduced an amendment to the Constitution which provides for a plebiscite on war and for taking all of the profits out of war.

The text of my amendment is as follows:

SECTION 1. Except in the event of an invasion of the United States or its territorial possessions and attack upon its citizens residing therein, the authority of Congress to declare war shall not become effective until confirmed by a majority of all votes cast thereon in a Nation-wide referendum. Congress may by law provide for the enforcement of this section.

SEC. 2. Whenever war is declared, the President shall immediately conscript and take over, for use by the Government, all the public and private war properties, yards, factories, and supplies, fixing the compensation for private properties temporarily employed for the war period at a rate not in excess of 4 percent, based on tax values assessed in the year preceding the war.

The constitutional amendment I propose would be a real preventive of war. Let the people vote on war, as my amendment provides, and there will be few wars. Give us a constitutional amendment that will really and truly take the profit out of war, and the war hazard will be greatly reduced. I ask this Congress and the people of America to support my proposed constitutional amendment (H. J. Res. No. 167), and thus remove the war menace that hangs over the Nation like a pall.

WAR PROFITS

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD by inserting for the information of the House a letter received by me this morning from William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in reference to the McSwain bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder why we are requested to have statements of individuals who are not Members of the House inserted in the RECORD, and I also question the insertion of newspaper articles. I do not believe this is a good practice to follow, whether it is Mr. Green or anyone else, and, therefore, I feel that I must object.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold his objection a moment I may say that I asked my distinguished friend the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCSWAIN] for time in general debate in order to bring this letter to the attention of the House, but no time in debate was left. I think the Members of the House would like to know the stand of the American Federation of Labor on this proposition.

Mr. RICH. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, this is a letter from William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. Can the gentleman state whether he is in favor of the passage of the bill now under discussion?

Mr. CONNERY. The letter gives a full statement of the whole thing.

Mr. MCSWAIN. The letter proposes certain amendments, and the amendments will be offered for adoption when the bill is being read for amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., April 4, 1935.

Hon. WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The American Federation of Labor is in thorough accord with the aims and purposes of H. R. 5529, to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war as they apply to all classes of our citizenship.

In order that the Members of Congress may know the position of labor upon the different provisions of H. R. 5529, I am taking the liberty of making the position of the American Federation of Labor clear and definite.

First. The people of the United States found from experience during the World War that it was necessary to confer upon the President authority to draft men for military service. Labor interposes no objection to this policy.

Second. Labor is opposed to the conscription of workers in industry. We are confident that the exercise of such power on the part of the United States would be impracticable; that it would cause social unrest to such a degree as to hamper and hinder the Government in the prosecution of its military policy. Besides it would be unfair and unjust. Because of this position of labor, we are apprehensive over the intent, purpose, and construction which might be placed upon section 3 of H. R. 5529.

This section provides that "the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to draft into the service of the United States such members of the unorganized militia, etc."; and, again, beginning at line 17, "Likewise, during such time of war or national emergency declared by Congress, the President shall have power to determine and publicly proclaim from time to time the material resources, industrial organizations, and public services over which Government control shall then be necessary", etc.

We fear that this language may be susceptible to an interpretation which would provide for industrial conscription of labor.

I respectfully suggest that this section be amended by inserting the following at the end of section 3:

"Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as conscription of those employed in industry."

I am pleased to submit to you these opinions and recommendations of the American Federation of Labor regarding H. R. 5529.

Very sincerely yours,

WM. GREEN,
President American Federation of Labor.

TO PREVENT PROFITEERING IN WAR

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5529) to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war, and thus provide for the national defense and promote peace.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, an arrangement has been made whereby the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] will control the time instead of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] on behalf of the minority.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania waives his rights in favor of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the McSwain bill, which now comes before you for consideration and for action is not an overnight product. It is no haphazard bill thrown together in a few hours or a few days' time. It comes to you after many weeks and months of hearings and after years of thought.

The chairman of the committee, Mr. McSWAIN, when he entered Congress in 1921, introduced a resolution providing for the establishment of a war-policies commission to study the whole question of taking the profits out of war and to make a report to Congress.

That resolution did not get anywhere in 1921. Mr. McSWAIN introduced it in the next Congress, and finally in 1924 the Committee on Military Affairs held extensive and thorough hearings on the resolution. As a result of those hearings the committee after due consideration reported the resolution to the House.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] and other members of the Military Committee appeared before the Rules Committee and asked for a rule that the resolution might be considered on the floor of the House.

The presentation of the matter before the Rules Committee by Mr. McSWAIN so impressed the late Theodore Burton of Ohio, who at that time was a Member of the House and of the Rules Committee, that he went to the Republican National Convention that year and had a plank written into the Republican platform declaring for the proposition of taking profits out of war.

The gentleman from Tennessee, who at that time was a Member of the House, Mr. Cordell Hull, the then chairman of the Democratic National Committee, was so impressed with the argument of Mr. McSWAIN that he went to the Democratic convention that year and succeeded in having written into the platform of that party a plank declaring for taking the profits out of war.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. In a moment. In Congress after Congress the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] introduced the resolution, but unable to get it passed by the House, finally, in 1930, he thought that perhaps if the resolution was introduced by a Republican Member it might be passed, as the Republicans were then in control of the House. So he got his colleague, the former Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Wainwright, to introduce the resolution and it was brought up on the floor of the House and passed.

The War Policy Commission consisted of 6 members of the Cabinet, 4 Members of the Senate, and 4 Members of the House. The Chairman of the Commission was the then Secretary of War, Pat Hurley. Other members of the Commission were the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. McSWAIN, Senator ROBINSON of Arkansas, Senator VANDENBERG, of Michigan, and the present Secretary of the Navy, Senator Swanson, of Virginia.

The War Policies Commission had extensive hearings, gave much consideration to the matter and made its report to Congress.

The bill which we bring to you today from the Committee on Military Affairs embodies the central thought of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] as that thought has been enlarged and strengthened through the years by the Committee on Military Affairs and by the War Policies Commission. Gentlemen raise the question that there is no provision in the bill to take excess profits through taxation. Of course, as has been stated on this floor several different times, the Committee on Military Affairs, under the rules of the House, has no jurisdiction to bring to this floor any bill that would carry or make any provision for taxation, but the committee, realizing the importance of proper taxing provisions being written into the law, realizing that the bill that is now before us must be supplemented by the right kind of taxation provisions in the law, in its report on page 2, made this statement:

> [It is] our deliberate conviction that 100 percent of all profits shown to be due to war-time business conditions shall be taxed out of the person, firm, or corporation earning such excess profits.

And the committee, in its report, goes further and calls the special attention of Congress and of the members of the Ways and Means Committee to this deliberate conviction of the Committee on Military Affairs. We are waging a war today against the depression, and no one committee has the power to bring in all the bills necessary to win that war. Some of the bills that we have been passing during the past 2 years have come out of the Ways and Means Committee, some from the Banking and Currency Committee, and many others from other committees, but the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs has no power to put taxing provisions in its bill would not excuse that committee from doing its duty and bringing out legislation that it is its particular responsibility to bring out and present to this House for consideration and action. This bill we bring to you is not a bill drafted at the other end of the Avenue, and is not a bill that we have hired somebody to write for us. It is the bill of the chairman of the committee, developed, as I have explained to you, through the years.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] has just placed in the RECORD a letter from Mr. Green, the head of the American Federation of Labor. I had the privilege of reading that letter a few moments ago, and I say to the House that the purport of that letter, as I read it, and I think I construed it properly, is simply this, that Mr. Green has no objection to the passage of this bill provided it be made certain and clear that the bill does not conscript labor, and Mr. Green in his desire that the bill be safeguarded so as not to conscript labor, is following just what was the intent and purpose of the committee when it wrote the bill. The committee does not want to conscript labor. What the committee proposes to do is to give to the President the power to clamp down a ceiling on prices at a certain date, that date to be selected by the President.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. If the gentleman hurries.

Mr. MONAGHAN. The gentleman has stated that he is not in favor of conscripting labor.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I fear I have not time to go further into that.

Mr. MONAGHAN. How does the gentleman explain section 3, which does conscript labor?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. No; the bill does not conscript labor; and as to section 3 let me say this: The intent and purpose of section 3 is simply to write into law what the Congress wrote into law at the time of the World War, and that was to have a selective draft for our troops and those who must go into the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps, but we do not conscript labor, and certainly have no intention nor desire to do so.

We provide, just as the law did at the time of the World War, that this drafting of man power to go into the Army and the Navy shall be subject to regulations and rules prescribed by the President, so that the President, in case of any future war, can do just what he did during the last war, declare exemptions so that if a man is more important working in a mill or a factory, he can continue that work rather than be drafted into the Army; but there is absolutely nothing in the bill whatever that would conscript any laborer to work in any mill, factory, or industry. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] this morning taught us how to use candor, and I want to be equally candid about the bill under discussion. It is a bill so serious in its import that I do not believe in handling it with kid gloves. I believe in coming straight from the shoulder and saying what I think about it. I am unalterably opposed to this bill. My reason for my opposition is that it fails utterly to accomplish any of the things set forth in the title. Let me read those things to you:

To prevent profiteering in time of war.

It does not do that.

To equalize the burdens of war.

It does not do that.

To provide for the national defense.

It does not do that.

And promote peace.

It does not promote peace.

Nowhere in this bill is there any provision that will accomplish any of the matters so grandiloquently claimed for it in the preamble. It is a false promise, a glittering front with nothing back of it. Examine the bill as minutely as you will, scrutinize as closely as you will and you cannot find one section which will accomplish for it what is so grandly claimed. It is a sham and a subterfuge which promises everything and does nothing. What a comfort this bill will be to the 22,000 millionaires created by war profits in the last war. What an assurance that they can again mulct the people while the young men do the fighting for them. This is not a deterrent to war; on the contrary, it encourages the war racketeers and profiteers that they have nothing to fear as far as Congress is concerned. This bill, in effect, says to them: "Go ahead and chisel and gouge and graft the people of the United States all you want to. No one cares and no one objects."

It is peculiarly apparent that the matter of taxes was very carefully omitted from the bill. Why do I say that? Because the bill professes to prevent profiteering in time of war and then completely ignores taxing those profits. Not only that, in its report on the bill the committee makes the lame excuse for this omission of taxing war profits by claiming that only the Ways and Means Committee can draft a tax measure. Let us analyze this explanation. If such a reason is a valid one, then no Member of the House and no committee can draft and sponsor a bill containing any tax feature. This is absurd. Of course, we can all draft measures that contain tax provisions, and, what is more, most of us do. Evidently the committee did not want to take the profits out of war. Wars can be paid for in three ways, Mr. Chairman.

First. By excess-profits tax.

Second. By bond issues.

Third. By a combination of both.

Evidently the committee is opposed to any excess-profits tax. That leaves only a sale of United States bonds so as to raise money to finance the next war. We used such a method in the last war. It resulted in the issuance of billions upon billions of dollars of tax-exempt bonds, which the people of this country must pay. How shall we raise the money to pay for them? By taxation, of course, and that means taxing you and me and everyone else for generations. It means that the boy who fights the war must also pay for the war. He and his children and his children's children.

Some say that the Government has not the power, or that the Government could not enforce the law if it had such a law. To all such let me say that the Government that had the power and used it, to reach out with its long, strong arm and seize the boy on the farm, in the shop, in the factory and the school and in the home, wherever it found him, and carried him off 4,000 miles to fight someone else's war—the power that could put him into a uniform and place a gun in his hands and moved him into a lice-infested, rat-infested, slimy, stinking front-line trench to be shot at and gassed and bayonetted—certainly a Government that has such immense powers and that exercises them can draft the war lords, munitions makers, and international bankers as well. But nowhere does this bill make such an effort, and therefore I am against it. If the boy in the front-line trenches refuses to fight, he gets shot. Well, let me suggest after you shoot a few war lords, munitions makers, and international bankers, you will not have much trouble with the rest. I believe in treating everyone alike. Play no favorites, as this bill does. In one case you take the boy's freedom, perhaps his health, or perhaps his life; in the other case you take the profiteers' money, and that is all. It still does not treat the soldier as well as it does the profiteer, but there is no way that we can equalize loss of health or loss of life. That is beyond human power.

Now, the defense made for this bill—and evidently a defense was needed—we have in the committe report. The committee report uses this language: "A declaration of policies." And in the first sentence is the following:

This bill is a statement of broad policy and is deliberately intended to avoid the mistake of seeking to legislate as to details so far in advance of the possible outbreak of war.

Mr. Chairman, we are legislating in this session of Congress one and one-half billion dollars getting ready for the next war—because we are warned that there is going to be one. We are warned about our enemies abroad. Well, you are not hesitating to tax the people of this Nation to pay for that one and one-half billion dollars in preparation for war in an increase of the Naval and Military Establishments, but you are sensitive about taxing the munitions makers and the war lords in regard to their profits in time of war.

The committee report says it is a declaration of policy. Why not say in that policy, "We favor taxing munitions makers and excess profits of war time way up to the hilt, lock, stock, and barrel, every dollar of it?" Why do we have to stultify ourselves with a declaration of policy? Were we sent here simply to declare policies, or were we sent here to legislate? In my humble judgment, the country is not being taxed at the rate of thousands of dollars a day to have us come here and sit here and declare policies. Our business is to legislate. If we have not the courage or ability to legislate, then let us resign and let somebody come here who has the courage and ability to legislate in a definite and certain manner about war profits without side-stepping the issue.

Let me refer briefly to what I believe this bill provides. It says in its declaration:

We believe that the Congress that will be sitting at such future declaration of war will be pleased to have this deliberate expression of policy upon the statute books in the form of general legislation.

Why do you not mention taxes in this declaration of policy? To my mind, the bill is absolutely colorless; it is a flabby, spineless document which ought to be rechristened "The jellyfish bill." This jellyfish bill has nothing in it that is going to tax the profits of the next war. I suggest, in order to more fully take care of its provisions in the spirit in which it is now drafted, it ought to be amended to read as follows:

PREAMBLE

To prevent some profiteering in time of war and to unequalize the burdens of war.

That is the preamble—

Be it enacted, etc.—

SECTION 1. Nobody shall make any profits from war.

SEC. 2. The above provision applies only to labor and to agriculture.

SEC. 3. All male citizens between the ages of 21 and 31 shall be drafted.

SEC. 4. No excess-profit taxes shall be levied until the War Tax Commission shall so order.

SEC. 5. The War Tax Commission shall consist of the following: The Bethlehem Steel Corporation, the Du Pont Co., and the American Zinc, Lead & Smelting Co.

Why? Because they are unusually qualified to deal with profits of war.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. No. Please do not interrupt me.

The Bethlehem Steel Co. made in excess of 1,300-percent profit in 1916 before we ever got into the war, and made a great deal more after we were in the war.

The Du Pont Co. made in excess of 1,400 percent per year, mind you, in the year 1916, before we ever got into the war.

The American Zinc, Lead & Smelting Co. made 4,500 percent in 1916.

That is why I say they are well qualified to serve on this board.

What is the record of the Du Pont Co.? Let me read to you from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 15, 1935, at page 460, Senator NYE speaking:

Here, for example, is a memorandum concerning a special meeting of the War Industries Board, a memorandum signed by the secretary of that Board. I read from it:

"The Secretary of War informed the Board that the Du Pont Co. had refused to undertake the building of the proposed powder plant on any other terms than those contained in their last proposition."

The Du Pont Co. delayed for 3 months while we were in the midst of war and refused to build a plant to make powder for the Government and take the profit that the Government offered. Instead, they delayed 3 months until the Government was so up against it that it had to agree to the Du Pont proposition.

Now, what is the answer to any boy who is drafted, when he is facing the enemy and strikes for higher wages? What would happen to him? He would get shot. You know it and so do I know it. That is what should have been done with the Du Pont officials when they refused to take the proposition of the Government.

I am opposed to this bill for the reason that it contains no tax measure to draft excess profits made out of war. Profits in war means promotion of war. If you pass the excess-profits tax now, you will remove one of the greatest motives for promoting war, namely, profit. The second reason is that you cannot possibly pass a measure during war time that will tax excess profits. My reason for saying that is our experience during the World War. Great Britain passed a bill the first year of the war taxing excess profits 50 percent. The next year they increased it to 60 percent and the next year to 80 percent, and it remained 80 percent until the war was over.

Our own Senator from Wisconsin, the late Robert M. La Follette, attempted to model a law on the British law. He introduced it; and what happened to him?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF] has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Senator La Follette said in the debate in the Senate that if we sent our boys across some of them would never come back. He said that if we sent our money across we would never get it back. Today we cannot even get back the interest on that money. We spent $25,000,000,000 fighting somebody else's war 4,000 miles away, and we loaned the Allies $12,000,000,000 more of our money after it was over. With this money obtained from us, raised by taxing our people, the allied governments paid off the munition makers and international bankers, but refused to pay even the interest on our loan, and now our people find that they have paid all the Allies' debts to the munition makers and international bankers with money which they raised by taxing themselves. And now this bill refuses to tax the war profits. Not only that but a rule was brought into this House on this bill, prohibiting any of us from amending it by placing on it a tax measure of any kind. This means that when it goes to the Senate that body will also be blocked from placing any tax amendment on the bill. Once more the people of this country have been gypped.

The late Senator La Follette also said in that debate that if we got into this war we would have the greatest inflation of prices that this country had even seen, but that when it was over we would have one of the greatest deflations and corresponding depressions that this country had ever seen. What did he get for that statesmanship? Nothing but vituperation and abuse, there being even a resolution introduced to expel him from the United States Senate on the ground that he was disloyal. In my humble judgment, of all the statesmen on this side of the Atlantic during those hectic troubled times the man with the clearest vision, who read the future accurately was our own Senator from Wisconsin, the late Robert M. La Follette. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to a member of the committee, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, before speaking in favor of this bill, I want to remove any doubts any Member of this House may have as to any attempt or any desire on the part of any member of the Committee on Military Affairs to conscript labor. If any Member has any doubt, in view of the statements that have already been made, I call his attention to the original bill introduced to carry out the purpose for which this legislation is sought, House Resolution 3, introduced by the chairman of the committee on January 3. Section 2 thereof contained in connection with the words "price, rent, rate, commission", and so forth, the word "wage." During the hearings on that bill and the examination of The Assistant Secretary of War and other witnesses I asked Assistant Secretary of War Woodring as to the deletion of the word "wage", and he replied:

I am against the word "wage" in line 6. Personally, I am against the freezing of wages. I am against the conscription of labor.

In order to avoid any possible misunderstanding, the word "wage" was thrown out of the bill, and it does not appear in this bill which is now before this House with the recommendation and the approval of the Committee on Military Affairs.

In discussing this legislation we must realize fully that yesterday, the 3d day of April, was the eighteenth anniversary of the severance of diplomatic relations between this country and the Imperial Government of Germany; that Saturday of this week, April 6, will be the eighteenth anniversary of the declaration of war by the United States of America against Germany. In addition to the terrible toll of death, destruction, and personal injury which resulted from our participation in that war, the testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs shows that in 1918 we spent $19,000,000,000 for such items as gloves, shoes, socks, underwear, clothing, and other wearing apparel for our soldiers; that at least $14,000,000,000 of that $19,000,000,000 went to profiteers who sold those goods to the American Government.

As a result of that outrageous procedure approximately 22,000 people in this country went from nothing to become millionaires. Do you want to see such a tragedy reenacted? If you do not, you must agree with me that after 18 years from our entrance and participation in the World War it is high time for us to take action and make such a recurrence unlawful and impossible.

In 1922 I had the honor to be elected a Member of this House, and there still ring in my ears these words of President Warren G. Harding:

Our supreme task is the resumption of our onward, normal way. Reconstruction, readjustment, restoration—all these must follow. I would like to hasten them. If it will lighten the spirit and add to the resolution with which we take up the task, let me repeat for our Nation we shall give no people just cause to make war upon us; we hold no national prejudice; we entertain no spirit of revenge; we do not hate; we do not covet; we dream of no conquest nor boast of armed prowess.

If, despite this attitude, war is again forced upon us, I earnestly hope a way may be found which will unify our individual and collective strength and consecrate all America, materially and spiritually, body and soul, to national defense. I can vision the ideal republic, where every man and woman is called under the flag for assignment to duty for whatever service, military or civic, the individual is best fitted; where we may call to universal service every plant, agency, or facility, all in the sublime sacrifice for country, and not one penny of war profit shall inure to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination, but all above the normal shall flow into the defense chest of the Nation. There is something inherently wrong, something out of accord with the ideals of representative democracy, when one portion of our citizenship turns its activities to private gain amid defensive war while another is fighting, sacrificing, or dying for national preservation.

This sentiment was several times repeated by President Harding, and notably on December 8, 1922, in his message to Congress:

The proposed survey of a plan to draft all the resources of the Republic, human and material, for national defense may well have your approval. I commended such a program in case of future war, in the inaugural address of March 4, 1921, and every experience in the adjustment and liquidation of war claims and settlement of war obligations persuades me we ought to be prepared for such universal call to armed defense.

This sentiment, Mr. Chairman, has been echoed and reechoed by each succeeding President, and as early as 1924 both the Republican and the Democratic Parties had in their platforms planks providing for the enactment of just such legislation as is called for in this bill. Extracts therefrom are as follows:

EXTRACT FROM THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM OF 1924

WAR

War is a relic of barbarism, and it is justifiable only as a measure of defense.

In the event of war, in which the man power of the Nation is drafted, all other resources should likewise be drafted. This will tend to discourage war by depriving it of its profits.

EXTRACT FROM THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM OF 1924

UNIVERSAL MOBILIZATION IN TIME OF WAR

We believe that in time of war the Nation should draft for its defense not only its citizens but also every resource which may contribute to success. The country demands that should the United States ever again be called upon to defend itself by arms the President be empowered to draft such material resources and such services as may be required, and to stabilize the prices of services and essential commodities, whether utilized in actual warfare or private activity.

Now, I want to read you, if I may, a statement that seems to me to demonstrate the necessity of this legislation as well as any words I have heard from any living soul, and that is a statement made by John R. Quinn, national commander of the American Legion, 11 years ago. In January 1924 he said this:

War means a time of national struggle for self-preservation, a time when every part of the population should give the best service of which it is capable for the national welfare. Obviously there is no equality of sacrifice if one man goes to the front to be killed or maimed while another stays at home in perfect safety to make, perhaps, a large fortune from war contracts.

We know that there was, during the last war, profiteering that in some instances can only be stigmatized as "outrageous." We do not want that to occur again. We want—I speak for the Legion now—to take the profit element out of war, and I believe that if we can do so we will have taken a long step toward world peace.

It does not mean in the least that America will be hampered in carrying on a war—on the contrary, this country would be 100 percent prepared all the time. It would mean, if our plan is adopted, that all the resources of the Nation, human and material, would be thrown into the struggle without stint, with the sole purpose of bringing victory as rapidly as possible. When other nations let the fact "sink in", as our expressive phrase has it, they would be little disposed toward any aggressive tendencies as far as we were concerned.

Great financiers and manufacturers have in the past made large profits from war. That practice goes back to revolutionary days, though there was nowhere near so much profiteering then, of course, as there has been since.

A good many fortunes were made in the Civil War days, but they have been deodorized by the lapse of time. If we serve notice upon the financiers and manufacturers that their chance of exorbitant profits has ended, they will be less disposed than they are now to look upon war as a game. They will adopt the same attitude toward it as that of the young people who must fight wars—they will view war with disgust and aversion and will be only too glad to avoid it.

The American Legion has advocated a universal draft plan covering the draft of material as well as human resources before two sessions of Congress. It is one of our five major legislative demands. All the public hears about, as a rule, is the "bonus"—the adjusted-compensation bill. But the whole five measures are linked together and we are going to do our best to put them all through. Representative Royal C. Johnson, of South Dakota, will introduce the bill again in the present session of Congress.

We believe that in the event of war—and we want the country spared from war, if it is humanly possible—the President should be empowered to draft into service any necessary part of the unorganized militia; that he should have more complete control over material resources and industrial organizations than is provided for under the National Defense Act; that control over prices of commodities and over service should be established, both for the Government and for the people; and that such auxiliaries as were formed in the last war to administer essential operations should be reestablished—the War Industries Board, War Trade Board, Food and Fuel Administrations, and the like.

NO DRAFT WITHOUT WAR OR EMERGENCY

The draft measure we advocate would not be operative unless Congress had declared war or the existence of some other emergency demanding the use of armed forces. The provision of the statute other than the draft would become operative whenever war appeared imminent, in order that the President might establish machinery to stabilize conditions before the economic adjustments of the country were thrown out of gear.

Business men will take Government contracts if they can be assured that the prices of raw material, labor, power, and transportation will remain stable, and labor in general will be content if it can be assured that the cost of food, shelter, and clothing will remain stable.

We believe that all necessary stabilizing machinery can be made operative immediately upon the imminence of an emergency, and that a long and important step will have been taken in organizing the national defense in an orderly, equitable, and economical manner.

If such a law had been in operation in 1917, we believe, our real activity at the front would have been advanced many months, our Nation would have been saved many billions of dollars, and adjusted compensation would not now be necessary. The purpose of the statute is to take the profit out of war and thereby to preclude the many economic maladjustments that have followed, thus far, practically every great war in history.

The American Legion is for peace, but we believe, as George Washington did, that the best assurance of peace is to be found in a reasonable condition of preparedness. We do not believe that there should be special privilege for anyone in time of war. The American Legion tells the Nation today that its motto for the future, in the event of national emergency, must be "equal service for all and special profit for none."

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me say that delay is dangerous in a troubled world such as we live in today. Let us pass this bill after 18 years of delay, have it signed by the President of the United States, and pray that we shall make it strong and effective so that on Saturday of this week, on the observance of the eighteenth anniversary of our declaration of war against the Imperial Government of Germany, we may say, in the words of the poets, with genuine sympathy in our hearts and eternal hope in our minds:

Last night I dreamed the Cross of God
Stood rooted deep in Flanders sod.
And wide its outstretched arms were spread
Over the fields of living dead.
Mile upon mile the crosses rose
Shepherding sleep's supreme repose.
And as I looked they seemed to be Merged into conquering Cavalry.
O, Jesu, more than Savior now,
Soldier, Brother, Captain, Thou,
Each of Thy Soldiers of the Cross
Treasures the gift that man calls loss.
Oh, what an Easter lies concealed Beneath the flowers on Flanders Field.

Oh, specious days of glory and of grieving!
Oh, sounding hours of lustre and of loss!
Let us be glad we lived—you—still believing
The God who gave the cannon gave the cross.
Let us be sure amid these seething passions
The lusts of blood and hate our souls abhor.
The power that order out of chaos fashions
Smites fiercest in the wrath, red forge of war.
Have faith, fear not, fight on amid the battle hell;
Love triumphs, Freedom beacons: "All is well."

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, at the very outset I wish to specifically state that at no time is it my intention to impeach either the sincerity or the good faith not only of the author of this bill, but of the other gentlemen of the committee who worked so earnestly with him. I believe that in all sincerity and in all good faith the gentlemen who are sponsoring this bill really sought and had the purpose in mind to make war unprofitable. But that is not the issue here.

The issue, as I see it, is what will be the result? If this bill will make war unprofitable, even to a certain percentage, then I believe that the House should pass the bill, but if the result of this bill really perpetuates the profits of the profiteers during a war and if the result of the adoption of this bill is to stave off or head off a real bill which will not only have teeth in it, but which will have fangs in it, then I respectfully submit there is only one thing to do and that is to defeat this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there is any disagreement between those of us who are opposed to this bill and the gentlemen who are in favor of this bill as to the purpose. As a matter of fact, the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. McSwain, himself said in his report that he believes the profits should be taxed to the extent of 100 percent in order to make war unprofitable. However, he states that his committee does not have the power of inserting tax provisions in a bill, consequently they present this bill without tax provisions therein. I say in reply to that statement that the only manner in which you can eliminate profit from war is to tax the profits made out of war. It is by means of taxation that you eliminate every possibility of profit from war. If that is so, then why present this House an innocuous, meaningless bill, one which does not accomplish the very purpose which we seek to accomplish? Why should this bill be presented if it is not the purpose to forestall the consideration of a real bill which will tax the profits out of war?

Mr. Chairman, I have prepared a comparison of the provisions of this bill with the provisions that existed during the World War, and I respectfully submit to the Members of the House that the provisions in this present bill are identical with the provisions which existed during the World War, and if enormous profits were possible under the provisions existing in 1917 and 1918, why will not the same enormous profits be possible and probable in the event of a future war under the present bill, which is a repetition of the war provisions of 1917 and 1918.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. McSWAIN. I know the gentleman intends to be entirely accurate. Does he recall that there was not the scratch of a pen in the way of statutory power to set up the War Policies Commission during the World War or any of the functions exercised by it, whether it involved price control or otherwise?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I disagree with the gentleman for this reason: I shall now read some of the provisions that were issued during the World War, and after I have read those provisions I believe that they in and of themselves will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. McSWAIN. Very well.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. First of all, we take the first provision of the bill before us, which provides—

That whenever Congress shall declare war or the existence of an emergency due to the imminence of war, then, from and after a date prior to such declaration, which date the President is hereby authorized and directed to determine and publicly proclaim, it shall be unlawful for any person to buy, sell, or otherwise contract for any article or thing at a higher rate, rent, price, commission, compensation, or reward than was in effect at the date so determined.

I now read from some of the provisions which existed in 1917.

First of all, I quote the Executive Order 2765, of November 27, 1917. It authorized the Food Administrator to find that the reasonable profits on storage facilities were those which the industry were obtaining prior to July 1, 1914.

I will come now to what the gentleman has in mind. The first section of the bill before us provides that the President shall fix a price existing at a certain date, which he shall choose, prior to the declaration of war or the existence of an emergency. This Executive Order fixed the date prior to the war as July 1, 1914. Here you have a most striking similarity.

I continue from the war provisions of 1917 and 1918, the Naval Emergency Fund Act, 39 Statutes 1168: It provided—

If any person owning, leasing, or operating any factory equipped for the building or production or ships or war material for the Navy shall refuse to build, supply, furnish, or manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of ships or war material so ordered at such reasonable price as shall be determined by the President, the President may take immediate possession of any factory of such person or of any part thereof without taking possession of the entire factory, and may use the same at such time and in such manners as he may consider necessary or expedient.

Section 2 of the bill before us reads as follows:

Whenever in the sole discretion of the President he shall determine that any maximum price, rent, rate, commission, compensation, or reward shall be adjusted either upward or downward he is hereby authorized to make and publicly proclaim such adjustment, and such adjustment shall have the full force and effect under this statute of such price, rent, rate, commission, compensation, or reward before such adjustment.

Here, again you have practically, if not word for word, the idea and the plan which existed during the World War. What happened under the plan which existed in 1917 will unavoidably and necessarily be repeated under the present bill. Let us see what occurred under the similar war acts.

For instance, the Electric Boat Co. between 1910 and 1913 declared no dividends, but between 1915 and 1918, the war years, the average annual earnings were $4,065,481, and the average annual dividend for the years 1914 to 1917 was 18 percent.

Next I take up the Newport News Ship Building & Dry Dock Co., and remember they were operating under provisions which are identical with the provisions which this bill now intends to promulgate as the law of the land. The profits of the Newport News Ship Building & Dry Dock Co. in 1917 were $3,298,000. Percentage of profit on invested capital, 96 percent; 1918, 72 percent; 1919, 70 percent; 1920, 62 percent. Profits in large percentage continued to be made.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have a complete table here showing the similarity between this bill and the war acts and orders of 1917 and 1918, and a list of companies and the profits that were made, and I ask unanimous consent that I may insert this table in the RECORD as a part of my remarks at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

(See p. 5041 for insertion.)

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman remember that during the World War bituminous coal at one time went to ridiculously high prices per ton, as high as $15 and $18 per ton, and that by Executive order it was reduced down and fixed at $3 per ton?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes; but the gentleman forgets that you may fix prices at a certain level and you may keep the prices down to that particular level, but because of the conditions and the great demand that exists during a war the volume of sales is so great that while the prices remain at a fixed level your profit continues to increase. I shall refer the gentleman to the huge profits which were made by the coal companies.

Mr. MAY. Before the gentleman gets to that I would like him to consider section 4, on page 3 of the bill, which provides for a license arrangement by which industry may be controlled and the price fixed.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes; I am coming to those provisions and will show that they are similar to those which existed in 1917 in a moment.

Mr. MAY. The same kind of licensing they are complaining about so much now in the regulation of farming.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. May I say to the gentleman that we did have certain licensing provisions prevailing in 1917, and I shall read them to the Committee.

For instance, another act which is similar to section 2 of the bill is the National Defense Act (39 Stat. 213):

> Any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry owning or operating any plant equipped for the manufacture of arms or ammunition or parts of ammunition or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army who shall refuse to furnish such arms, ammunition, or parts of ammunition, or other supplies or equipment at a reasonable price as determined by the Secretary of War shall have its plants sequestered and operated by the United States Army.

Can the gentleman or any of the proponents of this bill show me any difference between this provision and any of your price-fixing or price-control provisions in the bill? I yield for the purpose of securing an answer.

Mr. McSWAIN. It is perfectly plain that that statute dealt with War Department munitions only, whereas this is an offer to deal with the entire price structure affecting every activity; civilian, military, or otherwise.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Then, how does the gentleman differentiate the provisions in his bill? The gentleman says this particular provision applies only to ammunition. How about the Emergency Shipping Fund Act, which I have just read earlier in my speech? That certainly does not apply only to ammunition.

Mr. McSWAIN. It applies to the Navy Department only.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. All right; then we will go to other matters.

Steel—prices of steel were fixed by the President and the War Industries Board September 24, 1917, and October 11, 1917, and I need not bore you by giving you a list of the enormous profits that were made by the steel companies.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman put that in the RECORD?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am going to do so.

Then there is the Food Control Act, the twelfth section thereof (40 Stat. 276), and I trust the gentleman will follow this:

> That whenever the President shall find it necessary to secure an adequate supply of the necessaries for the support of the Army or the maintenance of the Navy or for any other public use connected with the common defense, he is authorized to requisition and take over for use or operation by the Government any factory, packing house, oil pipe line, mine, or any other plant or any part thereof, in or through which any necessaries are or may be manufactured, produced, prepared, or mined, and to operate the same. The United States shall make just compensation to be determined by the President.

Again, in the Food Control Act, section 10—

> That the President is authorized to requisition foods, feeds, fuels, and other supplies necessary to the support of the Army or to the maintenance of the Navy or any other public use connected with the common defense, and he shall ascertain and pay a just compensation therefor.

I again yield to the chairman of the committee to show wherein the provisions of the gentleman's bill in attempting to fix and freeze prices on matters other than ammunition differ from the provisions I have just read from the Food Control Act.

Mr. McSWAIN. Here is a provision to give the President of the United States power which he may invoke immediately on the outbreak of war. The trouble with all those statutes was that they were piecemeal efforts after we got into the war to correct the situation of mounting prices that had already reached mountain heights before we ever declared war. The gentleman will recall that the enormous demand for American munitions and supplies made by the allied powers in Europe had mounted prices enormously before April 6, 1917. These were piecemeal efforts after April 6, 1917, as to the Navy, the Army, the Food Control Act, seeking to control a runaway market. We propose now, on the very day we declare war, to clamp down a ceiling on the prices of all commodities, munitions, food, clothing, and prices of every sort and compensation for every service.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Exactly. The gentleman's bill will give the President power to select a date prior to war and to fix prices as of that date and these war provisions did the same thing, and failed to take profits out of war.

Mr. KLOEB. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Certainly, but before I yield may I say that every one of these provisions gave the President the power to fix the prices as they existed on a certain date, and that date prior to war, and the President did so fix the prices through his various boards as of those dates and yet, while the prices may have remained the same, because of the increase in volume of sales, which is a natural consequence and result of war, the profits increased and kept on increasing, sometimes to the extent of 200 percent, and at other times, as my table will show, to the extent of over 1,000 percent.

Mr. McSWAIN. Not only was an order issued by authority of the President by the War Industries Board fixing prices but the prices that had prevailed prior to our entry into the war were cut down and cut down in many respects, and if the war had lasted another year we would have controlled the runaway market that had existed long before the War Industries Board began to function.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. But certainly the gentleman will not say that that scheme took the profits out of war?

Mr. McSWAIN. It was taking the profits out of war.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I disagree. It is apparent to everybody that if there ever was a war that was profitable, if there ever was a war where profiteers breeded and lived like parasites on the life of America, it was the war of 1917 and 1918. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. I agree with what the gentleman states, but does not the gentleman realize that but for the statutes he has cited, and but for the efforts of the War Industries Board, the prices would have been 10 times as high, perhaps, and the profits 10 times as great, and is not the gentleman desirous of making an effort to stop this?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am, but the difference between the gentleman from South Carolina and myself is this: The gentleman's bill, like the war provisions, would leave a certain large amount of profit in war. My opinion, or my idea, as well as the idea of the Nye committee, is to eliminate all profit from war—not because we want an efficacious war, not because we are interested in war, but because we want to preserve peace; and when we once have removed all profit from war, you will have eliminated the profit motive from war and you will abolish 75 percent of the cause of war. If you leave any percentage of profit in war, that percentage will be a corresponding contributing percentage in the cause for war.

Mr. KLOEB. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. KLOEB. The gentleman will pardon me for observing that the gentleman has read four Executive orders, all of which are directed to certain articles. If the Government commandeers those articles, it must pay the market price when it commandeers them.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The Executive Order Numbered 2765 authorizes the Food Administrator to find the reasonable profits on storage facilities as fixed at certain dates prior to war.

(The time of Mr. MARCANTONIO having expired, he was given 5 minutes more.)

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McFARLANE. Along the line of the statement made by the gentleman, may I call attention to the investigation before the Nye committee on profiteering. Take the Remington Arms Co.; it informed the Senate Munitions Committee that in time of peace it could produce 1,000 cartridges for the Army for 3.535 cents apiece at the rate of 10,000,000 a year, and if orders were increased, as they would be in war time, to 100,000,000 the cost would drop to 2.88 cents apiece, a drop of 0.747 apiece, which is $7.47 per thousand, or $7,470 per million. This bill, by fixing prices at a pre-war level, would add at least $747,000 to the profits of the Remington Arms Co. for every hundred million cartridges it manufactured.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Exactly; and this bill will do the same thing. It just fixes the price under its provisions and does not control the profits. There is a vital difference between the two.

Mr. McFARLANE. The Du Pont Co. showed the Senate Munitions Committee that the price of powder would be much lower with huge war orders than with small peace orders. With annual orders of only 600,000 pounds the price would be $1.80 per pound. That is the price which would prevail before we got into the war. That is the price the McSwain bill would fix. But, according to the Du Pont Co. itself, when orders increased to 3,000,000 pounds a year or over, the price could actually be 60 cents. This McSwain bill, by fixing prices at 3 times what they should be, would give the Du Pont Co. an unwarranted profit of $1.20 per pound, or on a war-time production of 1,000,000 pounds, an unnecessary profit of $120,000,000.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. This bill is wholly inadequate to meet the situation. Now, I read from the Food Control Act, Act 40, Statute 276:

> The President of the United States shall be and he is hereby authorized and empowered whenever and wherever, in his judgment necessary for the efficient prosecution of the war to fix the price of coal and coke wherever and whenever sold, either by producer or dealer, said authority and power may be exercised by him in each case through the agency of the Federal Trade Commission.
> If the producer refuses to obey, the President may requisition the plant, or, at his discretion, he is hereby authorized and empowered to require any or all producers of coal or coke to sell their products only to the United States through an agency to be designated by the President, such agency to regulate the resale of such coal and coke and the prices thereof.

You have not anything stronger than that in your bill, and that is what we had in 1917. That was much stronger than your bill and still it failed to take the profit out of war.

On September 6, 1917, the Fuel Administrator fixed the price for all grades of coal. On December 24, 1917, the Fuel Administrator ordered that every sales contract contain a clause giving the Administrator or the President power to fix the price of coal. The War Industries Board, August 21, 1917, set the price for bituminous coal. What happened to coal? Taking the figure 100 as an index of profit, in 1913–14 it was 100; then in 1915 it was 97; in 1916 it was 106; in 1917 it was 160; and after 1 year of war, after a full year of price control, in 1918 it was 207. How did you take the profits out of the coal industry?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman state to the House whether or not after he did fix the price it sold continuously from that time on at $3 a ton, and no more? I was in the business and I know.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Here I have your figures: In 1918, after 1 year of price control, it went up to 207, and in November 1918 it was 223.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman recall that at some time under the Food Control Act they fixed the price of the farmer's wheat at $2 a bushel, when it would have gone to $5 a bushel, and thereby robbed him of $1,000,000,000?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I do not doubt that at all.

Mr. TRUAX. I was a farmer then, and I remember all about it.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I have only a few minutes left, and I cannot yield further.

Now, we take wool prices. They were fixed for 1918 by the War Industries Board, which declared that if it be found that the dealer's gross profits are in excess of 5 percent on a season's business, then such gross profits shall be disposed of as the Government decides. And what happened with wool? Again, taking the figure 100 as the basis: for 1913–14 it was 100, in 1915 it was 113, in 1916 it was 139, and in 1917 it was 208.

I have obtained consent and shall insert all of these figures in the RECORD. What I have sought to point out here is that substantially the war provisions of 1917 and 1918 constitute the bill which the Committee on Military Affairs has presented before this House. I respectfully submit that if those provisions failed during the last war, if all they accomplished was to fix prices at a certain level but did not control profits, then we should not repeat the same errors and the same blunders of 1917 and 1918. I have no quarrel at all with the purpose and intent and the sincerity of the committee. I believe they are sincere in their purpose, I believe their purpose and mine are the same, but I contend that you cannot accomplish those purposes by means of this bill. It failed in 1917 and 1918, and it will certainly fail again. [Applause.]

(4) Conclusions of House of Representatives Select Committee on Expenditures of War Department, 66th Cong., 3d sess., Rept. 1400, 93: "The profits of the copper producers from negotiations with the Government during the war period were extravagant and excessive, despite the fact that the copper producers were at the mercy of the Government's power to requisition their mines under the powers conferred by the Food Control Act.

(5) The price level fixed on Sept. 21, 1917 actually raised the price of copper by 6.84 cents per pound; and on June 15, 1918, the price was again raised 2½ cents per pound.

K. Trading with the Enemy Act (40 Stat. 411, 10c), provides for the use of patents and copyrights owned or controlled by an enemy or ally of enemy during the existence of the state of war under a license from the President, who "may prescribe the conditions of this license, including the prices of the articles and produce necessary to the health of the military and naval forces of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war."

(1) Remington Arms Co. delivered to the British Government 700,000 Enfield rifles, a British patent.

L. Food Control Act (40 Stat. 276, 13): That whenever the President finds it essential to prevent undue enhancement, depression, or fluctuation of prices of, or in order to prevent injurious speculation in, or in order to prevent unjust market manipulation or unfair and misleading quotations of prices of necessaries (foods, feeds, fuel, including fuel oil and natural gas, and fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients, tools, utensils, implements, machinery, and equipment required for the actual production of foods, feeds, or fuel) * * * he is authorized to prescribe such regulations governing or may either wholly or partially prohibit, operations, practices, and transactions at, on, in, or under the rules of any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business.

M. Food Control Act (40 Stat. 276 (5): Whenever the President shall find that any storage charge, commission, profit, or practice, any licensee is unjust or unreasonable, or discriminatory, or unfair or wasteful * * * (he) he may, in its lieu * * * find what is a "just, reasonable, nondiscriminatory and fair storage charge, commission, profit, or practice, and in any proceeding brought in any court such order of the President shall be prima facie evidence."

(Under this statute, Executive Order 2765 (Nov. 27, 1917) authorized the Food Administrator to find that such "just, reasonable, and fair profit is the normal average profit which persons engaged in the same business prior to July 1, 1914, under free competitive conditions; to indicate * * * what margin over cost will return such * * * profit and to take such legal steps as are authorized by said act to prohibit the taking of any greater profit."

N. Food Control Act (40 Stat. 276): Nos. 4, 8, 9, and 26 attempt to prevent the price rises by barring destruction, hoarding, monopolization, and discrimination (no. 4); destruction (3); restriction of supply or distribution (no. 9); and destruction (no. 26).

O. Food Control Act (40 Stat. 276), as amended by 41 Stat. 297): That it is hereby made unlawful for any person wilfully * * * to make any unjust or unreasonable rate or charge in handling or dealing in or with any necessaries; to conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person * * * (e) to exact excessive prices for any necessaries.

This section was held to be unconstitutional in 1921 in United States v. Cohen Grocery Co. (255 U. S. 81) as in contravention of the fifth and sixth amendments, for being too uncertain and for failing to set up an ascertainable standard for determination of when one was violating the statute. But, it is to be noted that this decision does not invalidate the fact shown herein that price setting is ineffective because the decision came down after the war was over, and long after all the price setting had been both attempted and done by all the governmental agencies involved therein, as shown in this chart. The only conclusion to be drawn from this case is that the most drastic price setting scheme (so drastic as to be unconstitutional) failed of its purpose to prevent profiteering.

"The distinguishing feature of price control in the food groups was the scheme of fixing 'margins, of profit' only" (War Industries Board Report, 1921, p. 75).

And a specific "fair price" arrangement supplanting the earlier one was promulgated for millers on July 24, 1918, overriding earlier price control over millers.

(6) Millers (S. Doc. 259), under control of Food Board the millers made an average profit of 44.7 percent between July 1, 1917 and 1918. One Minneapolis miller made 5,000 percent profit on capital (and 1 cannery 4,244 percent) in 1 year.

(7) Sugar refiners (same source) under food control, threefold increase in profits. In 1917 beet-sugar producers made 45 percent on capital after taxes had been deducted, and the cane-sugar producers made 191 percent on capital.

No. 3. During the period of any war or emergency declared by Congress hereunder the President is authorized to determine and by proclamation announce what classes of public service, or of dealers or manufacturers of any article or commodity, shall be required to operate under licenses, to fix the conditions of such licenses, and to grant licenses under such conditions. After such determination by the President it shall be unlawful for any public service, dealer, or manufacturer in such determined classes to engage in business without such license.

Food Control Act (40 Stat. 276) No. 5: That, from time to time, whenever the President shall find it essential to license the importation, manufacture, storage, mining, or distribution of any necessaries, in order to carry into effect the purposes of this act, and shall publicly so announce, no person shall engage or carry on any such business * * * unless he shall secure and hold a license issued pursuant to this section. The President is authorized to issue such licenses and to prescribe regulations for the issuance of such licenses.

No. 4. During the period of any war or emergency declared by Congress hereunder the President is authorized to determine the order of priority in which any manufacturer, dealer, or public service in the United States shall fill customer's orders or other orders, and after such determination it shall be unlawful for any such manufacturer, dealer, or public service to fill such orders in any other order or priority.

War Industries Board had in its functions the establishment of priorities and preferences. Its first priority order issued Sept. 25, 1917, and later these orders "became most effective." In all, 60 priority circulars were issued and its preference lists covered 73 industries and 7,000 separate plants.

Even a labor priorities division was established, using the United States Employment Service as instrumentality, in June 1918.

No. 5. That during the period of any war or emergency declared by Congress hereunder the President is empowered to set up such agencies boards, or commissions, or to designate such persons to exercise such portion of his powers as he may deem necessary and proper to accomplish the purpose of this act.

No. 6. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act or violating any publicly proclaimed order, rules, regulations made by the President for executing the powers contained in this act, is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be liable to indictment and trial therefor and upon conviction thereof shall be sentenced to pay a fine, or to serve in prison, or both, at the discretion of the court, in such amount and for such time as the court shall see fit and proper, but in no single case shall the fine exceed $100,000, or the term of imprisonment 1 year.

Food Control Act, no. 2, is substantially the same as no. 5 of the McSwain proposal.

It is to be noted that the preceding pages indicate the complete collapse of the price-control scheme. All forms of price control were attempted, and all failed. "The distinguishing features of price control in the food groups was the scheme of fixing 'margins of profit' only. * * * The price-fixing committee (of the War Industries Board) found that the most satisfactory control could be accomplished by the fixing of the prices of basic materials * * * establishing price control from the raw stocks, right through the process of manufacture and trade, to the retail consumer" (American Industries in the War, Report of the War Industries Board, 1921, 75, 79).

POST-WAR PROFITS ON MUNITIONS

(1) Newport News Shipbuilding Co. made a profit of 35 percent on two cruisers for Navy.

(2) Pratt & Whitney Co. made a profit in 1932 of 1,143, 725 percent on invested capital. Between 1927–33, this company was forced to return $619,000 to the Government when it was found by Army auditors to have made profits of 81 percent and 38 percent, respectively, on two orders.

(3) Consolidated Aircraft Corporation made such high profits between 1927–33 on Army construction that it was ordered to build 50 planes for $1 each.

House of Representatives, Select Committee on Expenditures in War Department (66th Cong., 3d sess, Rept. 1307, of subcommittee, on leather): "Throughout the whole period of the war, agencies of the Council of National Defense and the War Industries Board, largely made up of representatives of the various industries interested, arranged the prices of leather materials sold to the Government." The board's conclusions: "The prices paid for such supplies were exorbitant and unnecessary."

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS], a member of the committee.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, in anticipating what opposition we might meet with this bill, we expected opposition from two classes, namely, those who are opposed to the bill, who would fall into the same class with Eugene Grace and Charles Schwab, who desire to profit enormously by manufacturing munitions of war, and those belonging to the pacifist element of this Nation, who are opposed to any bill which prepares the Nation for national defense in time of war. The opposition to this bill because it makes no attempt to tax war profits is certainly unjustified. The Committee on Military Affairs has no jurisdiction over revenue measures. That is the sole function of the Committee on Ways and Means. It is so stated in our report. We are, indeed, much indebted to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], who preceded me, because he has presented to the Committee of the Whole a great deal of testimony, and it is very much the same testimony that we listened to for days and weeks in the Committee on Military Affairs when we were preparing this piece of legislation. It is, however, an attempt to draw a red herring across the trail. It came along with the statements of how the attempts to fix prices during the World War had been a failure.

I desire to call the attention of the Members of the Committee to the fact that he told you only a part of the story. He went into bituminous coal and coke and commodities of that nature during the World War and the methods used in endeavoring to control prices at that time. He did not further tell you that coal in 1919 and in 1920 sold for a much higher price than it had ever sold for during the war. That was after governmental control had been removed. When did sugar reach its highest price? After the war, and after price control had ceased.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] called the attention of the Committee to a very significant point, as far as price control is concerned, in that the price of wheat was satisfactorily controlled. Of course, the farmer has a just complaint that his product was controlled at a lower price proportionately than the products of industrial plants, and we all regret that fact. Nevertheless, when the gentleman from Ohio advanced that point, he advanced a point in proof of the virtue of this piece of legislation. If a uniform system of price fixing is maintained prior to the date of an emergency, all prices can be controlled throughout the war. If we can do this, we can eliminate one of the most disastrous effects of war, namely, the aftermath of adjustment of prices, which has heretofore followed all wars.

We of the committee do not maintain that this legislation is perfect by any means, but we do maintain that it is an honest attempt on the part of this committee to bring out a piece of legislation, to rectify the evils of the last war, insofar as we are able to do so. We sat for weeks and weeks listening to testimony, testimony of the very ablest men of the Nation. We also listened to much testimony from the pacifist element of the United States who are opposed to any bill at all; and that is the reason I state we expected an attempt to draw a red herring across the trail to bring about confusion and befog the issue as much as possible. In drafting this piece of legislation we took into consideration all of the testimony of the kind that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] has placed before the committee. Such testimony was, in fact, our chief basis of information. We took into account that conditions at the date of our entry into the last war were exceedingly abnormal.

We took into consideration the fact that long before there had been any attempt at regulating prices throughout this Nation prices had risen beyond all bounds of reason; that there had been a tremendous demand for all commodities; that the prices of all commodities and the prices of rents, salaries, labor, and everything else that entered into the matter had gotten out of hand. After taking all that testimony into consideration we came to the conclusion that if, prior to the date of war, prior to the time there was an extraordinary demand for any of those commodities, we would establish a ceiling of prices beyond which none of those commodities might rise, we would have a system whereby we could at least attempt to control them.

Mr. WITHROW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield for a question only.

Mr. WITHROW. Does the gentleman think that will prohibit profiteering—to fix a ceiling? Does not the gentleman realize that in time of war manufacturers do not have selling costs that even compare to those in times of peace, and the result is that even if you freeze that price——

Mr. FADDIS. Well, I yielded for a question, but not for the gentleman to make a speech. I decline to yield further.

Mr. WITHROW. Well, will the gentleman answer the question? It does not mean a thing to fix that price.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further. We took into consideration the fact that if we established this ceiling of prices and got matters under control as of a date prior to the emergency, we would have a system whereby we could control it. We took into consideration this fact also: That it was not desirable to conscript labor; that it was not desirable to conscript industry, because we firmly believe that labor will cooperate willingly in the future as it has in the past, and because we took into consideration the fact that the best management for industry in time of war is its natural management. The object of warfare is to break down the hostile will to resist. To this end we will need the utmost cooperation of every element within the Nation, if unhappily we are ever forced into another war. If we reached in and conscripted industry, as some would have us do, we would disturb the industrial processes of this Nation until they could not function. Any man of sound reasoning is bound to know that in time of war as well as in time of peace the very best management for industry is its natural management. We wish to provide by this legislation that it will not be necessary to conscript either labor or industry in time of war. We believe that conscription of either labor or industry would be both unnecessary and undesirable. That is the thought upon which the piece of legislation was drafted. If ever we must go to war, we wish to do so under a system which will place the entire Nation and all of its resources in the very condition to successfully prosecute the war. After the war we wish this Nation to be in the very best position possible to reap the advantages for which we engaged in the war. We wish the internal affairs of the Nation to be just as undisturbed as possible by the prosecution of the war.

There have been remarks made on this floor regarding the attitude of the United States Senate in legislation of this kind. I am sure every conscientious Member of this House knows full well that if he does his duty as a Member of the House of Representatives he has his hands full, and that he cannot sit here in this House of Representatives and attempt to be a back-seat driver for what goes on in the United States Senate. So, therefore, as Members of the House of Representatives, it is our duty to draft our legislation according to our conception of the duties of a Member of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back 2 minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. STARNES). The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-four Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] will proceed.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I am not so very much concerned about the contents of this bill. I see no reason for any extended argument either for or against the bill as presented, because every Member of the House who has been here 2 years or more must know what will happen to the bill. After it passes here it will go over to the other body, where it will be completely amended, and will come back an entirely different bill. So it is almost a waste of time to try to consider this proposition on its merits, or, let us say, on its demerits. Probably every Member of the House would like to offer some kind of amendment. Probably every Member of the House feels he could write a better bill or improve the bill.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. But when the measure goes to the Senate, under the rules prevailing over there, the Senate, as I understand it, cannot put on this bill any tax provision, because it would not be germane. There being no tax features in this bill, under their rules it could not be placed there, so that we are doing a futile thing in offering such a bill, which cannot be adequately amended in the Senate.

Mr. FISH. From my experience in the Congress, I did not know there were any rules in the Senate that prevented them doing anything at all.

Mr. McFARLANE. Under the Constitution—and we yet have a Constitution—it provides that all revenue-producing measures or tax measures must originate in the House.

Mr. FISH. I am very glad to hear the gentleman defend the Constitution. It is about time someone else defended the Constitution. Unfortunately, it has been lost track of for a long time past.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes, I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. What does the gentleman mean by agreeing with me on this thing?

Mr. FISH. I do not get the question. However, the first reason I rose was to try, if it is within my power, to correct the RECORD. No one admires the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. McSWAIN] more than I do. I have served some 15 years with him in this House. There is no finer character or more able Member. Only a week or so ago I was in his State of South Carolina, and I found down there that even the Republicans spoke well of him. That is quite a boost in South Carolina.

Mr. SIROVICH. Are there any Republicans there?

Mr. COCHRAN. Where did the gentleman find any Republicans in South Carolina?

Mr. FISH. Yes; and militant ones, too, and increasing rapidly. But when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] gets up and gives the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] all kinds of praise for initiating this legislation I have to differ with him; I have to take exception, because I believe the RECORD will show and prove that this type of legislation, involving the principle of restricting profiteering in war time, was intiated and introduced first by our former colleague, the gentleman from South Dakota, Mr. Royal Johnson.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The Johnson bill was an entirely different sort of bill. The Johnson bill provided for conscription of labor, conscription of industry, conscription of everything.

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield further, Mr. Chairman. That is true, the Royal Johnson bill went beyond the present proposal; it called for conscription of wealth, industry, and labor, but the same principle is involved. He was a Member of the House when war was declared and resigned from Congress to enlist, serving in the Seventy-ninth Division, and was wounded in the Meuse-Argonne offensive. When he came out of the war he returned to Congress, and as soon as he reentered Congress he introduced a bill to take the profits out of war. He went to the Legion convention at New Orleans in 1921 or 1922 with his proposal and had the American Legion endorse it. That was the origin of all legislation of this kind and no one has the right to take any part of it away from Royal Johnson, who first sponsored the bill which was endorsed by the Legion. This is a mere modification and, as far as I am concerned, I would like to support a bill that went further and that drafted all the wealth of the country, all the industry, all the man power, and all the soldiers in case of war. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and may be able to give us some information. I find that in 1934 we spent $303,639,000 on our Navy, but that the estimated expenditures for 1936 will be $581,049,000. Has the gentleman any information as to whom we are arming against and as to the probabilities or possibilities of war in the near future?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman has injected a new issue. All I can say in answer to that is that I do not believe there is a man in the House who loathes and abhors war more than I or who will go further to support measures for peace and to avoid war, but I believe in a big Navy [Applause]; I believe in a Navy adequate at least for national defense, and I mean for defensive purposes only and not for any purposes of aggression. In further answer let me say, using the words of our former colleague, Burke Cockran, which he uttered in defending a Navy second to none, that a second-best Navy is like a second-best hand at poker, it is not worth a darn. This is my philosophy. I believe we ought to have a Navy equal to any navy in the world, as our first line of defense for purposes of peace, for purposes of defense and against aggression. I have been diverted a little bit from the bill, but I see no reason for the United States to become involved with any nation, and as for war it would be the height of folly and a crime against the American people. We want no war except in defense of our country. This is a step in the direction of peace, but it is just a small step. We should follow this with a bill to prevent the sale and shipment of munitions of war to belligerent nations. [Applause.] That is the thing that will do more to keep us out of war than all the world courts, leagues of nations, and foreign commitments put together; that is the only thing that will do it.

When the gentleman asked me what nation we are going to war against, I will answer the gentleman there is only one thing that will drag the United States into war, and that is the sale and shipment of munitions of war for the sake of profit to some belligerent nation. It would be insane folly for the United States to think of going to war with any nation, but we are bound to be dragged into war just as sure as we continue to sell munitions of war to belligerent nations for the sake of profit. If we are to have a war in the future it must be a war in defense of the United States of America and not in defense of the munitions makers and war profiteers. [Applause.]

Mr. KLOEB. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. KLOEB. What has the gentleman to say with reference to lending money and extending credit to warring nations?

Mr. FISH. I say exactly the same principle is involved. I am opposed to lending a single dollar to any foreign nation.

Mr. KLOEB. Then why does not the gentleman get behind my bill, H. R. 7125?

Mr. FISH. I am behind it now; the gentleman does not have to ask me, I have been behind this principle for a number of years.

Mr. KNUTSON. As I understand it, the State Department has made an adverse report on the gentleman's bill.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, there are many people in the United States who are sincere in advocating peace, who believe in the League of Nations, who believe in world courts, who believe in consultative pacts, foreign alliances, and so on. I believe in peace, but I believe any step to join the League of Nations or to enter foreign entanglements is more apt to be in the direction of war than in the direction of peace. It seems to me the policy of the United States must be to keep out of all foreign entanglements, all ancient blood feuds, all boundary disputes, cease passing moral judgments on foreign nations, refuse to pick the chestnuts out of the fire for foreign nations, and above all, to mind our own business [applause], because we have plenty of economic difficulties to attend to in the United States of America at the present time [applause]; we have plenty of problems to solve right here, important domestic problems. If we leave these foreign nations alone and just keep out of their disputes we would have assured peace in the United States except for one thing, and that is war profiteering. If we permit these war profiteers to sell munitions of war to foreign nations—I do not like to predict, I know how dangerous it is for any politician to predict anything—but I am predicting that as long as we continue to sell munitions of war for the sake of the almighty dollar to people with whom we are at peace to kill each other in disputes with which we are not concerned, that eventually we shall be dragged into that war. We cannot sell munitions of war without arousing the enmity and the hatred of the nation against which those munitions are used.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Does the gentleman in using the word "munitions" intend to mean only munitions which are not used in peace time, or does it include cotton, wool, and other commodities which enter into munitions?

Mr. FISH. No; I limit it solely to munitions of war—arms and armament, possibly airplanes—but not cotton or copper, and not raw material or food or wheat or clothing. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. May I ask the gentleman, who is a distinguished member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, if he does not recognize the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs has no jurisdiction over legislation affecting dealings with foreign nations? The gentleman's committee would have to deal with that matter.

Mr. FISH. It would. I do not expect its passage, but I propose to introduce a bill providing for a multilateral treaty among the nations of the world to prevent the sale and shipment of arms and munitions of war. My reason for introducing such a measure is that we are a party to the Kellogg Pact—as a matter of fact, we initiated it—to renounce war as an instrument of national policy except for defensive purposes.

Of course, it does not prevent war. Nothing prevents war. It is a deterrent only. Even when Japan and China were fighting they did not declare war on each other. It is a deterrent against war, and as we have renounced war except for defense, why is not the next logical step to enter into a multilateral treaty to prevent the sale and shipment of arms and munitions of war? Why should we not renounce the sale and shipment of arms and ammunition?

I agree with the gentleman that such a proposal should come from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I propose to introduce such a bill. I am afraid it will not get beyond the good wishes of the introducer. I have had no encouragement from the committee, nor have I had encouragement from the administration. But what has the administration to lose? We as a country can stand behind such a treaty because we stand for peace. We should give the other nations a chance to approve or to turn us down. They will probably refuse to agree. I am afraid Japan, Great Britain, France, and Germany, and the other nations, will refuse, but let us make them the offer in the name of world peace. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KLOEB].

Mr. KLOEB. Mr. Chairman, first I desire to compliment the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY], and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] for the persistency with which they have followed this subject during the past 12 years. I desire also to correct the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] in his reference to the authorship of this particular bill. It is true that Royal C. Johnson, C. William Ramseyer, and other Members of the House now gone were active in legislation of this kind 12 or 14 years ago, but the legislation that they propounded was legislation that specified in detail the conduct of a war, and I think we have come rightly to the conclusion in arriving at this bill today that to specify in legislation of this kind means to limit the authority of the administrative agencies that are called upon in time of war.

Mr. Chairman, let us get back to this question of profiteering. Napoleon complained of it, Washington complained of it, and it was complained of at the time of the Civil War. I have examined carefully the records in the Globe containing the debates of 1862 on profiteering and the illegal contracts let in the Western Department under Fremont during that war. I have come on down and examined the records of the World War and the efforts that were made following the close of each of those wars to prevent profiteering in the event of another war.

Mr. Chairman, bear in mind the fact that the cause of all our troubles in these wars, the profiteering, the corrupt and illegal contracts, the inevitable depression that follows postwar deflation, may all be attributed to the unusual and unnatural inflation of prices and of money that comes immediately upon the declaration of a war. Immediately upon declaration of a major war, from one to four million men are taken from industry. This creates a scarcity of man power. There immediately comes a demand for certain industrial products necessary to the conduct of the war. The law of supply and demand, operating overtime, makes the prices go up, and speculators, anticipating this rise in price, immediately play upon the market. Overnight, as was the case in Italy just 2 or 3 weeks ago, following the anticipation of a very little war over there, a firecracker affair, we find the profiteers at work. They continued at work in Italy recently until Mussolini ordered that their backs be placed against a wall and they be shot. This is all due to the fact that hysteria, bringing about inflation, has come upon the nation.

Now how to cure this question. Before the opening of the World War we made no plans to control the inflation that was certain to come. After we had entered the war we established a price-fixing commission and we passed excess-profits tax laws in order to stop this inflation as much as we could. These two agencies playing together, with the coordination of buying on the part of the Allies with our own, brought down prices considerably, but the peak prices in this country arrived 4 months after we had declared and entered the war. We merely tried to control the price stampede that had come upon us.

Mr. Chairman, this bill does nothing more than this: It would, upon declaration of war, authorize the President to fix a date prior to the declaration of war, on which business was being transacted under the normal law of supply and demand, and freeze the prices as of that date in order to prevent the hysterical war-time inflation that comes upon us. A price-fixing commission would then be authorized to adjust inequalities in the price structure. That is all.

Now, I have heard much about this question of excess profits. Do not be led astray. This is not a new question. Immediately after the close of the World War men's minds turned toward this question in an effort to reach a solution. The best minds of the country, the minds that were busy in administrative groups during the World War trying to curb the prices, have been busy on this subject ever since.

In 1924 the Military Affairs Committee of this House held extensive hearings on the subject. William B. Colver, the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, that had in charge the furnishing of statistics to the Price Fixing Commission during the World War, testified before that committee. Unfortunately, he is no longer available.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. KLOEB. Robert S. Brookings, of the Brookings Institute of Economics, here in Washington, who headed the price-fixing commission during the World War, testified in 1924.

Herbert C. Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce, testified, and from his lips comes the first suggestion of the principles contained in this bill which we are discussing today.

In a letter written to the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, Mr. McKenzie, and read to that committee on April 9, 1924, he propounded these ideas:

I am in firm agreement with two principles which you have under consideration. First, to blot out any expectation or realization of a profit as the result of war; and, second, to be forehanded in organization. I would also suggest that from a legal point of view a general clause should be added to the bill giving a blanket authority to the President to fix prices, wages, etc. The right to fix prices instantly war is entered upon, and to requisition materials under the war power, would be a considerable shock to any pre-war speculator.

This is the first suggestion of this plan. In the years thereafter there occurred many hearings, culminating in the establishment of the War Policies Commission, through the McSwain resolution in 1930, adopted by this House in June of that year. The War Policies Commission was the final effort of this Congress to arrive at and solve this question. This Commission was made up of 6 members of the Cabinet, 4 Members of the House, and 4 Members of the Senate. It included Senator VANDENBERG and Senator ROBINSON now in the Senate.

These gentlemen met throughout the entire year of 1931. They had appearing before them all the administrative heads who operated during the World War and then made their recommendations to Congress. We are today seeking to convert into law their first recommendation to freeze prices. The excess-profits tax law will follow. Following are their recommendations. The Commission recommends, page 22, that—

In addition to adopting an effective method of stabilizing prices there should be drafted now a special war-tax law, to become effective simultaneously with the declaration of war.

The Commission recommended, page 34:

We recommend that no amendment to the Constitution be considered at this time. We recommend that bills be drawn and introduced in Congress as soon as practicable, conferring upon the President the specific right to freeze or fix prices at any date before or after the beginning of war, and the power to adjust such prices.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 more minute.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLOEB. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. I am sure the gentleman does not want to overlook the fact that substantially the same principle was embodied in a measure which the Chairman introduced in 1921, which was referred to the Judiciary Committee at that time and died a natural death in committee.

Mr. KLOEB. If that is true, I missed it, and I am sorry.

The War Policies Commission recommended, first, a law providing for the freezing of prices and the setting up of a price-fixing commission, and second, a war-profits tax to catch the low-cost producer. We are trying to comply with the first recommendation today.

If you hold your price level at the opening of war, and your low-cost producer slips through with some excess profits, then an excess-profits tax can go into operation to take from him any percent of the excess profits that he then makes and that you gentlemen may agree upon.

This is the plan of the War Policies Commission. This is the plan of the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee. Do not be misled into voting against this measure, because its passage is vital in the consummation of the plan of the War Policies Commission. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, on Saturday of this week we shall observe the eighteenth anniversary of the entry of the United States into the World War. Saturday will be 18 years from the day that marked a sequence of torpedoings and exchanges of communiqués that finally culminated in a declaration of war that made the United States a party to the greatest war in all history.

Pursuant to that declaration in the language of that great President, Woodrow Wilson, we began to train not an army but a nation. Four million men were poured into olive drab and khaki uniforms, inspired by the zeal of youth, by the desire to do their little bit for democracy, by the desire for high adventure, and motivated by the spirit of patriotism.

They participated in a war that was none of our business. We got nothing out of it; we wanted nothing out of it. The only thing we got out of it was a headache, a lingering, nauseating headache, that pains us every time we think of the $11,000,000,000 that they still owe us.

I was one of the millions that went over to the other side of the ocean and spent 18 months there. I know something about "corn willie" and "monkey meat" and "slum gullion", I know something about prunes, which the Army boys better know in the service technique as "Army strawberry." I know something of "goldfish."

I know something about sleeping on a muddy field, in a pup tent, with your feet sticking out of one end and your head out of the other.

Mr. CONNERY. Do not forget the "cooties."

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; I shall not forget the "cooties" and trench lice and the delights of being periodically deloused. Incidentally, I know something about walking into the ghastly fire of machine guns behind a concrete emplacement, of 240-millimeter shells coming out of the air and bursting with ghastly effect. I have seen aviators come down, burnt to a crisp as they fell. Every soldier is familiar with these things as they happened over there.

We were chastened and sobered when we came back from the war, and what did we come back to? The day that I landed on the docks at Hoboken I saw stevedores there drawing $12 a day and wearing silk shirts. We came back to a new crop of millionaires. We came back to $1-a-year men, whose bonuses ranged from $100,000 to $1,000,000 in a single year; and when we sallied forth to get our old job back, it was not there, and we saw others who remained at home who had tasted of the immense and luxurious profits of war. It was a sobering and a chastening experience, to the extreme. Is it any wonder that the minds of the millions who came back from abroad, who saw that disparity of their proverty as against another's elegance, rich and abundant jobs as against no jobs—is it any wonder that they were fired with a zeal that somehow precipitated this thing we call the universal draft or conscription? Will Rogers, the great sage and necromancer of the plains, gave excellent expression to it years ago when he said, "When we invade the office of the millionaire and say to him, 'We will not only take your clerks and secretaries, but we will take your dough', that is the day we are going to get rid of war, because the rich will say that it is not practical, and the poor will never have a chance to find out whether it is or not." [Laughter.]

So we have been fired with a zeal for conscription—to conscript industry and to conscript man power in the next war, to put everybody on an equal footing. The veterans of the last war ask only for an equality of burdens and an equality of benefits in the next war. But this bill is something else.

I say to you very seriously, gentlemen of the Committee, that in my present state of mind I expect to vote against this bill. I understand that the American Legion supports this bill. Let us make the proper differentiation there and say that the national commander and my good friend Ray Kelley, who is on the executive and legislative committee, appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs to support this bill, but that does not bind the conscience and the independent thought of any member of that organization, and I venture to say that I could go out to a group of Legionnaires in Illinois and explain my interpretation of this bill, and that probably we would not get a single vote for it in any one of those meetings. If the bill should become law, and it should be interpreted by the Supreme Court, they would follow the language of the bill, and that is the thing that concerns me most. We must get back to the bill itself, which is the original source. We are a great country. We read book reviews instead of books, because it saves time, and so we can discourse glibly at social functions on those books. I think it was Bruce Barton, that great advertising man and editor in New York, who said that we read everything about the Bible except the Bible itself, making commentary upon our thought processes. Similarly, we have all read much about taking the profit out of war but have given scant attention to the real substance of the bill itself. The practical presentation of an effort in that supposed direction we find in this bill, H. R. 5529, and let me point out some of the things in this bill which is now before us as I see them. If I understand the English language, section 1 says that—

Whenever Congress shall declare war or the existence of an emergency due to the imminence of war—

It recites war as one condition. It sets out "the imminence of war" as another. You will not find the words "imminence of war" recited in a single other section of that bill. Turn to section 3, and we find that it provides:

That in the event of war or of a national emergency declared by Congress to exist, which in the judgment of the President demands the immediate increase of the Military Establishment—

Get the import of that thought—a national emergency declared by Congress to exist. It calls for no special kind of emergency. It could be declared at any time on any matter without a single probability of war.

Look at the National Industrial Recovery Act, and when we passed it in the Seventy-third Congress we recited in the first line:

Because of wide-spread unemployment and disorganization of industry, it is declared that an emergency exists.

We passed the banking bill, and the first thing about the bill was a declaration that an emergency existed in the banking structure. We passed the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and we said there that an emergency existed, and subtitle 1 of title I of that bill, in large letters in the public edition of that act, proclaims the declaration of an emergency. These emergencies were declared by the Congress of the United States. Section 3 gives to the President of the United States the authority to draft the unorganized militia between the ages of 21 and 31. Who is the unorganized militia? It consists of every able-bodied male and female citizen between 21 years and 31 years of age who is not in the Organized Militia.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I was under the impression that this is a bill to take the profits out of war, and that is why I cannot see why this conscription section is in the bill at all. It has nothing to do with profits.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I cannot see that it is going to take the profits out of war. It seems that is the least emphasized portion of the bill. This bill purports to confirm the profits in war. It does not remove them. It merely freezes prices as of a certain date. It does not state whether it is a day or 30 days or 6 months or 5 years prior to the war when the President shall establish the date, which shall be the date for such a price freeze.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. I call the gentleman's attention to the language to be found on page 1 of the bill, in line 7:

It shall be unlawful for any person to buy, sell, or otherwise contract for any article or thing at a higher rate, rent, price, commission, compensation, or reward.

And so forth.

Under that compensation, if a worker asks for 10 cents a week more on his wages and it is granted him, he could be fined $100,000 and serve a year in prison, or both, it being discretionary with the court.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Without doubt. The first section deals with the price freeze, and it covers everything in the country. Section 2 deals with the adjustment of prices. Now, who shall sit on those adjustment boards? Would they put me or the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] on one of those boards? I doubt it very much. They would put on the same kind of folks who served on those boards during the war. Mr. Hoover served on the Relief Board; Mr. Garfield was on the Fuel Board; Mr. Bernard Baruch was on a board; Mr. Charles Schwab was on a board; Mr. Howard Coffin was on a board. Those are the men who would be selected to serve.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Those dollar-a-year men could not afford to serve in the next war, because they are already too rich now. They would have too much profits to look after. We would have to have some new boards.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is no limit to human ambition in matters of that sort. Now, in making these adjustments under section 2 of the bill, those are the gentlemen, steeped in that very kind of existence, who would have to make the adjustment. Oh, do not blame them. Do not throw any rocks at them. I suppose you and I would take the same viewpoint if we had lived in that same kind of environment all of our lives. They, however, would make the adjustments. So what will happen? The iron-ore miners up in the Mesabe and Vermillion Ranges of Minnesota might strike for higher wages. The manager or the mine boss will say, "We can give it to them, and we will go down and get an adjustment." Then that reflected higher price has to be passed on in steel as it is fabricated in Youngstown and in Pittsburgh. It will be reflected in the high-explosive shell and in the shrapnel made of steel. Then you would have a constant series of adjustments, and as we so well know, they are invariably up instead of down.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman is very much interested in taking the profits out of war?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am. I never was more interested in any subject.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman says our scheme is not practical. The gentleman has been in Congress for two sessions. Has the gentleman ever introduced a bill that expressed his idea of how to accomplish that result?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; largely because I knew this committee was dealing with the subject, and I was willing to wait until they had finished their task.

Mr. McSWAIN. But the gentleman did not treat the committee fair. The gentleman should have given it the benefit of all the knowledge he has on that subject.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The chairman of the committee will certainly not presume that because a person has not introduced a bill, that makes this bill a good bill or a bad bill?

Mr. McSWAIN. Oh, no; but the gentleman says he was never more serious about anything in his life than taking the profits out of war. He must have introduced some bill since he has been in Congress. Why did he neglect the one of all that he was most interested in?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say to the gentleman that, of course, he, too, would perhaps be interested in a banking situation. Did the gentleman ever introduce a bill before the Committee on Banking and Currency? I am a member of only three committees.

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman will search the files of the Committee on Banking and Currency, he will find my ideas expressed there in the shape of a bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. What about the other 47 standing committees of the House?

Mr. McSWAIN. Every proposition in which I am interested I have laid before the committee.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am sorry, but it seems to me that is a sort of red herring and certainly ought not preclude anyone of the right to fill this bill full of holes if it will not stand on its own merits, irrespective of whether I have introduced a bill or not. That begs the question entirely.

Mr. McSWAIN. It only affects the question of the ability of the gentleman in his capacity to criticize the bill, the fact that he has not offered some other bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does that not apply to all of the other 434 Members of this House, and that therefore we ought not criticize the bill unless we have introduced a bill of our own?

Mr. McSWAIN. But the others have not criticized the bill yet.

Mr. DIRKSEN. We shall see about that; moreover I shall have some amendments to offer to this bill.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think there is any necessity for a declaration of martial law so far in advance?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I can see none. Now, Mr. Chairman, let me get back to the bill for a moment. Whether the committee has entertained the point or not I cannot too strongly emphasize the important fact that this bill does not take the profit out of war. That idea obscures the larger and more important implications of this bill. Everybody is in favor of removing the profits from war. In fact, it appears to be the only effective way to erase war from the face of the earth. But this bill does not do it.

It, of course, establishes a so-called "price ceiling" and thereby actually confirms and places governmental sanction on profits.

Section 3, however, is the very heart of this bill. Before proceeding to it, let me again point out that section 1 uses the language, "That whenever Congress shall declare war or the existence of an emergency due to the imminence of war." Section 3 uses the language, "That in the event of war, or of a national emergency declared by Congress to exist." It says nothing about an emergency due to the imminence of war. It refers only to the ordinary garden variety of emergency. Section 4 does the same thing. Again, note the language, "During the period of any war or emergency declared by Congress." Section 5 uses identical language, as does section 6.

Remembering the vast amount of emergency legislation passed by the Seventy-third Congress, in which we definitely stated that an emergency existed, that very declaration empowers the President, under the language of this bill, in his judgment, to do many things. It empowers him, if in his judgment it becomes necessary, to draft the unorganized Militia, to commandeer and control industry, to license business of all kinds, to indicate priorities, to rearrange departments, set up bureaus and agencies, and then imposes a fine not to exceed $100,000 for a violation of this provision of this bill.

In other words, you can have peace-time emergencies as well as war-time emergencies, and if this body but declares an emergency it only remains for the President to exercise these powers. Why, this is the most drastic regimentation bill ever proposed on this floor, to be exercised when not a single war cloud floats on the horizon.

Let the Congress declare an unemployment emergency and under this bill the President could conscript everybody between the ages of 21 and 31 in this country, place them in the Military Establishment of this country, and have them assigned to P. W. A. work at $1 per day.

Without the slightest danger of war, the President can under this bill, after Congress has declared an emergency, commandeer every factory, every coal mine, every power house, every industry, every business in this country and man them with a conscript army.

Never in the history of the Republic has such a measure been proposed, and now it comes to us under the guise of a bill to take the profits out of war. It would confer peace-time powers in an emergency such as no Old World dictator ever possessed. And certainly, in view of the lengthy hearings that were held and the amount of time spent on this bill, it could have been no inadvertence that an emergency was tied up with the imminence of war in section 1 and then treated as any emergency in all the other sections of the bill.

Would labor be for this bill if they knew that in an emergency they could be conscripted into the Army and made to work at soldiers' pay in peace time? Would legionnaires be for this bill if they knew that those from 21 to 31, the same age as that of the legionnaires who served in the last war, could be conscripted in time of peace without the imminence of war? Would industry be for this bill if they knew that this measure confers drastic powers to commandeer and control and license all industry in time of peace just because Congress declared an emergency in the same swift, facile way that it declared emergencies in 1933? I think not.

Now, you might well say that the Congress would not so lightly declare an emergency. To that I say that the Congress has done it no later than 2 years ago. You say that the President would not exercise this power in such a manner. If not, then why confer this power. You and I know that when controversial legislation comes before the Supreme Court they divine the intention of Congress from the language of the bill, and will anyone make so bold as to declare, after reading this bill, that its present language does not confer these powers on the President in peace-time emergencies as well as in war-time emergencies? This bill carries possibilities of regimentation in time of peace so dangerous as to amount to an absolute dictatorship.

The tragedy of it is that it is styled "A bill to prevent profiteering in time of war", when it does not prevent profiteering. It is styled "A bill to equalize the burdens of war", when it inequalizes those burdens. It is styled "A bill to promote peace", and if anybody can find a single contribution toward peace in this measure he deserves a rich reward for ascertaining something which is in fact not in the bill.

I was not a little amused at the categorical way in which opponents of this bill were classified earlier in the day by one of the proponents of the bill. Roughly, those opponents were classed as generally opposed or as pacifists who were opposed. I know not how the term "pacifist" was intended. If the distinguished gentleman meant pacifists who, like Tolstoi, exemplify to the full the doctrine of nonresistance, I am not one of them. If he means those who believe in full and adequate national defense on land, sea, and in the air, but who also place such high store on the gospel of peace that they are willing to fight for it by insisting that a real bill be brought in here to take the profits out of war and not a sugar-coated bill which might regiment our entire Nation in time of peace, then, maybe, I might be a pacifist.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I find myself in the same position as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], rather opposed to the bill, but I must confess I have never introduced any legislation, nor have I appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs. I think we are close to the 10,000 mark in bills and resolutions introduced since January 3. It is a physical impossibility for a Member of Congress to read those bills, if he had nothing else to do.

I expect to vote for this bill, although I am going to criticize the measure, and I will probably offer some amendments to the bill, because I feel it is a step in the right direction and hope in the end we may get a real bill, with some teeth in it, that will take the profits out of war.

I concede to every man the right to an opinion upon legislation, and I have no fault to find with the gentleman from South Carolina, because I know he is honest in his views, but I have tried to analyze this bill, and my conclusion is it will not accomplish the desired result.

As I understand the bill, it proposes to clamp a ceiling down on all prices, beyond which they may not go. Yet you notice that another section of the bill proposes to permit the President to adjust the prices upward or downward. What does this mean? It means that while we are in the midst of a war that this producer or that producer will claim that he cannot produce at the prices fixed. The President will then have to determine costs, prices, investment, and so forth. By the time he gets the answer conditions will again have changed and the findings will become stale.

The purpose is to fix the prices high enough to get out the needed production. This will mean that maximum prices will be fixed necessary to keep the high-cost producers in business. This will also mean that the low-cost producers—the big fellows—will then move most of the tonnage under these high prices and will therefore make excessive profits, which will be taken away by an excess-profits tax. This is the general nature of the plan, and on paper it looks good. But does it take the profits out of war or put in a guaranteed 5- or 6-percent return upon investment? A simple example will illustrate that it puts a profit in war that cannot be made in times of peace. For instance: When war is declared the Government becomes the largest purchaser of materials. A tremendous demand is created for goods of all kinds and raw materials.

Take the United States Steel Corporation as your example. War comes and a ceiling is clamped down high enough to permit the high-cost producers to make a fair profit. But the Steel Corporation is a low-cost producer and will move most of the tonnage under high rates. If war were declared tomorrow, it would have tremendous orders. It would then make a 5- or 6-percent return in war, due to the great demand and the high prices, which it cannot make in times of peace. Does this proposal take the profits out of war or put them in? Other objections to the plan are as follows, all shown before the Nye committee, which picked this plan to pieces:

First. There is grave doubt about the authority of Congress to fix prices or to delegate the power to fix prices in times of peace or war.

The Aluminum Co. now has a suit pending holding the Government did not have the power to fix prices during the last war.

If their contention is sustained where will this legislation get you? I answer, nowhere.

Second. Rumors of war always precede war, and thus the price rise will contain the element of profit even before the ceiling is clamped down.

Third. Who knows what a reasonable price is and what standards of reasonableness are to be followed? Who will determine this standard?

Fourth. Are prices going to be related to cost, and if Congress has authority to fix prices it ought to follow as a legal conclusion that it must also fix costs? How much is labor going to be paid? How much salary is going to be paid big business executives? Are bonuses going to be allowed? See testimony of Eugene Grace before Nye committee to effect that he received $2,800,000 in bonuses during World War. Who is going to determine the reasonableness of thousands of items of cost which will affect prices during a war? When is this going to be determined, during the excitement of war? It would take nearly as many accountants to find these costs as it would soldiers fighting at the front.

Fifth. Are the industrial leaders who are interested in supplying war materials going to fix prices on their own products as was done during the last war, and then use "dummy" contract officers to sign the contract in order that they may escape responsibility? See report of select committee investigating War Department, 1919—Graham report. See also Thomas report of Senate.

Sixth. How much of an army would it take to police and check this plan to determine whether products are being sold above or below the "ceiling prices."

Seventh. Under the plan as I understand it, munitions makers who use their plants for war materials will get a contract for materials which will permit them to make a 6-percent return upon so much of the plant as is being used for war materials. How is the value of the plant going to be divided between war materials and nonwar materials and who is going to make such a division? Furthermore, the high prices necessary to keep the high-cost producers in business will mean high and inflated values for such plants. The munitions makers will therefore see to it that they get as high a value as possible. Instead of cost-plus contracts then you will have 6 percent on highest value claimed which might be the same as cost plus 10. The greater the cost, the greater the plus.

Eighth. In determining prices and costs will access be given to the books of companies or will they tell Government auditors that they cannot be bothered during the war with bookkeeping.

Ninth. How is depreciation going to be determined? Is value or cost going to be the base and what percentage will be allowed. The Supreme Court has said that depreciation must be determined by a physical inspection of the property coupled with the use of mortality tables. Who is going to inspect the 30,000 or more munitions plants and when. How much will be allowed for amortization of the plants in order to return to the owners their honest investment. It took I. C. C. 20 years to find the values of one industry: the railroads.

Tenth. I challenge any Member of Congress today to give you the honest cost of making a pound of powder or a ton of steel. Who knows what a reasonable price for steel or powder would be today?

Now for the other side of the plan; to take away by an excess profits tax all excessive profits over say 5 or 6 percent.

First. We all know how difficult it is to ever recover any moneys on behalf of the Government when it has once parted with it. (Look at the Mellon case today. Government claims he owes $3,000,000; he claims the Government owes him $139,000.)

Second. Every dollar which is incorrectly charged to operating expenses will decrease by 100 cents the net return and hence the net amount of the tax. Therefore, it will be to the interest of the munitions makers to charge nearly everything to operating expenses just like the old cost-plus contracts.

How much limitation is going to be placed on cost items such as salaries, bonuses, depreciation, amortization, buying from affiliated concerns, and so forth. This plan really looks to me like the old cost plus 10 in disguise except that instead of cost plus 10 it will be investment or value plus 6.

Third. Will not the munitions makers make such large claims for amortization and depreciation as to wipe out the net income for tax purposes? Think of the prolonged litigation over values, expenses, claims, and so forth. Bethlehem Steel Co. is still litigating over certain war claims, and war has been over now nearly 17 years.

Fourth. Congress just finished experimenting with a similar plan. In section 15a of the Transportation Act, uniform freight rates were fixed similar to uniform prices under this plan. A freight rate is nothing but a price paid for transportation. Congress realized that under uniform rates some will earn more and some less than a fair return, and so it sought to recapture—similar to excess-profits tax—from the strong or more fortunate roads all moneys over one-half of a 6-percent return on the fair value of the property. What happened? The I. C. C. working on the scheme for 13 years, and the low-cost producers, that is, the coal roads, the steel roads, and the roads connected with "big business" made all the money and kept it. The Government did not collect anything, although when the act was repealed these rich roads owed $450,000,000 excess profit.

The railroads got the benefit of a 40-percent increase in rates, the highest in history, to make the act effective. This would compare with this plan to keep prices high enough to help the weak. The railroads got the benefits of this increase, but the Government got no excess-profits tax. The weak roads had to come in and borrow this amount of money from the R. F. C. How is Congress going to regulate munitions companies which are not engaged in interstate commerce? A recent court decision has said that "emergency" does not justify changing the Constitution.

If this bill goes over, the munitions makers can say to the public, "You have nothing to be alarmed about. We have taken the profits out of war." But nobody knows what they mean by "taken." They will then be all set to go to war at a guaranteed profit, which they cannot and are not making today. This plan will not work to take the profits out of war.

It is my thought that the place to start is with a constitutional amendment which will give the Congress the power to take the profits out of war, and then we shall not be in trouble if a war is declared.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Does the gentleman remember the Lever Act which was passed during the last war?

Mr. COCHRAN. I think I remember it; yes. Although there were several Lever Acts during the war.

Mr. CULKIN. The Supreme Court held it unconstitutional on five distinct grounds.

Mr. COCHRAN. What did that act deal with? Agriculture?

Mr. CULKIN. The general price of merchandise in the country.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not remember the details of the Lever Act; I remember the gentleman himself; he was a Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and a very able legislator.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If the gentleman is in favor of a constitutional amendment, during 1933 I introduced a bill providing for just such an amendment to the Constitution as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am not on the Judiciary Committee; I cannot get the gentleman's bill out of the committee. See the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, probably you can induce him to report your resolution which I understand you have reintroduced. I know the gentleman has urged the consideration of his resolution.

I feel exactly as does the gentleman from Illinois, and I think every Member of this House, man or woman, without exception, wants to take the profits out of war; and I am willing to go just as far as any man or woman in this House to do it. I repeat I expect to vote for this bill solely because it is the best we can get, and it is a start in the right direction. I am in hopes that when this bill comes back to us in the form of a conference report some provision will be included that will assure us that the profits will be taken out of war. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, when this legislation first came into the House I confess I regarded it with suspicion. I had watched the course of the Nye investigating committee, and in common with all Americans was astounded at the revelation that followed that investigation. For a time I thought this bill was in the nature of a red herring drawn across the trail of necessary legislation, but after I heard the distinguished and able Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the House speak yesterday I changed my mind. Today I stand here content and willing to support the legislation, because, with him, I am for necessary preparedness and an adequate Army and Navy. He and his committee are the technicians which this House has placed in charge of this matter, and after his declaration on the floor during the debate on the rule I am content to follow his lead.

Like him, I am for a vigorous nationalism and an adequate Army and Navy. With the world in arms it is no time to Chinafy America. I am likewise in favor of any measure which will prevent profiteering in time of war. Munitions makers, like morticians, play a necessary and important part in our scheme of things, but the revelations of the Nye committee show that while men were dying the munitions profiteers were draining the Treasury.

That has been the history of every war in which we have participated. It is a fact that during the Civil War the beginnings of many of our great fortunes were established through the medium of fraud and theft. This was done at a time when the Nation's life trembled in the balance and millions of men were shedding their life's blood for the preservation of the Union. During that epic struggle, and even during the Revolutionary War, these gentry bribed corrupt Government officials to accept as Army and Navy supplies shoddy clothing, worthless tents and blankets, good-for-nothing shoes, adulterated, deleterious food, and guns which were frequently more dangerous to the men using them than to the enemy.

The story was recently told how one of these groups during the World War made a profit of $3,000,000 out of an investment of $5,000. The story is now told that these munition groups not only roll up vast profits while the Nation is in an emergency but actually foment war in times of peace. This hellish procedure of fomenting war should be stopped by appropriate legislation which defines such conduct as treason and punishes it with death.

This bill, however, lays down the fundamental proposition that property is no more sacred than human life, as it empowers the President of the United States to take over all the material resources of America. It empowers him to create such agencies as are necessary for this purpose. Supplemental taxing legislation, as has been stated here repeatedly, is essential for the perfection of this pending bill. The distinguished chairman of the committee says that such legislation will be supported by him and his committee. This provision is already in the pending Nye bill, and I understand the chairman of the committee will meet that bill sympathetically. I am sure of that. Such taxing legislation will be promoted and safeguarded by the able leadership of the chairman of the committee in whose patriotism and ability I have great faith. The gentleman has assured the House of that procedure, and I am content and happy to follow his leadership and to urge the passage of the pending bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. How does the time stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has 45 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from South Carolina has 71 minutes remaining.

Mr. RANKIN. May I ask the gentleman from South Carolina if it is expected to take this bill up under the 5-minute rule this afternoon?

Mr. McSWAIN. My best judgment is that we will just about conclude the general debate this afternoon.

Mr. RANKIN. I wonder if we could have an understanding to that effect?

Mr. McSWAIN. What does the minority leader and the gentleman representing the minority say?

Mr. SNELL. If we finish the general debate and read the first section of the bill this afternoon, that will be agreeable to this side.

Mr. RANKIN. And allow it to go over until tomorrow for amendment?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DORSEY].

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Chairman, it is often a fortunate trait of human nature that we forget unpleasant experiences. Men who heaved a sigh of great relief when they tossed off the uniform in 1919 now don that same khaki with relish on Memorial Day. Around the fireplace in any veteran post you will find men who, with smile and jest, relate incidents which were packed with annoyance when they happened in 1918.

It is typical of veterandom that its members can extract the laugh out of trying and unfortunate happenings in service. And it is characteristic of the human race that time breeds indifference to mistakes that once exercised us greatly. Let me take you back in memory to the immediate post-war period, and you will recall how our citizenry was aroused by the inordinate war profits and excessive wages which obtained in many industries. Our people were sufficiently agitated about the matter that we find President

Harding making these comments in his inaugural address, delivered March 4, 1921:

If * * * war is again forced upon us, I earnestly hope that a way may be found which will unify our individual and collective strength and consecrate all America, materially and spiritually, body and soul, to national defense. I can vision the ideal republic, where every man and woman is called under the flag for assignment to duty for whatever service, military or civic, the individual is best fitted; where we may call to universal service every plant, agency, or facility, all in the sublime sacrifice for country, and not one penny of war profit shall inure to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination, but all above the normal shall flow into the defense chest of the Nation. There is something inherently wrong, something out of accord with the ideals of representative democracy, when one portion of our citizenship turns its activity to private gain amid defensive war while another is fighting or dying for national preservation.

Because this quotation comes from the inaugural address of our first post-war President, we can take it that our people felt deeply about this subject in the years immediately following the World War. But, let me repeat, human kind is prone to forget unpleasant things.

Bernard Baruch, because of his experiences as Chairman of the War Industries Board, was called before the War Policies Commission and outlined his suggestions for a system to take these huge gains out of war. Among other phases of the question, he showed the inflationary results that followed in the trail of the cost-plus contracts, and how the American taxpayer was saddled with a debt far in excess of the amount that would have to be paid if there had been some machinery, such as the McSwain bill proposes, which would have held down these inordinate profits. Said Mr. Baruch:

Inflation enormously increases the cost of war and multiplies burdens on the backs of generations yet to come. The war debt of the Nation is necessarily incurred in terms of debased dollar values. In the inevitable post-war deflation the debt, of course, remains at the inflated figure. Thus the bonds that our Government sold in the World War for 50-cent dollars must be paid through the years by taxes levied in 100-cent dollars. For example, our total war expenditure was $39,000,000,000 incurred in terms of 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920 dollars. In terms of the purchasing power of 1913 dollars it would have been only $13,000,000,000, or in terms of 1930 dollars probably not more than $15,000,000,000. Such a grotesque result would be almost unbelievable were the figures not living facts. If anything can be done to avoid this practical doubling of the economic burden of the war, certainly we should spare no effort to accomplish it.

It is often a fortunate trait that we forget unpleasant experiences, but when we are paying $25,000,000,000 in excess cost, some of which will be paid by our children; when we live in a distrought day and can ascribe some of the distress to the war profits Mr. Baruch describes, it is time we took it on ourselves to prevent a recurrence of the way we handled World War contracts. It is fortunate that we forget unpleasant experiences, but we who were adults in July 1914 are not alarmists when we point to present-day Europe and Asia and say that these continents need but another Sarajevo to flame them into hostilities. We have learned not to lean too heavily upon the alleged security which our ocean boundaries afford.

The condition we seek to remedy was caused by the urgent need for prompt delivery of war material and equipment and in many instances there was little knowledge of actual requirements. No sensible contractor would take a contract on a definite price basis, with costs of labor, materials, and overhead continually skyrocketing. It was absolutely necessary under such conditions to award contracts on a bonus or cost-plus basis, resulting in the expenditure of millions of dollars more than we would have spent had prices been controlled through some price-fixing agency.

Now, here is the story of what resulted from inflation which attended the cost-plus contracts: The higher the prices soared, the greater were the profits to the contractor. Let me cite an example of this. In the testimony given before the War Policies Commission in March 1931 the records show that the average profits of certain steel companies in 1912 was 4.7 percent; for 1913, 5.7 percent; for 1914, 2.8 percent; and for 1915, 5.2 percent. These same companies showed a profit in 1917 ranging from 30 to 159 percent. And that does not include the tremendous bonuses which were given to officers and key men in industry for the purpose, apparently, of augmenting war profits. Let me cite some of the war profits of munition companies, 1917–19, as listed in the records of the Senate Munitions Committee:

Bethlehem Steel, $61,800,000, or 43 percent, in 1917.

Atlas Powder, 27 percent in 1917.

Colt's Patent Firearms Co., $5,797,000, or 60 percent, in 1917; $5,693,000, or 64 percent, in 1918; and 51 percent in 1919.

Savage Arms Corporation, $6,577,000, or 65 percent in 1917; and $6,917,000, or 43 percent, in 1918.

Bethlehem Loading Co., $151,000, or 362 percent, in 1918.

Nagel Steel Co., 319 percent in 1917.

Winchester Arms Co., 40 percent in 1918 and 63 percent in 1919.

Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co., $3,298,000, or 86 percent, in 1917, and $3,990,000, or 72 percent, in 1918.

New York Shipbuilding Co., 41 percent in 1918.

Midvale Steel & Ordnance Co., 43 percent in 1917.

Jones & Laughlin Steel Co., $48,869,000, or 47 percent, in 1917.

The outline I have given is familiar to every one of you gentlemen, because we lived through this condition; many of us participated in the World War and all of us are helping to pay the bill. If the general public may have lost a little of its enthusiasm for the control of profits in war, it is only because it has been saddled with immediate problems that are closer to the home and fireside. But the veteran has never forgotten, because he was grossly victimized by the condition. In my own city of Philadelphia, which is but typical, some manufacturers were paying "fur-coat bonuses", so called because they were large enough to permit filing clerks to buy expensive sealskins and other choice examples of the furrier's art. I was happy to see these young ladies were made warm and attractive, but at that very time our soldiers were returning with nothing in their pockets but an honorable discharge and the $60 Army bonus that would buy a suit, but no overcoat, at the then prevailing prices. We might well have asked why the manufacturer and all his workers were worth so much more than a combatant in the economic scheme.

There are all kinds of people in this world, and I would be the last to cite this case as average, but I know of two manufacturers who, in a burst of frankness, bewailed Armistice Day and the end of the World War. They were working toward some definite amount of wealth, say, a quarter million or million, and the capitulation of the Kaiser's forces interrupted their accumulations before the financial goal was reached. After they had made their enormous profits, the returning soldier came back to double rents and, possibly, a demanding landlord who had fallen under the spell of the acquisitive lust which was in the air during and immediately following the war period.

I have told you that veterandom has never forgotten this was profiteering and you will see that the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars have gone on record with their universal draft resolutions in every annual national convention since 1921. There are people who think that the Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars are hungry for war just because they show a concern about adequate defense of the Nation. It can be said in all accuracy that war was never more abhorred than in present-day America by all the elements of our population. The stage and screen, those delineators of popular thought, have given us war as a deglorified thing. Previous war plays had depicted the hero dying in center stage, wrapped in a flag and with some utterance about God and country upon his lips. What Price Glory was written by a man who lost an arm on a French battlefield, and while Laurence Stallings captured some of the camaraderie of combatants, he also pictured nerve tension to the breaking point, the muck, mire, and lousiness of war, and even the moral losses of men who may stop their bullet on the morrow. All Quiet on the Western Front came from the pen of an erstwhile enemy. It, too, was graphic in its exposition of the horrors of war.

These moving pictures were seen by millions of our people, young and old alike. They have not diminished the reverence of our rising generation for the military heroes of our Nation who made America possible and helped to preserve it. But these young men and women have no misgivings about war itself. They are informed by the screen and current literature, and they ask, with the oldsters, why soldiers worked at this dirty business for a dollar a day, while manufacturers of war materials waxed rich on cost-plus contracts. They agree with Sherman that "war is hell"; and this depression has impressed them with enough economics that they will not lightly treat the creation of a new batch of millionaires in the next conflict.

Let us not be blinded with the thought that another war is impossible. Knowing that war is possible with nations still so far apart in their desires or actions to eliminate it, we must realize that now is the time to correct the conditions which undoubtedly burden us in its aftermath. These conditions are inevitable unless we pass such legislation as is now proposed in this McSwain bill. Let me cite the following statement, which was contained in the Government's brief in the recent suit brought by the Government against the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Co.:

> No one can say that this country is done with war or how soon a national emergency will again exist calling for the maximum production of every shipyard throughout the United States. * * * At such a time there will undoubtedly again be those who will look upon the national emergency as an opportunity to make enormous profits for their respective companies and themselves at the expense of the Government, and their patriotism and sense of propriety will not, in themselves, be sufficient to restrain them from taking full advantage of such opportunity.

In war the entire social structure is involved. In the absence of the control of profits, such as was experienced during the World War, its aftermath brings a weakening of the whole financial structure and even the weakening of the morale of society. The next war—and God forbid that there will be a next war—conducted on the basis of the last one will be so destructive of the important elements of our civilization that we will shudder to think of the consequences.

Quite aside from the money saving effected by this bill and the downright democracy expressed in its spirit, is the important fact that we will have an immediate coordination in an emergency between industry and the men who wear the uniform.

In our past conflicts we have entered war much as the volunteer fireman who hears the fire siren while taking a bath. All has been hurry and there has been no well-knitted plan that anticipated industry and the military forces playing on the same team. In our haste to get the materials that must back up the forces in the field we have paid outlandish prices that have saddled the Nation with enormous bond issues.

Of course, there can never be complete democracy in warfare, for the soldier puts all in jeopardy when he stakes his life. Is it, then, too much to ask that industry be restricted to but a fair profit? You Congressmen who decry the adjusted-compensation issue as a perennial question can hereby obliterate the need for any future adjustment or so-called "bonuses" by establishing this equality between the people who produce the materials of war and the men who use them in defense of the Nation.

Again, speaking of veterans, they are the essential leavening when we discuss this entire problem of national defense. Never call them jingoistic, they who know what a putrid game war really is. Remember, too, that your average World War "vet" is now at that point of life where he has a son of military age or at least in close proximity thereto. This veteran has tasted war and liked it none too well, and he will never rush his callow offspring into the game of Mars without provocation. Recall, also, that veterandom named only one holiday out of the World War. Was it Chateau Thierry anniversary to commemorate our victory over the vaunted Prussian guard? No. It set aside Armistice Day, the day that marked the end of hostilities. So your veteran is not militaristic, but that is not to imply that he is indifferent about national defense. He may not be willing to go as far as the most enthusiastic subaltern in what constitutes adequate defense, but he sees no virtue or common sense in disarming our Nation to the point where we invite war. Many of the Christian sects see eye to eye with the veterans in the intent of this bill, all the way. With other sects we are as one in our zeal for peace, but we cannot agree that dangerously curtailed armaments will accomplish our common purpose in the light of the present situation in Europe and Asia.

So, I repeat, that American veterandom is the essential leavening when we discuss this question of adequate armaments and how we are to line up our men and our industries if war should again overtake us. What they offer us is seasoned with experienced, a sort of middle-ground counsel that we can all follow. They ask that we control men and industry alike in the next emergency. Let both be placed at the disposal and directions of the Commander in Chief of our armed forces, the President of the United States.

Where other bills have died in committee because they were controversial in the provisions they prescribed, this McSwain proposal lays down the broad, general principle that munition and material providers must work on even terms with those who man the ships and the regiments when emergency strikes. The details are left to the President and his advisors to be worked out in the light of the then existing conditions.

This is no partisan measure. In voting for this bill, men on both sides of the aisle will be doing the popular thing and will receive commendation from the people who sent them here.

People forget unpleasant experiences, but the depression and the struggle to meet taxes has brought home to many how profligate were the cost-plus contracts of the World War. The article Arms and the Men which appeared in Fortune Magazine did much to bring about the Senate investigation which has focused the public eye on war profits. This inquisitorial body has developed much information, including the million-dollar bonus of a large industrialist.

Thanks to the new airing of war-time profiteering, we now have an America ready to take this step forward to democracy in war. Religious freedom, abolition of debtors' prisons, emancipation proclamation, public schools, general conscription of soldiers, income tax, and now, with your concurrence, we can take, we must take the forward step to control of property and industry in time of war. In supporting the McSwain bill you are asking the whole Nation for patriotic cooperation in emergency, not just the man who leaves his plow or loom or desk for the battlefield. Democracy marches on if you decree it. The American Legion and brother organizations, out of their ripe experience, ask parity between the man who makes war equipment and he who uses it in your defense. They claim that the sovereign government which conscripts one can exercise a like sovereignty over the other. Our people are ready for this plan. Do not disappoint them. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, in speaking on a subject like this I am sure that we should eliminate, as far as possible, personalities and, as far as possible, emotions. As I think about this subject today I think about old Jeff: McLemore, of Texas. I hope the reporter gets that colon. Jeff: would turn in his grave if it is left out. He presented a resolution here which might have kept us out of war, the resolution providing that American citizens should stay off of armed merchantmen. What happened to Jeff: McLemore? He was hounded right into his grave because he did not want us to go into that war. He was intelligent enough to know that British propaganda was more effective than German propaganda, and, therefore, we were liable to get in on the side of the Allies. He did not want us to get in on either side.

Mr. Chairman, that is the way I feel about all future wars—let us stay out of them. One of the things that impressed me about this Jeff: McLemore resolution was that Congress itself began to get into a hysterical state. I hope we do not get into a hysterical state. I know the Nation at that time got into a hysterical state and people were writing to their Congressmen about as follows: "I see you think more of the Kaiser than you do about the United States of America." They began to put pressure on their Congressmen. I hope we will take the attitude that we are the leaders of our people, that we are not going to join in any hysteria of the people, but we are going to lead them in the right direction.

Mr. Chairman, let us get down to a consideration of the McSwain bill. I am not going into a detailed discussion of it, because most of the points have been covered. However, I make two points against this bill, and I make them just for the RECORD. According to the way the bill is written, I believe that it does conscript labor. I believe it does not conscript capital or, at least, does not effectually conscript capital. Therefore the bill should be defeated. Those are the two views I have in reference to this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I may have made a mistake myself. I once stated that this is a "step in the right direction", and I have heard one man after another get up here and say this is a step in the right direction; but in making this step, let us be careful that we do not go back two or three steps and do a lot of things which we ought not to do.

The question came up about the attitude of various members of the committee in reference to the question of salaries. On page 116 of the hearings in reference to taking profits out of war, I asked Gen. Hugh Johnson about limiting salaries.

I asked General Johnson about limiting salaries, and he said:

Well, I personally think it should be done in time of war; yes.

And such provisions are not in the McSwain bill, and neither are there any tax provisions.

Then, when Secretary of War Dern appeared before the committee, he said:

Price fixing alone cannot accomplish the desired result. It must be supplemented by reasonable and effective procedure in letting contracts and also by excess-profits laws.

This is what the Secretary of War said. There was a great deal said about industrial mobilization, and we have 100 pages of this House report on industrial mobilization; but no proper set-up is made in the McSwain bill for that purpose, while it is effectually covered in the bill which will be proposed in the Senate.

Lt. Col. Bennett A. Molten, national secretary of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States, stated that this bill should contain a profit tax as high as 95 percent levied against the net profit sustained.

Another one of our witnesses, G. K. Brobeck, national legislative representative of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, speaking for that organization, said:

As we have considered the bill introduced by your distinguished chairman, we submit it does not remove the profit motive from business or from war.

Now, this testimony came from the House side. Since this time various testimony has come up from the Senate, and although it may be a little tiresome, I want to read it.

James A. Drain, past national commander of the American Legion, and G. K. Brobeck, legislative representative of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, before the United States Senate Munitions Committee, Thursday, March 14, 1935, pages 9198 to 9201 of transcript:

Senator VANDENBERG. Have you studied the McSwain bill?

Mr. DRAIN. No.

Senator VANDENBERG. Many posts of the Legion are endorsing the McSwain bill, and I was wondering why, because, it seems to me, that it falls far short of the objectives which you defined in your memorandum.

Mr. DRAIN. That is my impression, sir, but, as I tell you, I have not studied the bill, and I do not feel competent to express an official opinion upon it.

Senator VANDENBERG. It is your impression that the McSwain bill falls far short of the objectives which you outlined?

Mr. DRAIN. That is my impression; yes, sir. It is a step in the right direction, but I think it does not go far enough.

Senator VANDENBERG. Have you read the McSwain bill, Mr. Van Zandt?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. No; I have not, but my legislative representative has.

Senator VANDENBERG. Give your name for the record.

Mr. BROBECK. G. K. Brobeck. I have read and, I believe, analyzed the McSwain bill, and in testifying before Mr. McSWAIN'S committee we suggested that it was a step in the right direction, but also called definitely to the mind of the committee that we thought, even though we thought it might be a step in the right direction, it was an act which really guaranteed profits in time of war.

Senator CLARK. More of a toddle than a step?

Mr. BROBECK. It is a kind of toddling step, by setting a yield at a date picked prior to the declaration of war, which merely is a guaranty of property during the time of war.

Senator VANDENBERG. I take it that you are not endorsing the McSwain bill?

Mr. BROBECK. Not very heartily. We feel that it is a sort of left-handed gesture.

Senator BONE. What would be the effect—and either one of you gentlemen may answer—if a concern, proceeding under normal conditions, could produce something for $1, which they were selling the Government, and in war time, under a war tempo of production, mass production, they could step up the production of that article to a point where they could produce it for 50 cents, and we froze prices at $1? Mass production would simply mean that that firm would make more profits, would it not? The more consumption of the article the more profit the firm would make, and freezing prices would be the best thing on earth for a firm.

Mr. BROBECK. If I may answer, I think there is no question about it, and our attitude on the McSwain bill was very definitely stated. It fundamentally guarantees a profit, and we are unalterably opposed to profits in time of war. It will increase profits.

Senator CLARK. Not only that, but, as Senator BONE has pointed out, if the article comes into mass production, it would simply mean that much more velvet under the terms of the McSwain bill.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. The statement was made by at least one member of the committee, in substance, that no one appeared at the committee hearings in opposition to this bill. The gentleman is a member of the committee, and I desire to ask if it is not a fact that at the time Mr. Hushing appeared, representing the American Federation of Labor, that this provision providing for conscription of the unorganized militia was not in the bill.

Mr. MAVERICK. I am not certain about that. May I ask the gentleman from South Carolina if he knows?

Mr. McSWAIN. No; I am sorry, but I do not remember the date he appeared or the date the amendment was offered, but let us assume that the statement is true.

Mr. MAVERICK. I will say to the gentleman there were several witnesses who appeared against the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. There were other people who appeared; for instance, Miss Rankin, formerly a Member of this House, and Professor Libby, and one or two others who appeared in opposition to the bill.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does the gentleman mean that as any reflection upon them?

Mr. McSWAIN. No; I just want to tell the whole truth about who appeared.

Mr. MAVERICK. Now, I want to say something about Miss Jeannette Rankin since that has come up. She has a right to be against war. She voted against the World War in 1917; God bless her for it.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. If a complete picture of the matter were understood, and if the hearings in full were read, would it not appear that the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the American Federation of Labor, the Railroad Brotherhoods, and the National Council for the Prevention of War, all five organizations, appeared in favor of the elimination of profits and not a reduction of profits; and the only ones that argued for limited profits were the War Department and the Coalition of One Hundred and One Percent Patriots?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes; the so-called "American Coalition of Patriotic Societies." The gentleman's statement is correct. In other words, various organizations appeared and said they were for the principle of taking the profits out of war, of course, but they did not specifically endorse any particular kind of legislation. I think this is well understood by everybody.

The point I wish to make about this bill is the one that I originally made. and that is it has no revenue provisions in it, and I know what the Constitution says. Nobody need ask me, "Does not the gentleman from Texas know that the Constitution says so and so", because I know it; but I know it could be brought out on this floor with a rule which would make it entirely proper for a bill that covered all subjects to be discussed and passed on at one time.

Here is the reason I am opposed to this bill, and I am not reflecting on Mr. McSWAIN's or anybody's intentions. I am opposed to it because if we pass this bill now it will be worse than nothing, because whenever war hysteria rages or whenever war raises its bloody head they will mob everybody who wants to take out war profits, just like they tried to do to old Bob La Follette when he got up on the floor of the Senate and made the same statements at various times. They will mob Congressmen and Senators and people all over the country with such hysteria and propaganda whenever the question of war profits comes up.

This is the reason I think the matter ought to be settled now, and we ought to settle it completely; and in this way we can protect ourselves, I hope, against the hysteria of war.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. The gentleman said a few moments ago that this bill seemed to include the proposition of conscripting labor.

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Will the gentleman show me in this bill where there is any such inclusion, as a matter of information?

Mr. MAVERICK. It is in section 3, because "the unorganized militia", according to the bill, covers all those between the ages of 21 and 31; in fact, it covers the whole male population.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Then it is the intention of the committee, as a matter of fact, that the so-called "unorganized militia" shall include labor and the conscription of labor?

Mr. MAVERICK. I do not know for sure about that. It does include it, I think, and I think when the matter comes up the chairman may be willing to amend it.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. If the gentleman will permit, of course, the unorganized militia includes everybody, whether he is a laborer, doctor, preacher, lawyer, or what not. The unorganized militia is the manhood or the man power of the Nation.

Mr. RANKIN. Why limit it to those ages?

Mr. MAVERICK. I see. Then it does conscript labor, and the bill should be defeated.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Does not that refer to the increase of the Military Establishment?

Mr. MAVERICK. No; it does not; it applies to everybody. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL].

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman and Members, the intent of the bill which we are now discussing is generally satisfactory. However, the bill contains several weaknesses which I propose to discuss and one of which I shall endeavor to correct when the bill is read for amendment.

I do not wish to disparage the sincere intent of the chairman and members of the committee, and I hope they will pardon me when I refer to this measure as akin to other legislation which we have enacted since the new deal became effective. The people are becoming conscious of the fact that the promises and hopes in the new deal, to which they pinned their faith, as yet are far from realization; in fact, if we are honest with ourselves, we must confess that we have actually retrograded rather than progressed in our efforts toward recovery.

This bill, and the most of the new-deal legislation, reminds me of a story which was told to me in my early days as a soldier. The incident occurred at the target range where a group of officers were firing for record. Those of us who had this experience know that our percentage was signalled to us by the markers or readers of the target which, in the days before the use of the telephone, was done with a flag. While one of the officers was between a series of shots at the target, the officer paused for a moment and had his attention directed to some ducks which were flying across the line of vision. Instead of firing at the target, he fired at the ducks, when lo and behold, the marker in the distant pits raised the flag and registered a bullseye! In the opinion of the enlisted man who was marking, the officer was entitled to a perfect score.

We in the new deal have made a few shots at the target, but the most of our shots have been directed in the air at the elusive ideals of theorists, with the result that our score thus far has resulted in an increase in unemployment, an abnormal increase in the national debt, and inordinate criticism of many of the new-deal policies.

The bill under discussion to eliminate profiteering in war falls wide of the mark, if our target is actually the outlawing of war itself. In legislating to eliminate the profits of the next—apparently anticipated—war, it appears to me that we are putting the cart before the horse. In my opinion, we should legislate to insure our neutrality, under possible distress, and we should subscribe unequivocally to the principle of protection against future war through the elimination of the provocation to war.

In this connection, we must recognize the dangers inherent in our present situation, in which the favored few cling to their special privileges, continuing to increase their tax-exempt bond holdings and exacting their profits from the misery of the masses. Such a condition is the hotbed of discontent, suspicion, and distrust, which are the seeds for internal and external conflict. As a part of our program for a permanent peace, why not enact legislation to eliminate the profiteer in peace as well as in war? Why should we not tax the overprivileged and apply the funds thus obtained toward putting the unemployed back to work? If we did something of this kind, it would be effective, not only to bring relief to our people now, but as a means of promoting national harmony and international amity.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. If we took the profits out of war and every nation did the same thing, there would not be any war, would there?

Mr. HOEPPEL. If all nations took the profits out of war, it would do a great deal toward destroying the incentive to war. In addition, however, we should enact laws which would more adequately define our neutrality and thus prevent us from being inveigled into a war with which we have no concern.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I was much interested in what the gentleman said about taking the profits out of peace as well as out of war. It occurs to me that we could very well do our bit to prevent the likelihood of future wars by making peace profitable and war unprofitable.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Certainly.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I would like to have the gentleman's opinion and an explanation of how he makes his answer coincide with the view which he expressed a moment ago that peace also should have the profits taken out of it.

Mr. HOEPPEL. In urging the elimination of the profits of peace I refer to those enjoyed by a privileged few only, for there are peace profiteers as well as war profiteers. I agree with the gentleman that peace must be made profitable, but its profits must be distributed among all the people.

We are in a more serious condition today than we were in 1917, and there is growing resentment against an economic system which permits concentrated privilege and profit to exist side by side with the most tragic conditions of distress and unemployment. That is the reason I am suggesting drastic steps to correct this paradoxical situation.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. But the gentleman concedes that much of our present trouble is due to things which happened during 1917 and 1918, and that it is an aftermath of the war?

Mr. HOEPPEL. The gentleman is correct and not only because of world conditions and international relationships, but because of the situation existing within our own country, we have reason to be apprehensive of the outbreak of another war. I am absolutely opposed to sacrificing the sons of America to Mars, the god of war, under the stimulus of the international banker and the munition maker, both of whom will profit unduly in the event of war, regardless of any legislative enactment. I am unalterably opposed to forcing the young men of America into the Army or Navy and to sending them to foreign shores to settle the quarrels of the internationalists.

In my opinion, the United States should make a positive declaration now to the effect that Americans who sail on vessels of belligerent countries, or even in American vessels, in the zone of hostile operations, will not be accorded the protection which we have held to be the Government's responsibility to an American citizen abroad. There is no reason, in my opinion, why the lives of my children or the children of others should be sacrificed to maintain the principle that American citizens may with impunity enter areas of hostilities.

Furthermore, as I recall from my own experience in 1914, our soldiers and sailors were sent into Mexico supposedly to protect American property and American lives. At that time I met an alleged American in a hotel in San Antonio, who had lived in Chihuahua for 30 years. He had raised a family of children there, yet this individual was clamoring for American troops to be sent into Mexico to protect his investments. How puerile and unreasonable it appears that we should accord the protection of citizenship to individuals who have expatriated themselves from our country for long periods of years. In my opinion, if Americans wish to invest or live in foreign countries they should accept the risks and responsibilities which accrue to them through such habitation and investment.

The Mexican Government now has a law which provides that the ownership of property in Mexico automatically grants Mexican citizenship. Americans who wish to live in foreign countries and who remain there beyond a stipulated period, should, in my opinion, be considered as expatriates; at least, they should not be accorded the protection given to a citizen permanently domiciled in the United States. If, as we honestly believe, we are arming for defense purposes only, common sense would dictate that we enunciate principles in accordance with modern life which would prevent the loss of hundreds of thousands of American lives and the expenditure of billions of dollars in support of an archaic theory of the rights of citizenship.

A clear-cut definition on questions of neutrality, in respect to the furnishing of munitions and the extension of loans, would lessen the possibilities of foreign entanglements, but, in my opinion, the coveted world peace will be attainable only when men recognize and accept their responsibilities to their fellow men and to the Deity.

We fought the last war to make the world safe for democracy, yet the fact is that there is less democracy in the world today then ever before. Since the World War we have signed various pacts to outlaw war, and yet there has been more war in that period than there was prior to the consummation of these pacts. The fact is that these international pacts, while they are steps in the right direction and much to be sought after, will never be effective until the greed and avarice, naturally inherent in men, are removed, or at least materially reduced in the chancelleries of nations.

The mad race for gold and a preferred status in trade must give way to mutual understanding among the people of the nations and the spirit of cooperation and the attitude of "live and let live" must manifest itself more positively. At the present time the currencies of the world and the tariff barriers are in a state of chaos. The financial and trade wars which are now taking place in the world, unless outlawed through a stabilized international currency or some other medium equally as effective, will, I fear, coupled with the growing unrest among the peoples of the world, lead ultimately to break-downs in government and to physical warfare.

The adage "to the victor belong the spoils", which has been subscribed to by the modern politician despite our civil-service laws, apparently had its inception in the practices which prevailed in ancient warfare. Even as late as the Boxer Rebellion the so-called "civilized nations of the world", including our own, were guilty of looting. This bill which we have under discussion seeks to eliminate the prewar and war loot of the munitions profiteer and his spokesman, the international banker, that cursed individual who recognizes no nationality and who worships at the altar of gold, regardless of the suffering which his machinations bring to the victorious as well as to the vanquished nations.

Certainly the inordinate profiteering incident to the last war is not to be condoned under any circumstances in any future conflicts which may harass us, and it is a heartening sign that there should be a wide-spread determination to prevent a repetition of such unholy practices. But the fact remains that if we are honest in our alleged desire to outlaw war, we are considering the wrong method of approach in this bill. It will not be necessary for us to expend additional billions for war, as we are now doing, nor to legislate to prevent profiteering in war—apparently anticipated—if we will destroy the bridge which leads to war through the enactment of legislation abolishing special privilege and more adequately defining our neutral attitude in the event of war between other nations, and if, in addition, we will renounce the principle of government protection to our citizens when they enter the zone of hostilities or otherwise aline themselves, directly or indirectly, with any belligerent.

The warning, given to us by our first President, to avoid foreign entanglements, and the further admonition of President Lincoln that in our conduct toward other nations we should exercise charity toward all and malice toward none, are, in my opinion, our anchor of hope and the principles of justice to which we, as a Nation, should commit ourselves in order to avoid the curse of war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, no Member of either House of Congress has advocated more consistently the passage of legislation to take the profits out of war than have I. No other Member of this body has been more persistent in advocating the elimination of the possibility of war profits in case this Government should ever be dragged into another armed conflict.

The first speech I made in Congress on this subject was in 1928, in connection with the Capper-Johnson bill, which proposed to conscript everything in case of war, mentioned this afternoon by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] in discussing this bill. In that speech I said:

> I am not a recent convert to the soundness of the pending measure. Many years ago, as a member of the State Senate of Oklahoma, I sponsored a resolution urging the Congress to pass the universal draft act, a resolution which was adopted by a unanimous vote by our legislature. I have advocated this measure in my campaigns, believing it to be of great, vital importance to the peace and security of mankind.

Mr. Chairman, I have read the pending bill carefully, and have listened to all of the debate thus far on the measure. I have also read the voluminous committee report of some 37 pages. I wish that I might in good conscience say that this bill, if and when passed, would forever end war profiteering. But no one, not even the sponsors of this measure, pretend to say it will do that. The report of the committee begins by saying that—

> This bill is a statement of broad policies, and is deliberately intended to avoid the mistake of seeking to legislate as to details so far in advance of the possible outbreak of war.

Aside from stating broad policies, there is not very much to this bill, but it is evidently a gesture in the right direction. The committee in the very first paragraph of its report cautions Members of this House in no uncertain terms against permitting any amendments that may be proposed to the pending bill. Personally, I think it ought to be amended to put teeth in it and shall not hesitate to offer and support amendments for that purpose. Merely to state "broad policies" of the Government in case of war will not be any guaranty of peace.

Personally, I should like to see the Nye bill or some similar measure substituted for the pending McSwain bill. If you will examine the Nye bill, you will immediately discover that it contains many important provisions that are conspicuous by their absence in the pending measure.

This bill contains no provision to tax war profiteers in case of war, although the report discusses that subject and recommends that those who profit in times of war be taxed 100 percent of their excess profits. Unfortunately, however, we are called upon to vote on the pending bill rather than this splendid committee report.

The Nye bill is a comprehensive, far-reaching measure. It does contain these all-important provisions to tax all excess profits by individuals, corporations, or others who might scheme to make their millions from the misfortunes of war.

Mr. Chairman, as I stand here on the floor of this House and speak from the same spot where I stood 7 years ago when I made my first speech in favor of legislation to outlaw war profiteering, I am more deeply convinced than ever before of the absolute necessity for Congress to draft capital as well as men in case of war. In fact, I would go further and draft capital first. I would draft every available resource. I would say to Wall Street, the international bankers, the professional jingoists, and all others who advocate war that when they start a war, that by the eternals they will pay for that war. [Applause.]

If proper legislation is passed that will really put teeth into the law—and by that I mean if the Government will tax all excess profits of the munitions makers, raincoat makers, sugar kings, coal barons, international bankers, and other jingoists who profit most out of military murder politely called war—there just will not be any war. [Applause.]

If Congress would do its full duty millions of mothers holding their offsprings to their breasts will not have to shudder in the future at the thought that their sons, who are dearer to them than their heartstrings, will ever be called upon to offer their lives to the gods of war, perhaps on foreign soil.

Legislation to outlaw war has been pending in Congress since 1922. The people are growing tired of so much talk and so little action. Generations yet unborn will be called upon to help pay the staggering cost of the last war. If you have read the committee report in connection with the pending bill you will note it points out, and rightly so, that profiteering doubled the cost of the World War. That debt is saddled upon the backs of our children and our children's children, so if for no other reason than the tremendous tax burden that always follows in its wake, that is abundant reason for the outlawry of war. No civilized man or woman could possibly want to see our country again thrust into the throes of war, but war profiteers should not be classed among normal civilized human beings. They are vultures who feast off the misfortunes of war-ridden humanity.

Someone has intimated that some war veterans are opposed to this legislation, but I am glad to say that every war veteran, so far as I know, in this Congress favors the complete elimination of war profiteering. They may disagree concerning the pending bill, but there is no disagreement as to the necessity of legislation to outlaw war. That is only natural. Many men on the floor of this House have first-hand information about war. These men who have stood in the jaws of death know too well that war is a horrible nightmare. Before the war many of us thought of an armed conflict in connection with the waving of flags, the beating of drums, the blowing of bugles, and the parading of well-groomed soldiers with flashing swords, shining helmets, and neat uniforms.

Today, however, these same men think of war in all of its horrors. They know that war is gruesome and seldom settles anything. Men who have faced machine guns, who have suffered the privations and hardships of war, who have stood in the mud, slime, and filthy, cootie-infested trenches of Flanders Field, Chateau-Thierry, and the Argonne Forest, abhor the thought of another armed conflict.

As I stand here today my memory carries me back to those never-to-be-forgotten days of 1917 and 1918. I can see the Thirty-sixth Division, a Texas and Oklahoma division, in which I served in the humble capacity of a buck private, just 17 years ago this spring, as we were loaded into troop trains like so many cattle and started on our way to France.

We can see our comrades as they were loaded and packed into the old George Washington liner and other ships, where the enemy greyhounds of the deep lay in wait to drag them down to death. We see them landing on foreign soil and listening to tongues they do not understand. We see them on those long, weary hikes to the front lines, drenched with rain and walking in mud to their shoe tops. We see our boys dying by the hundreds from exposure, fatigue, and lack of proper nourishment and medical care.

We see these raw recruits hurled into the front lines against seasoned enemy soldiers and we sometimes boast of the fine record that our particular division made for themselves. We were over there to help make the world safe for democracy, but it seems that we are just now beginning to realize that we made the world safe for nothing except the millionaire munitions makers, the unconscionable raincoat profiteers, the heartless sugar kings, and other damnable, unscrupulous, and unpatriotic plunderers who profiteered to the tune of millions during that war.

As we consider this bill today, I am constantly thinking of that buddie of mine who walked by my side through the rain, slime, and mud to the front lines. Late one afternoon his fever rose and he became so weak he could not carry his pack. That night he lay down with me under the same pup tent and before morning came, he had paid "quick pneumonia."

the supreme sacrifice from the effects of what they called

I resolved then, as no doubt hundreds of others did in similar cases during that dark period of war, that if I returned again to my homeland that I would dedicate my life to the task of trying to outlaw future wars. I am convinced that the greatest guarantee to the young men of today and to future generations of remaining in peace with our neighbors is to say to the world in no uncertain terms that no one will be permitted in the future to amass fortunes or make profits at the expense of human blood.

Let me say, as I have said before on the floor of this House, that I am convinced the American people want an abiding peace. There is no question but that they also are convinced that, if a real lasting peace is to be maintained for this and future generations, that Congress must pass adequate legislation to eliminate any possibility of future war profiteering. It is the province of Congress to say, by appropriate legislation, that the wealth of the land is no more sacred than are the lives of human beings. We must say to the Du Ponts, the Morgans, the Mitchells, and the Mellons, and all of the other so-called "respectable millionaires", many of whom doubled their fortunes during the last war, that their fortunes shall be treated with no more respect than the poorest farm boy who may be drafted to wear the uniform. [Applause.]

This Government ought to go still further in order to protect the people against the exploitations of the munition makers and war racketeers. It ought to place a contraband on munitions of war. I trust this bill will be amended to do that. Never again should it be possible for the heartless munition makers, who have their emissaries in Washington, as well as the capitals of other countries, secretly trying to foment war here and abroad, to ship munitions to belligerent countries. This Government ought to take over the munition factories, so that our citizens might have the assurance that, while they are being taxed to the limit to provide the sinews of war, that the damnable munitions makers of America will not be furnishing powder and bullets and shells of every description to shoot down the youth of this land.

Assuming that the McSwain bill is going to be amended to eliminate some objectionable features and other amendments incorporated to actually draft the financial resources of the country, I shall support the pending measure as a gesture in the right direction. I believe it will at least have a moral effect against war. But there is no occasion for anyone on this floor to "kid" themselves into believing that it is going to guarantee the elimination of war profiteering in its present form. It is my suggestion that Congress should follow up the passage of this measure with a real constructive and comprehensive measure like the Nye bill, or else substitute it for this measure. A long-suffering public is growing weary of peace talks. It is time that Congress assert its authority and enact legislation that will really take the profits out of war.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I hope at this session of Congress we may be able to pass legislation which will take the profits out of war. It would be a great honor for the United States to be the first country in the world to do that; and I know if the United States would take the profits out of war, the people in every other country in the world would demand that their rulers do likewise. If that is done, there would not be any more wars. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the chairman of this committee and the members of the committee are sincerely working toward the same thing that all of us who have spoken today are working toward. We simply think in different terms. I should like to vote for this bill and support it, but I fear if it should pass as it is it would keep us from getting a real piece of legislation now, at a time when we are nearer to it than ever before. I am going to offer some amendments to the bill tomorrow. The way it stands today it is a sort of "Mother Hubbard" bill; it covers everything and touches nothing. The war cost the United States $29,000,000,000. Do you know how much of that went to the pay of the soldiers? Five percent. The rest of it went to the war profiteers, and then those same profiteers tried to keep this Congress from passing adjusted compensation to pay the soldiers something equivalent to unskilled labor, though it would not have been equal to that at that time.

One of the first amendments that I intend to offer is one that will fix the rate of pay of soldiers equivalent to that of unskilled labor in that particular period. I think it would be a good thing if a price ceiling could be fixed, but if we do that and no more, we will not have accomplished a thing. There is not a thing in this bill giving a bit of authority that did not exist during the last war. It is true that the War Board had to take their authority from a letter written by President Wilson, but at the same time the same power existed and in almost every case was exercised as that which is granted in this bill.

I wish we could vote on the report. There is some good stuff in the report, and if we could adopt that instead of the bill we would have something. But it is not in the bill.

The next amendment I shall offer is one to conscript the management of industry. No one has yet convinced me that you cannot conscript industry with a blanket conscription that will force industry to obey, and if it does not obey, then I say mete out to it the same treatment that is meted out to a soldier when he refuses to obey. You cannot make me believe that the Government of the United States cannot lay its hands on the material resources of this country and use them for the prosecution of war. You cannot make me believe that the Government cannot lay its hand on money to finance the war. I know you had all of that in your committee hearings and I read every word of it, but I am still unconvinced that the majesty of the flag can command men and yet must get down on its knees and beg for enough money at 4 percent interest to pay for the food that the men eat. Abraham Lincoln said:

> I can take the widow's only son from between the plow handles and put him at the battle front where his life won't be good for 6 minutes, but I cannot lay my hand on enough money to pay for the food that he eats.

Mr. Chairman, that was just as true in the World War as it was in the Civil War and that condition is not changed in this bill. If we will put it in there tomorrow so that the Government will conscript the material resources of this country, and the management of industry, as well as the man power, then I shall vote to support the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. May I ask the gentleman what he means by "conscripting industry"?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Management.

Mr. McSWAIN. Does the gentleman mean to bring the superintendent of a mill or the president of a mill into military service? Is that the gentleman's idea?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. That is a question that I will not have time to answer fully, but by a blanket power stating that at the beginning of war every manager of industry is thereby and thereafter at the immediate disposal of the Government and subject to military order and command would automatically conscript him, and that they should hold themselves in readiness awaiting orders, just like we were told to hold ourselves in readiness awaiting orders to move.

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman will read section 4 he will find that under the priority power and the licensing power you can make a factory do what you want it to do or you will put it out of business.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Is that any power we did not have before?

Mr. McSWAIN. Certainly that power did not exist before in law. It was exercised as a matter of concession.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. But the power was there. What is the difference?

Mr. McSWAIN. No; the power is not there.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. But the power was exercised just the same.

Mr. McSWAIN. The people thought it was there and they did not question it. Is the gentleman opposed to the conscription of labor?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I shall not inject the question of the conscription of labor into the debate as an argument against your bill, but, personally, I do not see why every man in the country and every dime of resource should not be at the call of the Government in case of war. That is my personal opinion. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McSWAIN. I do not see how the gentleman can consistently ask to bring into the military service of the country the president or the superintendent of an industry, and not agree to go all down the line, because the trouble might occur down the line just as much as it might occur at the top. Through the priority and through the licensing system we can make the fellow at the top obey, because if he does not we will shut his plant down.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. You had that power but it was not written into law. For 3 months the Du Ponts stood off the Government at the crisis of the war, refusing to manufacture powder at Old Hickory because their margin of profit was not large enough, while our boys were facing death over there. Is that not so?

Mr. McSWAIN. We did not have the power. That was the trouble.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. You did not have the power.

Mr. McSWAIN. No.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Did not Mr. Baruch, in his testimony before the gentleman's committee, say that he had the power to commandeer any plant in the country?

Mr. McSWAIN. He had the power to commandeer, but he did not have the power to conscript the superintendent or the principal and put them into military service.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. That is what I want to put into this bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. All right. That is good. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] has again expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. AMLIE].

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] spoke, he referred to a page in Wisconsin history with which I am thoroughly familiar; that is, the persecution of Senator La Follette because of his stand against the World War. Now, we had other people who voted against the World War, but who, after war was declared, voted for all measures desired by the profiteers. They were not persecuted. On the other hand, we had Members who voted for the war but declined to vote for the profiteering measures, and they were persecuted just as vigorously as was the senior Senator from Wisconsin. I mention that for this reason: That we are trying now to legislate for a time that will come when we will be in war. We will not be in war unless we first create a state of war hysteria that makes a declaration of war possible. After that is possible, we all know the country is going to have only one object, and that is the winning of the war, and woe to any man who stands in the way of winning the war.

Now, we are not going to take the profits out of war. This bill is not going to take the profits out of war. I think that is perfectly clear from the testimony taken before the many committees that have held hearings on this subject during the past 12 years or more.

I want to refer briefly to the war plan of the War College. It is called the "mobilization plan", put out by the War Planning Division of the Army and the Navy. It has been approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy. These plans were for sale in the document room for 15 cents.

These plans contemplate, in the event of another war, the imposition of a military dictatorship on the United States, just as effective as anything that now prevails in Germany or Italy. A short time ago Senator CLARK, of Missouri, introduced in the United States Senate seven measures which were copied from the mobilization plan of the Army and Navy. Those measures are S. 1716 to S. 1722, both inclusive. For your information, those bills would give the President complete control over the issuance of securities in any form and full and complete control over the financial structure of the country. It would give to the President, that is, the military dictatorship, complete control over all production, foodstuffs, materials, commodities, rights or services essential in the prosecution of war; the power to fix prices, compensation, and profits; to limit or prohibit the purchase, sale, use, manufacture, or distribution of any foodstuff, material, commodities, rights, or service whatsoever. The third bill would give the President the right to take over the use and ownership of any and all personal and real property. The fourth bill would give the military dictatorship, that is, the President, the right to set up machinery for the complete insurance of foreign commerce against the risk of war.

The fifth bill gives the President—the military dictatorship—complete control over all imports and exports, and control over all persons engaged in such trade. This bill also contemplates setting up machinery for trading with the enemy.

CHILD LABOR IS AUTHORIZED

The sixth bill provides for the drafting of all male citizens above the age of 18. It contemplates drafting laborers as well as soldiers, and creates a War Labor Administration to deal with this phase of the plan. The use of child labor is apparently contemplated, because the bill states:

> While the employment of children under the age of 16 years in industry and agriculture will be avoided wherever possible, it must be recognized from the beginning that the nature of the emergency may require such employment in its later stages.

It will be noted that these seven bills give the military forces full authority over the entire man power of the Nation. The draft bill provides for trial by court martial of any person eligible for the draft who fails to respond.

The bills also give the military dictatorship complete control over personal property by permitting the President to confiscate private property at his own price and dispose of it on such terms as he may make. If the owner objects to the price fixed, he is to be paid 75 percent of that figure, and the bill jestingly provides that he may sue for the balance.

Under these bills complete censorship of the press would be accomplished as well as of the radio and everything else. The bills, if enacted, would practically result in suspension of the right of habeas corpus proceedings and civil liberties generally.

It should be noted that these bills are merely a part of the War College plan and are not to be ascribed to the President who happens to be in the White House at the moment.

All we need at any time to give us a military dictatorship comparable to what now obtains in Italy and Germany is merely the development of war hysteria and a declaration of war or a declaration by Congress that a national emergency exists.

These bills were introduced by Senator CLARK against the opposition of the War and Navy Departments. He introduced those bills because he wanted the people to have an opportunity to consider the plans of the War College, which would be imposed upon the country in time of war hysteria, if we ever had war again.

He introduced these so they might be considered at a time when there still existed the possibility of calm and dispassionate consideration. Obviously, the War Department was opposed to the consideration of measures of that kind today, for these measures could be introduced successfully and passed only during a period of war hysteria.

The War College realizes that it could not pass through its real program for a complete military dictatorship in the absence of hysteria.

They have, however, decided to put through the nearest thing to it that stands a chance of passage under the circumstances. This is the McSwain bill. That is why it is before us and when you analyze it you will readily see that this bill puts across the principal elements of the War College plan.

In the first place, the President—the military dictatorship—is given the power to conscript not only men for the military service, but, in fact, all men between certain ages. This has been admitted by the sponsors of the bill. This would permit the conscription of labor. This would permit the complete regimentation of the American people in the same way and to the same extent that it has been accomplished by Hitler in Germany and Mussolini in Italy.

Having given the President this far-reaching power over labor the bill then provides not only that these powers may be made available to the military dictatorship in case of war with a foreign power but also in case of domestic difficulties.

Already labor after 6 years of depression has undergone unbearable pressure. The 21,000,000 people on relief indicate this. The 12,000,000 unemployed is evidence of this fact, and at the same time we have a situation where 1 percent of the people own 60 percent of the Nation's wealth and where one-tenth of 1 percent of the people on the one hand have an income as great as that of 47,000,000 people on the other. The rulers of the land realize there is a limit to what the American working people will stand for. They anticipate that the people in sheer desperation may resort to the weapon of the general strike. That is why they seek the enactment of the McSwain bill.

The military forces of the Nation will then be able and ready to deal with a desperate and outraged citizenry. Congress need only declare that a national emergency exists and the President, through the instrumentality of the military forces, will be able to do in this country what Hitler has done in Germany and Mussolini in Italy.

I object to the McSwain bill because it is a dishonest and misleading piece of legislation. For this reason it is dangerous. It creates the impression erroneously that profits are to be taken out of war. That has been brought out by several of the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House who have asked questions and made speeches. It is evident that they believe that this measure will take the profits out of war. They have indicated that they will vote for the measure because they believe that it would serve to take the profits out of war.

If this measure is passed we shall immediately see the patriotic organizations referred to by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] as belonging to "the coalition of patriotic societies" proceed to spread the good tidings to all the American people that profits have been taken out of war.

Why should we create this false impression in the minds of the people? It seems to me that this is being done deliberately. It is one of the purposes of the bill. It is being done so that there will be created in the minds of the people the belief that profits have been taken out of war. If the people are led to this erroneous belief, it will make it easier to lead them into war. It will make it easier to bring pressure on Congress at some future date to declare that a national emergency exists. It will make it easier to push through further legislation for the conscription of labor, further suppression of civil liberties, and for the complete control of the people by a military dictatorship.

The people who have sponsored this bill as a means of taking the profits out of war know it would not have this effect. During the time that remains I want to read briefly some of the testimony given by past commanders of the American Legion. I refer first to statements made by Mr. Spafford, who was commander of the Legion in 1928. On May 21, 1928, he gave this testimony:

Mr. JAMES. How are you going to draft capital under your bill, under section 22?
Mr. SPAFFORD. You cannot draft capital; you know that, sir.
Mr. GARRETT. Why?
Mr. SPAFFORD. The Constitution of the United States says that you cannot take a man's property without just compensation.

Mr. Ralph T. O'Neil, former National Commander of the American Legion, appearing before the War Policies Commission in 1931, testified as follows—page 13:

Now, you will recall, I stated a few moment ago that it is our theory when you take money, material, or supplies, that the owners of those materials or supplies or money should be paid a fair profit.

Page 22 and following:

Mr. COLLINS. In other words, you favor about the same agencies to handle the fields, the factories, and the mines, and the railroads that we had during the last war?
Mr. O'NEIL. Along that general line as we had at the close of the last war.
Mr. COLLINS. That is what I say; you would bring into existence again those same agencies through some sort of legal enactment.
Mr. O'NEIL. Yes; generally speaking.
Mr. COLLINS. Now, how would you deal with labor * * *?
Mr. O'NEIL. * * * I think there should be some regulation of labor; that is my own personal opinion. It is a question of how far you can go under this resolution, perhaps. * * * I assume that if you cannot conscript labor you, perhaps, cannot force them to serve at any particular price.

Page 25:

Mr. COLLINS. In your statement that you made previously, that would give them a reasonable return on their investment.
Mr. O'NEIL. Oh, yes.
Mr. COLLINS. Well, that is the same as the cost-plus plan.
Mr. O'NEIL. It is not far off in principle, of course.
Mr. COLLINS. That is what I thought.

Page 28:

Mr. COLLINS. In other words, your idea is that instead of taking the profits out of war you ought to yield to industry in time of war a certain return on their investment. That is your idea, boiled down, as I see it?
Mr. O'NEIL. Yes. If we do not want to change this constitutional provision, you have to do that.
Mr. COLLINS. And you are not proposing an amendment to the Constitution?
Mr. O'NEIL. No.
Mr. COLLINS. And in event of war you think they ought to be paid up to 7 percent?
Mr. O'NEIL. That is a fair return; yes.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I shall touch just one phase of this very large question. With the general purposes of the bill to take the profit out of war, I am in sympathy, but like many other Members of the House, I am considerably disturbed and worried by the labor-conscription feature of the pending bill. My good and honest friend from South Carolina, the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, says there is no labor-conscription feature, but that is not the way we read the bill. It is not the way the leaders of organized labor read the bill, and they have equal rights with other individuals and groups to be heard in a discussion of this measure.

In replying on yesterday to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], Chairman McSWAIN said:

If the gentleman will carefully read the language of the measure, the purpose is to draft into the military service of the United States and not to draft for the purpose of laboring at all.

But let us analyze the bill. Section 3 gives the President the power to draft into the service of the United States such members of the unorganized militia as he may deem necessary. Mark the language. It does not say that the President shall have power to draft into the military service of the United States persons of the ages described, but it does say he shall have power to draft them into the service of the United States. It does say that he shall have this authority whenever in his judgment an emergency demands the immediate increase of the Military Establishment, but it then goes further, as just stated, and gives him authority to draft them into the service of the United States, nonmilitary as well as military.

This, in my opinion, gives the President sweeping power to conscript labor for industrial employment whenever, according to his interpretation, that sort of conscripted service is necessary to the Military Establishment or to carry on the military needs of the Government. There is even a question as to whether it would not authorize the conscription of women for industrial employment and some very good authorities believe that it does. I am not entirely satisfied on that point, although I know we are accustomed to believe that the term "unorganized militia" refers to all male citizens of the United States between the ages of 18 and 45 who are not enrolled in any of the military establishments.

Now let us look further into section 3. In line 21 the President is given authority in time of a national emergency to commandeer "public services" for use of the Government. That certainly calls for an explanation. What are public services? Would not the services of workmen and working women in their working capacities be public services to the Nation in time of a national emergency? And what is a "national emergency?" A national emergency need not be war. In some of our acts of Congress we have declared that the depression is a national emergency.

I sent today to the document room of the House and asked them to send me all of the acts under the new deal that declared a national emergency to exist. I have them here; there are 12 of them. Look at them. We have at the present time 12 times a national emergency. If that is the case, should the pending bill pass, the President of the United States could proceed at once under a national emergency to draft people into the service.

A great strike that paralyzes transportation and a shortage of food supplies with threatened starvation to millions might be a national emergency. In this section of the bill we make the President of the United States as powerful a dictator as Hitler or Mussolini, and we give him authority to conscript men and women for public services in any national emergency that may not be a war at all. We give him authority which conceivably might be exercised in the case of a great strike to compel employees to render public services by returning to work or by going elsewhere to work according to Executive direction.

My apprehensions in regard to this legislation are shared by leaders of organized labor, for whom I have the highest respect. Edward Keating, a former distinguished Member of this body and now editor of Labor, the official organ of the railroad brotherhoods, opposes this bill as one that might make possible the conscription of both men and women for industrial as well as for military service. There is no more able exponent of labor in America than Mr. Keating, or one with a broader humanitarian vision.

Daniel J. Tobin, of Indianapolis, a great leader of organized labor, whom President Roosevelt for a long time had under consideration for appointment as Secretary of Labor in his Cabinet, writes to me from Indianapolis that he has carefully examined the bill now before the House, and he adds:

It is my opinion, after 30 years of experience in the labor movement and having an active part from a civil standpoint in keeping the wheel rolling during the World War, I repeat, there is no need for the conscription of men in industrial employments. The Government had quite an unpleasant experience in running the railroads during the last great war, although at that time I believed, with many others, that it was an absolute necessity for the Government to take over the transportation lines. But, even then, there was not any conscription of employment and with everyone working as before except those under Government regulation and operation we got results.

When the Government begins to conscript, or take over, slaughterhouses and civil employments, it will have more on its hands than it can successfully carry on. Our Government in time of war has an enormous job on its hands to look after the military and naval end of the conflict and to see that industries are properly managed so that we may have the proper output and to prevent strikes and lockouts from the standpoint of conciliation and not from the point of view of forcing everything under military control. The McSwain bill, as you so thoroughly analyze, as at present written would mean the conscription of human beings for employment as well as in defense of our country.

In expressing this opinion, I have no hesitancy in saying that it is the opinion of the legitimate, bona fide organized labor movement of America.

I want to support the bill of the gentleman from South Carolina, but I cannot do so unless it is amended in clear and specific terms so as to exempt the conscription of labor for industrial employment. I am sure that many other Members of the House feel exactly as I do about this matter. I think the gentleman from South Carolina, for whose sterling character I have the greatest admiration, has been eminently fair in bringing in his bill wide open for amendments. I know he is sincere in believing that the measure as it stands does not authorize the conscription of labor for industrial employment, but in respect to the opinions of those who differ with him, I believe he will agree that his bill needs clarification. I have prepared for that purpose a simple, direct amendment, the adoption of which I believe will satisfy all persons who are opposed to the bill on the grounds of conscription. At the proper time I shall offer this amendment as a provision at the end of section 3 of the bill. My amendment is as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize the President to conscript human beings for service in industry.

I ask my lovable friend from South Carolina, who has already stated that the purpose of the bill is not to conscript labor, whether in the interest of clarifying the measure and composing differences he will not be willing to accept my amendment?

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I may state that the purpose of the bill is not to conscript labor. For the purpose of clarifying the measure and also that the Members of the House may know that this point will be cleared up, I will state that the committee intended, when this legislation was drawn up, that there should be no attempt to conscript labor, and at the proper time some member of the committee will offer an amendment that will amply take care of the objections made in this respect.

Mr. LUDLOW. That is very encouraging; I thank the gentleman; but I wonder if the gentleman from South Carolina would express himself on this particular amendment I have offered, or does he feel that he cannot go so far at this time?

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman recognizes that the amendment of a member of the committee would have priority over amendments offered by those not members of the committee; and before the gentleman from Indiana spoke, the gentleman from Pennsylvania told me that he desired to clarify the bill in this respect. We want to say that we are in entire accord with the views of the gentleman from Indiana, and we thank him for his contribution. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. That being the case I should like to say that I am immensely pleased, because I think that will meet the objections of many Members of the House. I recognize, of course, that a member of the committee would have precedence over me to offer the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 7 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I had expected to conclude the debate on the part of the proponents of the bill, but inasmuch as two members of the committee handling the bill, who desire to address the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union are not on the floor, I shall go forward at least briefly at this time.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield.

Mr. BELL. I am very much interested in this bill. If I understood correctly the statement of the chairman of the committee yesterday, it was to the effect that upon the passage of the bill now under consideration he would introduce another bill, which would come from the Committee on Ways and Means, to put some taxing features into this bill, so it actually will take the profits out of war; that this bill is preliminary to the other. Did I understand the gentleman correctly?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; it may be necessary to supplement this bill, the only one the Committee on Military Affairs had jurisdiction to consider, with legislation from the Committee on Ways and Means; from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as was discussed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]; from the Committee on Banking and Currency; and perhaps from the Committee on Labor and other committees having jurisdiction of various factors in this whole problem.

Mr. BELL. Was it the plan of the committee to cooperate later on with the Committee on Ways and Means for the purpose of bringing in a bill to supplement this one?

Mr. McSWAIN. I am quite sure it is. The report of the committee itself states that a bill should go before the Committee on Ways and Means directing the taxing at 100 percent of excess war profits. I cannot pledge the whole committee, but I can pledge myself as I did yesterday on that proposition. I want to say also that the only way any composite bill could be brought in by any one committee would be for the House to create, under a special rule, a committee and at the same time giving it jurisdiction of such composite bill. For instance, we see in the RECORD this morning what purports to be the tentative draft of a bill that is being considered by a special committee in another branch of Congress. If that bill were introduced into this body, and I am sympathetic with the general idea of the bill, and the purposes of the various provisions in it, may I ask to which committee the bill would be referred? What committee would have the predominant interest in that legislation? The Speaker, under the rules of the House, would have to cut that bill up into five or six different sections.

Mr. BELL. Does not the gentleman think that such a committee ought to be appointed and authorized to deal with this subject as a whole, so that when the bill does come before the House we will have a bill that will satisfy the minds of all those who want to take the profits out of war?

Mr. McSWAIN. May I say to the gentleman that I think one step at a time by committees having experience and training in the different classes of legislation will finally result in building up a more workable and practical system of legislation to meet the situation which we expect to meet. May I say to the gentleman that the idea which the gentleman has in mind was in my mind throughout all of these years when I was seeking to set up the War Policies Commission. I endeavored to have that Commission frame a composite piece of legislation to cover the whole field, bring it in here and ask Congress to enact that legislation as a whole. However, I could not get that resolution through. The Congress at that time said: "No; we will not give a special commission like the War Policies Commission, which has personnel on it not Members of Congress, the power to bring in a bill." I wanted them to have the power to bring in a bill. That was in my original resolution, but that feature was cut out.

Mr. Chairman, we have been in this fight for 11 or 12 years, and when we get in sight of the first step do not say, because we cannot go all the way in one bound, "We will not go at all." Let us take it as we find it. When you go out bird hunting you do not wait until you see a whole covey of birds fly up. You take a shot at the first bird that flies up.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. This bill states that—

Whenever Congress shall declare war or the existence of an emergency due to the imminence of war.

What is the necessity for the words "or the existence of an emergency due to the imminence of war"?

Mr. McSWAIN. That will be up to the Congress. It will have to be declared by the Congress.

Mr. McCORMACK. If Congress declares an imminent situation to exist, that is an actual declaration of war?

Mr. McSWAIN. It might or might not be.

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, what is the necessity for that language?

Mr. McSWAIN. I will explain it.

Mr. McCORMACK. All right.

Mr. McSWAIN. Suppose it was almost certain for some months in advance that we would be embroiled in a war, but prices commenced to rise far in advance of the actual declaration of war. This Congress could say that an emergency now exists; "We are not going to declare war, but to keep this run-away condition in prices from stifling and choking the power of this Nation to make war we will now declare an emergency and authorize the President to put a ceiling upon prices." That is all this measure does.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have not a lack of harmony with the gentleman; however, it seems to me if, for example, there was an imminence of war at the present time with some other country, and we will assume that the Congress was to declare that fact, so far as the other country was concerned, that would be tantamount to an actual declaration of war, and whatever chance we might have to avert the war would be seriously interfered with. That is why I think it should be confined to an actual declaration of war.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this pending measure it is merely a declaration of policy in advance of war. In other words, it is carrying out the adage "In time of peace prepare for war", and it carries with it ample authority for the President of the United States to carry into effect the policy that is here authorized or adopted if and when the Congress declares an emergency to exist or makes an outright declaration of war.

Some of the gentlemen who have spoken in opposition to this measure do not seem to get the general idea. The difference between the present situation and the situation in which we found ourselves during the late war is this: We are taking steps now at a time when there is no pyramiding of prices to declare a policy under which the President of the United States, as the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, may establish a ceiling or freeze prices. That is quite a different situation from that in which we found ourselves in 1917 and 1918 after the European nations had for 2 years or more been in active preparation for war and actually engaged in war, and when as a result of the demand for our products to meet the needs of European governments, prices at that time reached the sky in some instances.

As stated by the distinguished Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, if it is found that even during times of peace and in anticipation of a condition that might provoke war, prices are too high, this authority may be exercised, and I am not yet persuaded that there ought not to be some means in this country of even freezing prices in times of peace. Of course, this bill merely declares a policy and provides the method by which the policy may be made effective. It is known by all men in this House who are well informed, and, of course, all of them are, that the Military Affairs Committee is not a committee that can legislate upon the subject of taxation; therefore, it could not bring in a bill providing for the levying of taxes, and especially the levying of taxes that would meet war conditions.

I doubt if there is a Member of this House who would say he would vote for a tax measure that would levy taxes in times of peace that he would not vote for in time of war. Therefore, it is just preparing the way so that it might have this effect. I have heard the arguments upon the floor of this House ever since I have been in Congress that there were profiteers in the country. I have heard some of the best men in this country denounce the profiteers, and they may have been guilty of profiteering. It is said here, and reliably so, that there were billions of dollars made in excess profits during the World War. I am persuaded if this country's business men, if this country's factory owners, if the financiers and owners of the great steel plants and munition manufacturers of this country know 10 years or 20 years in advance of a war that the policy of the Government is that they are not going to be permitted to make great, gigantic profits when a war does come, they will not build their plants as war plants and for war needs but will build them for the needs of industry in this country as it develops.

Industry in a land of peace and plenty like this will always develop to the point where it will be capable any day, any hour, any night of meeting the demands of war, and when this bill goes into effect it is notice to industry, it is notice to the multimillionaire, it is notice to the president of the great Bethlehem Steel Co. and to the president of the United States Steel Corporation and to the Du Ponts, and all other war munitions makers in this country, that the United States Government has adopted a policy that says you cannot have 200-percent or 1,000-percent profit upon your production.

This means that peace has been declared already, and I think the record of the Military Affairs Committee will show that when the title of this bill came out in its original form it was merely a bill, as recited, "to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense", and upon my suggestion the words "and promote peace" were added to the title of the bill.

I did this because I believe that as the United States has been the great, shining example to the nations of the earth——

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. I notice on page 2, and I am asking this as a matter of information and as an ex-service man who gave 2 years to his country in the World War——

Mr. MAY. I congratulate you, sir. It is to you and your comrades that the world shall forever be indebted for your heroic and sacrificial service.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. What is meant by the words "unorganized militia"?

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. MAY. Yes; I yield to my distinguished chairman.

Mr. McSWAIN. It has been the language of the common law for hundreds of years that the "unorganized militia" means all male persons capable of bearing arms who were not already in the organized militia, such as the National Guard.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Do we not have today, separate and apart from the laity, what is commonly known as the "State militia"?

Mr. McSWAIN. We have that; yes.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. And they are not a part of the armed forces?

Mr. McSWAIN. The National Guard is now a part of the armed forces.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. And is not this a direct implication that you are driving home the fact it applies only to the State militias and not to the laity proper? I know from personal knowledge how my comrades of the World War fought so valiantly, and I do not think there should be any sort of chance for discrimination against them. My Nation is in war; we must all bear the burden.

Mr. McSWAIN. If I may answer that, no; because, under the National Guard Act passed by this House and by the Congress on June 15, 1933, the National Guard can be immediately ordered by the President of the United States into the national service. So when they go out there is nobody to draft except the unorganized militia.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. I have made the observation for the reason that I remember well the President's proclamation after our Congress declared war in 1917, that the word "citizen" would suffice in the common, ordinary parlance, as we understand it, and as for me, I shall always answer my country's call whenever and wherever I am needed, and I am sure all good Americans will do likewise. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman was in the National Guard in 1917, he will recall that they were drafted into the Federal service.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. No; I was not in it. I was a volunteer, as I shall be again if the time ever comes that our country is so unfortunate as to be plunged into war.

Mr. McSWAIN. But under the terms of the new National Guard Act, which was supported by the National Guard Association, the National Guard can now be ordered into the Federal service at any time.

Mr. MAY. That is it, exactly, but I am glad to say that my colleague [Mr. DUNN] from Mississippi was not only a good soldier, but he is a great American also.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. If the gentleman will yield, the National Defense Act, section 57, provides that the militia is divided into three classes—the National Guard, the Naval Militia, and the unorganized militia.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield, although I have only a few minutes.

Mr. LUDLOW. The unorganized militia, I may add, is composed of persons between 18 and 45 years of age.

Mr. McSWAIN. The unorganized militia.

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. There is no limitation in the Federal law upon that subject. Under the common law it includes all persons capable of bearing arms.

Mr. LUDLOW. The Library of Congress so informed me the other day.

Mr. McSWAIN. If they say so, I am wrong, and I stand corrected.

Mr. MAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, may I make just one further brief statement, and that is, as I have repeatedly stated upon the floor of this House, that I am bitterly opposed to war and strongly in favor of world peace, but my disagreement with many good people equally as sincere as I arises out of our difference in judgment and not to any difference in our ultimate objective. There are those who believe in peace at any price and they, I think mistakenly, believe that we should leave this vast, growing, powerful Nation of ours with its hands tied, wholly unprepared to defend itself if attacked, while I believe that if there ever comes a time when any nation on earth chooses to attack us, if they know that we are adequately prepared to defend ourselves, they will be less likely to attack us. I ask you, my colleagues, is our country, whose footsteps have always led toward the paths of peace, and whose policy is not one of aggression, but one of defense and tolerance, to be rendered helpless in the hour of great peril by those who would have peace at any price? As for me, Mr. Chairman, I repeat I want peace. I love peace, I covet peace, and I will go so far as to repeat that I so greatly desire peace that, if need be, I am willing to fight for it, but I want to be prepared to fight, if fight I must. Did you ever realize that our war establishment is not in fact a war department, but is in reality a peace establishment because it has never really provoked or brought on a war while, on the other hand, it has successfully concluded and settled in glorious victory every conflict in which this Nation, as such, has engaged. Finally, Mr. Chairman, in the language of Stephen Decatur, "My country—may she always be right, but right or wrong, my country." That is my sentiment. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, I do not believe that this legislation will actually and effectively take the profit out of war. There is not a Member of this Committee who has made an intensive study of the matter who will venture to say that this measure will stop profiteering in time of war—not one Member of the Committee. On the other hand, they all do say and contend that it will have to be followed by other legislation, which will undoubtedly have to originate in the Ways and Means Committee of this House.

Mr. McSWAIN. We think that if they are clamped down by this bill, there will be no chance to make any profits except through an increase of industry.

Mr. WITHROW. I do not agree with you. I have great respect for the chairman of the committee, and if it was within his power to complete this legislation I would be for it, but the remaining legislation which is necessary on this subject is not under the control of the gentleman's committee.

Even if this half of the legislation necessary on this subject were effective, it would still be necessary to secure action on an income taxation provision by the Ways and Means Committee, and we have no assurance whatever that such action will be taken by the Ways and Means Committee. Why should we do only half of the job when there is no assurance that the remaining and most important half will be completed? Why not enact complete and adequate legislation on this subject without further delay?

I wish to call especial attention to several sections of this bill. For example, the section which the chairman of the committee mentioned, which freezes the price ceiling. Anyone who has had anything to do with manufacturing, who has had any contact with manufacturing, realizes that during time of peace the cost of selling an article ranges from 20 to 90 percent of the selling price of that article. During time of war, however, the selling cost is greatly reduced or entirely eliminated, so that if we merely freeze the price, we are in effect increasing the manufacturers' profits from 20 to 90 percent, which is certainly excessive.

Section 2 of this bill says that the President may have the right to regulate prices in time of war. He would no doubt appoint a commission and hold hearings to establish prices. Such action must of necessity be slow, so that by the time it was possible to adjust prices the war would probably be over. Certainly the horse would be stolen before the barn door could be locked.

In addition, this bill provides the authority to conscript labor and to conscript industry in time of war. We have had experience with Government war-time operation of industry. During the World War the Government took over the railroads. The result was that the railroads continued to be operated by the same men who were operating them before the war, and those gentlemen proceeded to make a farce of Government control. The only difference was that all the railroads proceeded to rebuild their establishments at the expense of the taxpayer.

This measure would make it possible for all industries to rebuild their plants during war time at the expense of the taxpayer.

Sections 4 to 6 of this measure are just repetitions in which it is provided that all the war profiteers may be treated fairly and liberally, and section 7 provides a penalty if they do not treat one another fairly. [Laughter.]

Our Nation demands that this Congress enact legislation which will actually and effectively take the profit out of war. This half-way measure which is now being considered will not do that. If we pass this bill, I and all of you know that no supplementary legislation on this subject will be passed by this Congress.

I also want to say that this is not a case in which the Senate can pull our chestnuts out of the fire by substituting the Nye taxation features, which we all know would adequately meet this problem. This is due to the fact that all taxation legislation must arise in the House and cannot be instigated in the Senate.

It is perhaps unnecessary to remind you that the legislation which has been suggested by Senator NYE, and which I have tried to substitute for this half-way measure, makes possible the use of every helpful device which is included in this bill, and in addition provides for the confiscation by the Government of all profits over 6 percent in the form of an income tax during time of war. That, in my opinion, is a real and effective means of taking the profit out of war.

No more fitting monument could be erected to the memory of those brave men who have given their lives in the service of their country than the enactment of legislation which will actually and effectively outlaw all private profit in the event of future war. Such legislation should, and I am sure will, serve as a guaranty that this Nation will not be drawn into any foreign conflict for the profit of any individual or group of individuals.

I feel that such legislation, more than all of the peace conferences which have been or will be held, will serve to insure that the United States will not be guilty of aggression in any war. It will serve as a challenge to the saber-rattling nations of Europe and Asia to follow our example in maintaining peace with their neighbors and with the world.

It is almost beyond belief that there are those who would profit from the blood shed by the youth of our Nation and from the suffering of their widows and orphans.

In the name of humanity and for the preservation of our Nation we must here and now enact legislation which will actually and effectively eliminate private profit in time of war. [Applause.]

(The time of Mr. WITHROW having expired, he was given 5 minutes more.)

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. Yes.

Mr. AMLIE. Can these powers be invoked only in case of war with a foreign power?

Mr. WITHROW. No. As I understand it, they could be invoked in case of any national emergency. I imagine if there were a strike it might be possible to invoke these powers.

Mr. McFARLANE. And I should like to hear some discussion on this point. If we needed a little help to enforce some of the alphabetical program would it not be possible to declare an emergency and call out the militia for that purpose?

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman, I want to stop profiteering in time of war. I believe in reasonable profits, but will the chairman of this committee submit to having this bill sent to the Ways and Means Committee in order that they may put in the bill those taxing provisions which are necessary to make it effective?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute in order to answer the question asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin. When he asked that question he ought to know that no chairman of the committee will subordinate the jurisdiction of his committee. I respected the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means by not invading its province. I certainly will not surrender the jurisdiction of this committee on any matter. We have brought in legislation here that we believe will be effective, and as far as our committee can go. I am willing as a Member of Congress to go before any other committee and fight for legislation that will supplement this in the interest of national defense.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL].

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we are splitting hairs on this bill. We are going into the minutia of detail. I am in favor of this bill, because I am in favor of taking the profits out of war, and I believe that this committee has done a pretty good job. I do not believe that they would claim it is 100 percent perfect, but I have not yet seen a bill emanate from this House that is 100 percent perfect. All they are doing, and I reiterate I think they have done a good job, is to take a step in the right direction. It has been said this afternoon that for many years we have been trying to get a bill through this House somewhat along this line, with its objective the taking of profits out of war, and we have not yet gotten a bill through this House along that line. Some gentlemen say we do not need this bill, because during the World War the President issued an order along this line and had the authority at that time. By the same token you might just as well take all of your statutes and throw them in the fire and run this country by Presidential edicts. We want this bill passed, because it is a start in the right direction. It is a statement of policy, it is something that will give us some idea of what we may expect in case we are unfortunately drawn into war in the future. I am a veteran of the World War. It is true that I did not spend many months in it, but those I did spend were as a private in the Infantry, and I know a little about war. In my home city, Portland, Oreg., we have a veterans' hospital. There are many men and some women in that hospital for whom the armistice has not yet been signed and to whom the war will never be over, because they are suffering the tortures of the damned on account of that terrible war that was fought, we were told, to protect democracy.

Practically every war is started because of selfishness, greed, and avarice, because profits can be made. One would think from the arguments of some of the gentlemen here that if this bill is passed we will not get another chance to improve upon this bill at any time in the future. Let them come on with their amendments, if they are legitimate, and offer them, and let us consider them.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EKWALL. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. There is one thing that does not seem to me to have been brought out as yet, and that is the fact that the conferees that may be appointed on this bill might agree to accept an amendment of the Senate imposing taxes, and I would be very much interested in having an expression of opinion from the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] upon that point.

Mr. EKWALL. I think there is no question but that if the bill goes to the other end of the Capitol and is sent to conference that the conferees of the House will be glad to accept a reasonable amendment of the Senate.

Mr. McFARLANE. But a tax amendment offered in the Senate would not be germane under the Constitution, which provides that all tax matters must originate in the House. How are we going to get a tax amendment on this bill which will really take the profits out of war?

Mr. EKWALL. Possibly that is true.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Furthermore, any such effort on the part of the Senate would not be within the differences that would exist between the House and the Senate and would not be proper.

Mr. McSWAIN. The point has been made often when conferees went beyond the scope of the legislation proposed by the respective Houses that a special rule could be adopted to make the additional matter in order.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EKWALL. I cannot yield further.

Many encomiums have been directed to our genial friend who is chairman of this committee. They say they are willing to trust him, but, by implication, are not willing to trust other great committees of this House to whom other features of this legislation would go. I am willing to trust any committee of this House [applause], because I know that every man and every woman on those committees is just as patriotic as I am.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. EKWALL. I know they are imbued with the same ideas that I am. I do not think there is a man or woman in this House or in the Senate who will not subscribe to the proposition that we should take the profit out of war, because the moment the word goes out that we have taken the profit out of war in this country it will reduce to an irreducible minimum the chance of our getting into war. I say this bill is a bill in the right direction and in the interest of insuring, in the future, that profits shall not be coined from the tears of the mothers of this country, and from the suffering and misery which always attends war. I think we ought not quibble and become too technical about it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. EDMISTON], a member of the committee.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, I agree with my colleague from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL]. I am in favor of this legislation. The heading of the bill, "To prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war", states just what this bill does, in my opinion.

I have listened to the Members who are opposing the measure. Probably this bill does not go as far as some of us would like it to go to prevent war, but certainly this bill is an improvement over existing conditions, and I believe will tend to prevent future wars. I do not think any of the other leading nations of the world can resist following with legislation similar to this, because, to my mind, it is a tremendous advantage to the United States of America to have this sort of legislation to enable us to keep out of war; but if we are forced into a war of defense this measure will aid our country in conducting that war rapidly to a successful conclusion. I do not believe the other nations of the world can afford to let us have that advantage and not follow our example by enacting similar legislation in their countries. If all of the leading nations of the world will enact similar legislation, it would certainly have a tendency to make the world stop, look, and listen before declaring war.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], I believe, criticized the bill because of the language in section 3, "that in the event of war or a national emergency declared by Congress to exist", the powers of this bill might be exercised. The gentleman did not object to it in the event of war, but he objected to the language "or national emergency declared by Congress to exist." I cannot see why that is any reason to oppose the legislation because of the language that the powers of this bill may be exercised when Congress thinks a national emergency exists, even though we are not at that time in a state of war. If the emergency of our country is that serious, it seems to me that the powers of this bill to prevent a serious condition in the country should be exercised.

The report on this bill came out of the Committee on Military Affairs after hours of hearings. The Chief of Staff of the Army, General MacArthur, is in favor of this bill. Representatives from the American Federation of Labor appeared and had no objection to the legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. EDMISTON. Gen. Hugh Johnson, who had a leading part in the administration of the Draft Act in the World War, appeared before our committee and heartily endorsed this bill. Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, whose activities to aid President Wilson speed up and control war-time industries are well known, appeared before our committee and heartily endorsed this very bill. I value the opinion of these gentlemen, because they had the experience of trying to do the things this bill provides during the last war this country was engaged in. They know what they were up against, and all of them stated to us that had they had a bill like this during the World War they could have done their jobs more rapidly and much better, and the aftermath of the war would have been much better for the whole country.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN].

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, there is before the House, bill 5529, laudable enough in its adherence to the principle of removing the profits from war but utterly inadequate for the maximal accomplishment of that aim. Its greatest fault is that no provision is made for removing the profits from the preparation for war. It is not sufficient that profit be removed from the actual conduct of war. It is absolutely essential that economic gain be eliminated from the preparation for war.

The plan of the Senate committee investigating the munitions industry proposes a limit to the profit which may be made by a munitions company in time of peace. An income tax of 50 percent would be levied on all individual and corporate incomes under 6 percent and a tax of 100 percent would be levied on all individual and corporate incomes over 6 percent. The adoption of that suggestion would be effective.

A measure properly to promote peace should adopt a pay-as-you-go policy in case of unavoidable war. The adoption of this procedure would result, not only in curbing actual war activities and terminating a war sooner than could be expected under an elastic credit system, but it would abolish for future generations the economic distress and the burdening taxation which inevitably follows war, and hold economically enchained generations whose sole connection with the war for which they are paying consists of their historical studies while in school.

The Senate munitions investigation has shown us all too clearly the connection between war and extra dividends. Here are a few figures taken from Moody's Analysis of Investments, 1912–19, as presented by the chairman of the Senate committee investigating the munitions traffic: The average profit in the 4 years preceding the war for the United States Steel Corporation amounted to $105,331,000 a year. In the 4 years during the war this sum averaged $239,653,000 per year. In the case of Du Pont Corporation, the profit ran from more than $6,000,000 a year to over $58,000,000 a year. In the case of Bethlehem Steel, from $6,840,000 annually to $49,427,000 a year. These are but two of the many examples that might be cited of the profit that comes from war and the preparation for war.

We have seen during the last few months how the Electric Boat Co., of Groton, Conn., brought suit to recover moneys from Germany for royalties on submarines which it claimed Germany had built upon patents, plans, and designs owned exclusively by the Electric Boat Co. We have seen how American cruisers went to Turkey and there demonstrated the latest products of the Driggs Armament Corporation. While 100,000 American boys lost their lives in 1917 and 1918—during the 4 years of the World War—22,000 new millionaires were created over here. These are but few of the many facts that have been ferreted out in recent months. They form part of the reason why the American people insist that never again shall any person make money out of war or the preparation for war.

I cannot support the McSwain bill because should this measure pass it would prevent the passage of an efficacious measure, which would contain provisions potent enough to really carry out the will of the American people, who want peace in no uncertain terms.

The McSwain bill overlooks the all-important fact that money can be made in the preparation for war. It is a comparatively easy thing to date contracts made during the war to the period prior to the declaration of war. I repeat that to pass the McSwain bill would be to defeat our purpose.

I suggest instead that we delay action on this measure until we have had an opportunity to confer with the Senate leaders who are engaged on this legislation and assimilate with the proposal which emanates from the House, those provisions of the Senate bill which are freely acknowledged to be vital to a measure which sincerely and honestly seeks to promote peace by taking profit out of war. The Senate committee has been at work many months, and is equipped to furnish us with concrete suggestions to accomplish our aim to maintain peace.

I was in hopes yesterday that the vote of the House would send this bill back to the committee for further deliberations, from which would result a bill lacking none of the provisions needed to carry out the desire of the American people for peace. The report on the McSwain bill anticipates that the American people will censure the omission of a provision for the levying of an excess-profits tax. The Committee on Military Affairs explains that it has no jurisdiction in raising revenues by any form of taxation. The committee expresses its "deliberate conviction that 100 percent of all profits shown to be due to war-time business conditions shall be taxed out of the person, firm, or corporation earning such excess profits." I am glad the committee has announced its favor of the proposal, but that does not alter the unfortunate fact that the necessary provision is not contained in this measure.

I would be in favor of reporting this measure to the Ways and Means Committee, so that there would arise no question about incorporating in a measure to take profits out of war the right to tax profits. Without such a provision a bill to take profit out of war is only a delusion and a snare.

I believe that any bill that is really to accomplish its purpose must adopt the following principles:

First. There should be a prohibitive tax of at least 50 percent on all corporate profits above 6 percent.

Second. There should be a strict limit on individual incomes during the war. No person should be allowed to make more than $10,000 while other persons are fighting for a dollar a day, risking their very lives.

Third. All commodity and probably all stock exchanges should be closed, so that there can be no speculation in commodities and securities during the war period.

Fourth. The Government should have the power to draft leaders of industry at salaries paid to officers of the Army.

Section 3, in that it applies to a condition of war or to a national emergency, is deserving of the righteous indignation of labor. In a word, it unfairly drafts labor. Similarly, this section is antagonistic to the farmers of our country.

We can fight nationalism and false patriotism on their own grounds; we cannot fight the insidious pressure of men desirous of reaping fortunes out of human lives. The man who makes money out of the conduct of a war, or the preparation for war, is as low as the ghoul who stalks battlefields, taking rings off dead bodies.

In Arlington Cemetery there stands the majestic Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. Throughout the year soldiers stand guard. On this tomb are inscribed these simple words: "Here lies in honored glory a soldier known but to God." For the sake of this soldier and for the hundred thousand comrades he represents, for the sake of the bereaved parents, wives, and children, who are the acutest sufferers of war, we must take the profit out of the preparation for war and out of the ghastly business of war itself before we can sincerely demonstrate an honest desire to prevent war. No man who loves America dare be satisfied with anything less. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, in 8 minutes I am going to try to cover briefly ground that I should like to have had 30 minutes to cover, because I think I could paint a picture that would interest the Members of this body, and which the country should have. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I am going to ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks certain excerpts from the hearings before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KVALE. We have heard much about a step in the right direction. I am willing to agree to that, yet I cannot escape the abhorrence and shame that I feel every time I offer that as a reason for voting for a measure in this body. It is an apology. It is an alibi. It is an expression of disappointment. To a certain extent it is an insincere reason for supporting a measure in which I have no faith. Even then, I may eventually vote "aye" on this bill for that very reason.

With that prelude, I wish to say also, as I said yesterday, that I have a warm regard and a high esteem for the chairman of my committee. I am going to be impertinent enough—and I hope he will not regard it as such—to offer certain pages in the hearings to which I want to refer the Membership of this body.

I am talking to the empty benches this afternoon, and not to those who are loyal enough to sit through a tedious debate, because I hope that some of the absentees may read these remarks in tomorrow morning's RECORD. If they doubt the undaunted spirit of the chairman of our committee in this cause, if they doubt his sincerity of purpose, if they doubt the zeal with which he has devoted himself to this fight, they may find, among many others, his quotations on pages 70, 192, 317, 486, and 490 of the hearings which will dispel that doubt most speedily. So I dismiss that phase of this debate without offering the quotations to which I refer, for they are well surrounded by others almost equally worth quotation, at least in my estimation. I shall be for JOHN MCSWAIN until I lose faith in human nature. That is a big mouthful and I state it with deliberation.

Furthermore, I am willing to admit that this bill will do some good and that it is a step in the right direction. In that regard let me refer you to a few sentences from page 6 of the hearings, a colloquy between the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK], then a member of the committee, whom we have since regretfully lost through promotion, and the chairman with reference to the prices paid during the last war, and with reference to the situation this bill is designed to correct. No longer will there be profits of 600 to 1,000 percent, or more, it is true. But profits will continue, I again assert, and it is that particular feature of guaranteed profits to which I wish to address myself for these few minutes.

I may do one unkind thing—I hope not—in referring you to page 491 of the hearings, to a statement made by the chairman of my committee before the Industrial Mobilization Board, in which he enunciated certain criticisms directed against the Johnson bill at that time. The chairman then said he regarded the Johnson bill as rather immature. He said further:

> I am for its principle absolutely, but I think its danger consists in its brevity.

That is my identical position today, my dear chairman of my committee, whose name the present measure bears—

> I think that we have got to be sufficiently specific to insure that this procedure of drafting both man power and material resources shall not only conform to the Constitution, but that it shall also conform to the sentiments and the righteous public opinion of the people of this Nation; and it will be the cheapest form of preparedness that has ever been invoked for us to write, if necessary, this legislation into a hundred or five hundred or a thousand pages of statute books, so that this law in all its details, so far as they may be anticipated reasonably now, based upon past experience, shall stand there as a sort of warning to jingoists and militarists and all who hope to profit by war, and certainly hope not to suffer by war, that they must not rush this Nation heedlessly into war.

And again, Chairman McSWAIN, I say those splendid words of yours, uttered 11 years ago on another occasion, are applicable in this debate and well worth the consideration of this body and of thinking citizens all through this land.

Yesterday a few good friends and colleagues of mine upon the committee sought to administer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] and to myself a friendly spanking because they honestly differed with us as to what this measure ultimately would do and possibly might permit. That does not disturb me at all, and I am not going to be resentful of that; nor am I going to be hurt about it. I only say to those gentlemen that I respect their sincerity and I ask them to respect mine. I am tempted to wonder, though, if they read the hearings, in the course of which I questioned witnesses during times they may have been absent necessarily from the committee room. Certainly I had thought the attitude of Mr. MAVERICK and of myself, and our convictions as well, were well understood by even casual friends on the committee roster.

And if we chose, out of regard for our committee chairman, to subdue our objections in committee to the point where we failed to shout "no" on the critical vote or failed to avail ourselves of the right to file a minority report—and I may say that more than one whose name has not yet been brought into this discussion indicated to me grave doubts as to approval of the bill—and air our misgivings on the floor, that is our responsibility. For that I, at least, am not answerable to any colleague, on the committee or in the House, save for myself. At least I may say that I do not regard myself as inferior to or subject to anyone among them. I consider them my equals, at least in rights and privileges.

Furthermore, I may add that some time ago I personally gave notice informally to my committee chairman that I must oppose the measure on the floor, and he will certainly be glad to corroborate my statement, if I know him, that he directed me unhesitatingly to do exactly what my heart told me to do, and that he would harbor not the slightest bit of hurt or ill will, and that he would not permit it to change our personal relationships.

For the sake of those who are interested, the following citations and quotations will save much thumbing of pages and needless searching through the volume of testimony.

Read first this extract from the testimony of National Commander Belgrano, of the American Legion, on page 12 of the volume. He there states, in reply to a well-directed question by Representative FITZPATRICK, a colleague whom we since have regretfully lost through promotion to another major committee:

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Do you believe that if the Government can conscript human life, they ought to be in a position to conscript properties or the profits to be taken out entirely?

Mr. BELGRANO. Yes, Mr. Congressman; we believe that unqualifiedly.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If a law providing for that had been in effect in 1917, as you have stated, there would not have been the millionaires who were created in this country during the war?

Mr. BELGRANO. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And of the $19,000,000,000 that was spent by the Government during 1918, no doubt about $14,000,000,000 of that was profit?

Mr. BELGRANO. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. According to the figures given here, of 400- and 500-percent profit?

Mr. BELGRANO. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And, as you referred to the bonus, in 5 years there were refunded to this same group from the Treasury of the United States 4 billion dollars, which would have paid off the bonus?

Mr. BELGRANO. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And those 4 billion dollars were refunded to the same groups that are now members of the Economy League?

Mr. BELGRANO. Yes, Mr. FITZPATRICK; I agree thoroughly with your remarks. The Legion claims that not only should the Government have proceeded to point its finger to the man power of this country and conscript it but the Government should also have drafted capital and industry and all the material resources of the country, for the protection of all the people, on an equal basis.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If it were so provided that that would happen, I doubt if we would ever have another war.

Again, on page 30, Vilas Whaley, chairman of the Legion's national legislative committee, of Racine, Wis., states:

I want to suggest that any legislation for universal service the Legion believes should contain a provision for the taxing of excess profits even up to 95 percent. That was the recommendation of the War Policies Commission.

The Legion believes that no one in time of war should expect to make profit and no one should seriously oppose the enactment of this legislation, because it becomes noneffective except in case of war.

We believe, men of this committee, that after all of these years of conflict, and in view of what has transpired in the countries outside our border, that the time is here and now, in this session of the National Congress, to make this bill the law of the land to outlaw war and to take the profit out of war.

Note, Mr. Chairman, the phrase—

To outlaw war and to take the profit out of war.

Next appears the authorized spokesman for the Veterans of Foreign Wars, on page 201, and I quote:

As we have considered the bill introduced by your distinguished chairman, H. R. 3, we submit that it does not remove the profit motive from the business of war. The Veterans of Foreign Wars have expressed through their national conventions the definite thought that the way to make those who spend so much of their time spreading a gospel of hate for the man who has served this Nation in the armed forces, is to urge the adoption of a plan which will have the purpose of forcing these same individuals to suffer at least some of the economic stringencies of war.

* * * * * * *

We are all seeking the same ultimate objective. We all want peace with honor. It is the opinion of our organization that the surest way to have peace with honor is to attack the cause of war in a definitely vital spot. The Veterans of Foreign Wars are convinced that the point of attack is "the wartime profit system." We know well that many will hold what we propose is idealistic and not practical. We followed the so-called "practical" people in 1917 and 1918. We plunged into the last war without any attempt, at least no attempt which made itself apparent, to really develop the economic side of preparedness. Yes; we suffered the economic prostitution of American ideals to make the world safe for the "money changers." Now, we want to set up the new plan. The Veterans of Foreign Wars feel that the new plan should be so wrought that the Government has a positive power of control over capital and industry as well as man power. We should be as cold-blooded with our industrial and banking barons as they were with us in 1917 and 1918.

It is the sincere hope of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States that your committee, using H. R. 3 as a starting point, will develop a program of legislation which will force the capital and industry of our Nation to do their duty without profit during the next war.

* * * * * * *

Mr. KVALE. Did you hear my questions yesterday with reference to the plausibility of setting up a system that would guarantee profits instead of eliminating them?

Mr. BROBECK. I think that is the reason our national legislative committee, in a recent meeting, was somewhat concerned over this bill. We believe that the idea is fine, but we do not think anything should be set up which guarantees a profit because of war.

Mr. Chairman, that was George Brobeck, of Minnesota, their national legislative representative, talking. That does not sound to me like blanket approval of this particular bill, even though it does express complete sympathy with the broad purposes of the author of the measure, Mr. McSWAIN.

The American Federation of Labor next appears before the committee through its authorized legislative representative, our friend Mr. Hushing, and he says in decisive language, on page 205, that—

Mr. HUSHING. The announced purpose of the bill directly under consideration, of course, is "to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus to promote the national defense", but with the immense power this committee has, and with the different suggestions that have been laid before it, it is hard to know how far the committee might go. In our opinion, the entire matter is open and subject to any action this committee sees fit to take.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true, the whole subject is opened by it. The bill is only the groundwork upon which to build.

Mr. HUSHING. That is my understanding, exactly.

Now, one of the principal purposes set forth is to prevent profiteering in time of war. Of course, any decent citizen is opposed to profiteering, and we are very much opposed to it. There is more than one method to prevent it, in our opinion. It might be done by putting a limitation on profits, or it might be done by taxation.

Again, it might be done, as has been proposed, by conscription of wealth or labor, or both. In our opinion, and if my memory serves me correctly, others have testified that it is not constitutional to conscript either labor or capital. If the proposal is to conscript labor, we certainly will oppose it. I think Commander Spafford agreed, in the hearings held several years ago, that capital could not be conscripted, and if the proposal they were then making—and by "them" I refer to the American Legion—was to conscript wealth and capital, and if his statement was true that capital could not be conscripted, that would leave only labor to be conscripted.

Then, Mr. Chairman, he follows that with a hundred pages of extracts from former testimony and from previous resolutions and actions of the federation that should prove of profit to Members to read carefully.

After that comes many pages of interesting and courageous testimony from the lips of a former Member of this body, the Honorable Jeanette Rankin, in this hearing representing the National Council for Prevention of War, together with its executive secretary, Mr. Frederick J. Libby. Interested persons may read for themselves, but one gem is here reproduced from Miss Rankin's testimony, for it bears directly upon the vague catch phrases which are responsible in large part for the stampede we are witnessing in this body. In reply to an interrogation by Representative MAVERICK she stated:

Miss RANKIN. Thank you. I wanted to say this one word. I really think you ought to take out of the bill that effrontery which says that we will equalize the burdens of war. There is no possible way to equalize the burden for the man who made the supreme sacrifice. There is no possible way to equalize the burden for the man who lost his eyes or the mother who lost a son, and to put the sacrifices of war on the basis of money, it seems to me, is appealing to something very low in the American people.

Then follows the report of Mr. Lovell for the railroad brotherhoods, and while he is more cautious in his admonitions to the committee he does in most respectful but in most positive terms stress the magnitude of the task of the committee and urge full deliberation. Instead, the records disclose that but 5 days were given to open hearings, and I refrain from comment on the executive hearings that followed.

But I beg the membership of this House to note from these quotations and from the verifications that they can most easily make for themselves that in every instance these organizations which have been paraded before you as favoring this bill have unalterably expressed themselves as in favor of eliminating profits from war—I said "eliminating"—not of guaranteeing those profits. Not only guaranteeing them, but guaranteeing them, as I said in my scattered remarks yesterday, to the high-cost producer, so that the low-cost producer, the large unit, mind you, the men who control the raw resources of the land, will have a heaven they never could hope for in the wildest kind of boom times during peace days. This is fact, not my opinion. Consult the record. Please, I say it again, secure a copy of the hearings before the measure comes to the reading stage and before the final vote is reached.

Who favors limited profits? At least the War Department, according to the testimony, page 45 of the hearings, page 127, page 131, and then pages 147 to 173, inclusive. Those pages contain the tentative contracts that have been drawn up on which industrial people have been consulted, with reference to which all the interested business executives have been frequently interrogated, and upon which there is agreement between the War Department and industry, guaranteeing them a profit of 6 percent, after negotiations have arrived at the costs of the various operations, deductions, exemptions, and the incidentals that inevitably must accompany every contract.

Read them and you will learn something; you will find that the only ones who acquiesce in the opinion of the War Department, that we must not do anything that will curb unlimited and speedy production. The only ones who agree and acquiesce are the coalition, that group of all these patriotic societies most of which ascribe to themselves 100 percent of all the patriotism that exists in the country and criticizes everybody who disagrees with them.

So, Mr. Chairman, in view of the permission to extend my remarks, let me only add that neither I nor any colleagues of mine seek to have this body digest the program of any committee nor that of any committee that may disagree with them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, ever since the close of the World War each and every administration and practically every outstanding leader in both Houses of Congress, regardless of politics, has favored the principle that is involved in this legislation. There is no Member of either House of Congress who has been more faithful, more industrious, more courageous, more untiring in his efforts to secure the enactment of laws which would take excessive profits out of war, which would prevent profiteering in time of war, than our very genial and able Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCSWAIN], whom we all greatly admire because of his ability as a statesman and whom we all love because of his qualities and character as a man. [Applause.]

We have heard a great deal of loose talk, really, concerning the provisions of this bill. We have been talking about taking the profits out of war, but this bill is really to prevent profiteering in time of war; and I want to point out to the membership of the House that there is a vast difference between taking all profit out of war and preventing profiteering, which means excessive profits, in time of war.

If you will turn to page 306 of the hearings had by our committee, you will find that I asked Mr. William C. Hushing, national legislative representative and general organizer of the American Federation of Labor, this question:

Would you be willing for both industry and labor to make a legitimate, reasonable profit?

His answer was, "Yes."

I then asked him this question:

Even in time of war?

And again his answer was in the affirmative.

Then I queried:

They would have to make some profits in order to exist, would they not?

And, of course, he answered "Yes" to that question.

To those who are afraid that this particular bill will conscript labor, may I state that there appeared before our committee not only Mr. Bernard Baruch and Gen. Hugh Johnson but also the Chief of Staff and other Army witnesses, including the Secretary of War and The Assistant Secretary of War, as well as the national commander and other representatives of the American Legion, and not a single witness favored the conscription of labor. No member of the committee insisted upon conscription of labor. On page 194 I stated to Mr. Woodring, Assistant Secretary of War:

Furthermore, if you conscript labor, you will need an army at home to run industry instead of having it in France to fight the battles?

Mr. Woodring answered:

You certainly will.

I said,

You will need a policeman in every industry. I do not want to inject politics here, but during this noble experiment, the colossal failure of the N. R. A., it has been shown that we cannot even take care of it in time of peace, let alone in time of war.

To that query I think the Secretary of War agreed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, no one will claim that this bill is perfect and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCSWAIN] would be the last gentleman of all to make such claim.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. SHORT. I do say, however, I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], with a penetrating insight and with a logic which is unexcelled I think by any other Member of this House, pointed out a serious defect in the bill on page 2, lines 9 and 10. The gentleman objected to the clause "or of a national emergency declared by Congress to exist."

I am sorry I cannot agree with my esteemed colleague on the committee from West Virginia [Mr. EDMISTON]. I think that amendment should be offered to strike out the above clause, as well as an amendment striking out the clause suggested by the discerning gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] on the first page.

The words objected to by the gentleman from Massachusetts appear in lines 3 and 4 on page 1 and are as follows:

Or the existence of an emergency due to the imminence of war.

If those two clauses and other similar clauses are retained in the bill as written, it seems to me that the national emergency which we are living under at the present time and which the Congress has declared, would permit the President of the United States to exercise these extraordinary powers now. Heaven knows, he has too much power already!

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I would state to the gentleman that my objection lies to those same words wherever they may appear in the bill.

Mr. SHORT. The bill should be amended by having the language as it is in lines 3 and 4, page 1, and in lines 9 and 10 on page 2 of the bill stricken out.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman and I are in harmony. In other words, my inquiry goes to striking out the language which relates to the existence of an emergency due to the imminence of war wherever such language appears in the bill, because that amounts to an actual declaration of war.

Mr. SHORT. The gentleman is absolutely correct, and as a member of the committee, I intend to offer amendments which will accomplish this end. I believe such amendments will be acceptable to the committee because they will remove the most objectionable feature of the bill. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts and with the gentleman from Illinois that these extraordinary powers granted to the President of the United States should not be exercised except and until war is actually declared by the Congress of the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, the time remaining is so short that I will limit myself to one or two observations on the general subject of this bill.

As a result of the country's situation we find ourselves today living in an era of great hysteria, and along with it we must admit that as Americans we are strongly inclined to be extremists. I do not believe there is a Member of this House who does not realize that some of the disclosures in reference to profiteering during the last war are a very sad page in the history of that war. Such disclosures have made sensational headlines and public opinion has been crystallized. I do not believe there is a Member of the House who would want to see a repetition of that page if it can be avoided.

May I also suggest to the House that while this bill is designed to assist in the prevention of profiteering in war, when war comes again—and I hope not in our day—someone and some Congress must prosecute that war. That is one of the great arguments, in my opinion, in favor of the bill which our chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN], has proposed. We want the Government at that time not to be hamstrung. To complete the prevention of all profiteering excess-profits taxes to prevail in war time must be imposed. But the imposition of such taxes under the rules of the Congress is not within the jurisdiction or province of your Committee on Military Affairs. I do not believe there is a member of the Military Affairs Committee who is not in favor of the imposition of heavy excess-profit taxes during war. A simple scheme in the form of a constitutional program for the prosecution of war is what this measure offers in a manner which will limit profits and freeze prices. For the benefit of labor there must be fair profit, and by adding taxes profiteering can be wiped out. With the passage of this bill and another bill with the same motive in the Senate it will go to conference and the conferees can ask for a rule under which to refer the desired tax provisions to the House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, a good deal has been said about section 3 of the bill. It occurs to me that an amendment ought to be made perhaps to section 3, line 13, by putting in front of the word "service" the word "military" so that the language will be "military service."

Mr. McCORMACK. Would not "armed service" be better?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Well, armed service, or any word that will make it absolutely clear, so that there can be no doubt about the fact that so far as section 3 is concerned, it means only drafting men into the armed service, as the gentleman suggests, namely, the Army, Navy, or the Marine Corps, and that it has no application whatsoever so far as drafting or conscripting anybody in industry is concerned.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. MAY. As the gentleman will recall, it was thoroughly discussed in the committee and unanimously agreed that there was no intention on the part of anybody on the committee to conscript labor, and the hearings will show this.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman is correct in his statement and I tried to make it clear in my remarks earlier in the day. If there is anything in this bill that would in any way lead anyone to believe that it is the intention of the committee that labor should be conscripted or drafted, it was certainly not the intention of the committee to put such language in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then the gentleman would not object to any clarifying amendment to express that intention in the bill?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Certainly, so far as I am concerned and so far as I am authorized to speak for the committee, I am sure the committee wants the wording of the bill just as clear as possible to the effect that labor is not to be conscripted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I think such clarification should be made.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The question has arisen here from time to time as to the meaning of the words "unorganized militia." If we turn to the National Defense Act we find that section 57 of that act defines what the unorganized militia is.

This section states that—

The militia of the United States shall consist of all able-bodied male citizens of the United States and all other able-bodied males who have or who shall have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States who shall be not less than 18 years of age and except as hereinafter provided, not more than 45 years of age, and said militia shall be divided into three classes, the National Guard, the Naval Militia, and the unorganized militia.

As the chairman of the committee has tried to make clear, the reason the words "unorganized militia" are used in the bill is because under the law as it stands today the President of the United States can call into service the Organized Militia whenever the Congress declares war. So there is no need of providing in the bill for a call into the service of the Organized Militia. What section 3 does is simply what we did during the World War—give to the President the power to call into the service the unorganized militia of the land, that we may have soldiers and sailors with which to fight the war.

Some gentlemen have raised the question of the conscription of industry. The committee, after extensive hearings and after much thought on the matter, reached the conclusion that so far as the welfare of our country is concerned, and so far as a successful prosecution of a war is concerned, the less we upset industry the more normal we keep conditions in industry, the better off we will be, and what we have sought to do is to put an end to profiteering and yet not disorganize or upset American industry, having in mind success in winning the war and having in mind a return to normal conditions with as little upset as possible and with as little aftermath as possible at the conclusion of the war. We simply provided, as has been said here time and again, that the President should have the power to clamp a ceiling down on prices as those prices existed in a free market on a given date selected by the President.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. HULL. May I ask the gentleman why you did not carry your bill further and provide the same sort of protection for agriculture that you have attempted to provide for industry in this bill?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. So far as agriculture and everything else are concerned, we handle all of those matters on exactly the same basis. The ceiling that goes down on the prices of manufactured products, of course, would go down on the prices of farm products and would apply to all prices in the country.

Mr. HULL. Suppose you were to have war tomorrow, would you have agricultural products at a standard of about 40 percent below industrial prices, as they are today, continued and then tell the farmers still to carry on?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. No; I call the gentleman's attention to section 2 of the bill which gives the President so much power that even if, after he has put this ceiling down, there should be injustices or inequities, he has the power to change and to vary that ceiling. If the President found that agricultural products as of the given date were being discriminated against, then he could raise the ceiling so as to remove any inequity or any injustice so far as the farmer is concerned.

Mr. HULL. May I not ask if we have not in a very recent act passed by this Congress placed powers in the hands of the President to stop the importation of agricultural products into this country, while at the same time we are continuing to have millions of dollars' worth of importations while our farmers are down and out?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 more minutes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The question has been raised here that certain organizations throughout the country have been cited as being in favor of this bill, when the truth of the business is they are in favor of taking profits out of war but did not know much about the bill itself, and in this connection I want to read the letter of the national commander of the American Legion, written to the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. It is under date of February 5 last, and, among other things, it states:

> I am delighted to know of the progress being made in connection with legislation to eliminate the profits from war, and you may be assured that the organization which I have the honor to lead will bend all of its efforts in support of the bill which will shortly be presented to the floor by the House Military Affairs Committee, of which you are the chairman.
> With personal regards.
>
> Sincerely yours,
>
> FRANK N. BELGRANO, Jr.,
> National Commander.

[Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Was this bill we are now considering before your committee when the national commander of the Legion wrote the letter read by the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. McSWAIN. Oh, yes; the bill was amended at his suggestion. Section 3 contains the heart and nerve of the old Capper-Johnson bill in substance without authorizing the conscription of labor which that bill did.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. But your bill guarantees the draft of labor.

Mr. McSWAIN. That may be the opinion of my friend from Washington, but it is not the opinion of those who have been thinking about this for a long time. We are satisfied that it will reduce profits to a minimum. We are also satisfied that if there should be any profit to escape through the meshes of the system which we propose to set up, we will lead the fight in Congress for the purpose of bringing out any legislation from the proper committee to take away the last mite of war profits or profits due to the existence of war.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The prices in this country went up 268 percent at the time of the World War. If we clamp the ceiling down, we will stop prices from going up. If they once go up, we cannot get them down. So far as taxes are concerned, the Government can reach out its strong arm and take that measure any time during the war.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield to my friend.

Mr. KVALE. It occurs to me that the chairman would place himself in a peculiar and invulnerable position if he would withhold his bill until the Ways and Means Committee had favorably reported a rule for the consideration of a tax bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman cannot say that that bill should come ahead of this bill.

Mr. KVALE. No.

Mr. McSWAIN. Let me say to my good friend from Minnesota that we will help pass that bill. We will do all we can in any way to take the profits out of war.

And let me say to my friends who say that the bill does not go far enough, that it ought to do the whole job, that I assume that I will be a member of the conference committee. You have heard from other Members who will be on the conference committee. I want to say that as far as I am concerned, and I can only speak for myself, that if it is necessary for the legislation to comprehend other features entering into profiteering in time of war, if it is necessary to bring in some new matter, what will we do? We will go to the Rules Committee and ask the Rules Committee to make that new matter in order. Can gentlemen not trust us to do that? You will be in control of that situation. Trust your House and trust your committee to try as far as it can, while respecting the jurisdiction of all committees, to solve this matter.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. THURSTON. I am in deep sympathy with the object and purpose of this legislation and expect to vote for the bill, but I am concerned about this. If the President or the Congress in a great national emergency can lay aside the Constitution and the laws in time of peace, will not the President or the Congress in time of war be in a position to nullify this very act that we are discussing?

Mr. McSWAIN. I am satisfied this legislation is within the power of the Congress to exercise as a war power in time of war. I submit that there is ample authority for saying that this is an exercise of the war power. Some of it is referred to in the report. It is within the provisions and four corners of the Constitution, and not in excess of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, due to an agreement made on both sides that we would read only the first section of the bill and leave it open for amendment tomorrow, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 5529 and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the great interest in this matter, and several gentlemen who desire to speak have not had that opportunity, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 3 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD upon this pending legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, being advised by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] that he will move to strike all of section 3 from the pending bill, "to take the profits out of war", beginning with the first word in said section down through the word "proclaim", with the amendments attached to said language by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I feel it my duty both to my colleagues and to the numerous patriotic organizations and societies which for the last 12 or 14 years have been endorsing the Capper-Johnson bill, to state that section 3 is the heart and nerve of the said Capper-Johnson bill with the power which was contained in said bill to draft labor and human forces generally eliminated from said bill. The said Capper-Johnson bill certainly must have had many millions of people to endorse it. I respectfully and humbly endorse it with the exception of the provision contemplating the drafting of human services for other than service in the armed forces for the defense of our Nation.

PRESENT STATUS OF SECTION 3

Mr. Speaker, said motion to recommit, if it should prevail, would strike from the bill the language contained in the amendment known as the "Faddis amendment", as amended by the "Boileau amendment", as in turn amended by the "Truax amendment." The effect of these amendments is to provide that no person shall be drafted into the armed forces for service upon foreign soil, except to prevent or repel actual invasion of the United States.

PAY OF SOLDIERS

Mr. Speaker, said motion to recommit, if it should prevail, would also strike out an amendment by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], providing that soldiers drafted into the armed forces for defense should receive wages equal to the average daily wage of unskilled labor at a date to be fixed by the President.

PROVISION FOR DEFENSE

Mr. Speaker, since the section 3 as now amended means that Congress must first declare war, and then if an immediate increase in the armed forces be necessary in order to defend the country, the President may exercise the power of drafting soldiers. These soldiers can be used only to defend the United States, and they cannot be used in any industrial capacity, and they must receive the wages of ordinary unskilled labor. Since this is the present situation, it seems to me perfectly fair to ask the Members of the House to vote down the motion to recommit, which would have the effect of striking out this part of the Capper-Johnson bill. The power to draft cannot be exercised until war is declared by Congress. If Congress declares war, then we ought to be ready to start vigorously to fighting and resisting the enemy without delay. If we must wait until Congress either passes a draft law to provide for selective service after the declaration of war, or if we must wait for a sufficient number of persons to volunteer, then our defense may be too feeble at the very beginning. If we must fight in defense, then we should be prepared to strike a quick and heavy blow at the very beginning. Furthermore, the presence of the power to draft does not mean that the President would of necessity exercise it. The presence of the draft provision would doubtless greatly hasten and encourage volunteering.

HOW PROPER PREPAREDNESS PROMOTES PEACE

Mr. Speaker, the time to be careful is before getting into war. We cannot get into war until Congress declares it. But every man who believes in proper preparedness ought to vote to have the country ready to fight quickly and vigorously in defense of our country, if war is forced upon us and if Congress so declares it. I think that section 3, which provides for not only the drafting of human service, but also provides for the commandeering of material resources and financial resources and industrial organizations and public services, such as railroads, telegraph companies, telephone companies, power companies, pipe-line companies, radio communications, and so forth, and so forth, is vital to a proper defense program. We know that our Regular Army and our National Guard and Organized Reserves, all put together, are hardly a handful of all those necessary if we should be forced into a war. If, therefore, the people who own these great material and financial resources know that they can be commandeered in time of war they will be very slow to encourage much war propaganda.

On the other hand, if any possible enemy nation knows that we have great resources, and that we have this legal machinery to make these material and financial resources immediately available, and that we have this legal machinery to make our vast man-power resources immediately available, then any potential enemy nation will be very slow to force war upon us. This is a fact of history and a fact of human nature that all truly wise men admit. Since America will not under any circumstances engage in an aggressive and unprovoked war, and since men cannot be drafted to fight upon foreign soil under the Boileau amendment, and since Congress would not think of declaring such aggressive war, then there will be no war, unless another nation thinks that it can either defeat us or force us to peace on terms favorable to it. If we are prepared to defend ourselves by the legal machinery set up in this section 3, then any other nation will realize that it cannot defeat us nor force us to harsh terms of peace, and, therefore, there will be no war, and, therefore, the peace will be preserved. It takes two to make a war. If we do not start any war against any other nation and if any other nation is afraid to start a war against us, then there will be peace.

WHY SECTION 3 IN BILL?

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I am seeking to explain how section 3 is in substance the Capper-Johnson bill, and why so many patriotic organizations have approved of the Capper-Johnson bill heretofore, and why I think it does occupy an appropriate place in this bill, "To equalize the burdens of war and to promote peace." It is true that this particular feature does not of itself stop profiteering in time of war. But if it tends to discourage and deter war itself, then it will render legislation to prevent war-time profiteering unnecessary. Of course, if the motion to recommit, amending the bill as contemplated, should by any possibility prevail, the other provisions of the bill are so vital that I would urge every Member of the House to vote for it, and to send it to the Senate with a well-nigh unanimous support, in the belief that when the Senate amends the bill in such form and manner as shall appear to the Senate wise and proper, it will still be possible for us in conference to work out a bill that will stop profiteering, tend to discourage war, thus promote peace, and greatly assist in equalizing the burdens of war. With this brief statement, I must leave the issue to my colleagues, having the same confidence in their patriotism and devotion to the welfare of the Nation that I claim for myself.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, militarism has been distasteful to me since my childhood. History tells us that it inevitably leads to oppression, and I have personally seen its practical results.

Having had such convictions it was not an easy matter for me, 18 years ago, to vote to report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs the resolution for the declaration of war. For nearly 2 days and nights the committee had considered and seriously debated whether the conditions actually warranted such a grave and momentous step. Not until President Woodrow Wilson and State Department had furnished the committee with undisputable and convincing evidence of overt acts and of willful disregard of American rights by Germany, her connivance with other nations, and her un-disguised boasts and threats of what she was going to do to America after the defeat of the Allies, was the resolution reported by the committee and passed by the House.

It is interesting to note that I am the only present Member of the House who was then a member of the powerful Committee on Foreign Affairs. There are, I believe, only 36 Members of this House who were here when war was declared.

I hope that I shall never again be placed in a position to shoulder such a responsibility nor be forced into an awesome and trying situation of casting a vote which results in the sacrificing of tens of thousands of lives and brings lasting suffering and heartaches to millions of mothers, fathers, sisters, brothers, wives, and children.

For these reasons I have unremittingly advocated since the end of that appalling world conflict peaceful adjustment of all international differences. I still have a strong faith that the laudable instruments created for that purpose by the efforts of our late great and beloved President, Woodrow Wilson, will effect this most desirable humane aim.

I believe now as I always have that, instead of composing and settling international differences by the arbitration of sword and gun unnecessarily resulting in the tremendous loss of lives and in the untold sufferings and hardships to millions of peoples, grievances should be dissolved by peaceful negotiations with enlightened consideration. Every honest historian recognizes that practically all wars without exception were due to selfish interests of those who desired to retain the power and to profit unduly therefrom, and were not caused by uncompromising international misunderstandings. I will, therefore, welcome and am anxiously awaiting the hour when this Congress will take a real step and actually set an example to the rest of the world by positive action, so far as possible, and not only vocally, to abolish war as an instrument of settlement of international disputes.

We ought to show in no uncertain terms that it is the decided intent of the Congress not to encourage but to discourage wars. I really think that our legislation should brand and punish as traitors any person and any organization which may directly or indirectly advocate or encourage wars.

I strongly believe that legislation enacted to eliminate the possibility and the opportunity for the accumulation of wealth by industries profiting through wars would have a great tendency to discourage jingoism and war danger it creates. These facts have been clearly demonstrated by the evidence adduced at the recently conducted hearings. By such legislation the incentive would be removed from the avaricious, racketeering element of the militaristic group and other malevolent beneficiaries of war.

Each year for the past 28 years I have observed that when the Army and the Navy appropriation bills are to be considered these nefarious elements begin a crusade of shameful propaganda to bring about increases in appropriations for the combatant departments of our Government.

After reading the bill allegedly proposing to take the profits out of war, I am forced to admit my great disappointment, because there is really nothing in the measure that entitled it to such a term. Instead of being a bill to prevent wars by denying the profit making, it tends, on the contrary, to impose a conscription of man power upon the Nation but not the conscription of wealth.

I greatly regret to state a disgraceful fact that in the past the most influential citizens of the United States—men in high positions in the world of commerce and finance rather than of politics—have used all their power and influence to prevent the drafting of their sons into the armed forces of our country. Every possible escape was devised by them and every influence utilized so that their sons might dodge the draft or, at least, to receive bullet-proof assignments to the noncombatant units such as the Quartermaster Corps stationed in this country. These advantageous positions were used by them to aid their fathers' corporations in acquiring the greatest possible share of profitable contracts. Cooperating with the great number of dollar-a-year gentlemen, who were authorized purchasing agents, these sons took the advantage of their positions and improperly fostered the interests of their relatives, who became great beneficiaries of war. Such circumstances were the cause for the creation of 5,000 new millionaires in the United States within 3 years, not mentioning the multimillionaires who were advanced to this status from the pre-war millionaire class.

Having witnessed the grief and anguish of the war mothers of our Nation and the hardships and sufferings of millions of our citizens, hardships and sufferings born of war, I repeat my disappointment with the provisions of the pending bill and I would have opposed it were it not for the amendments adopted providing for the taxation of all war profits together with the other amendments which will completely revise section 3. I hope that this section, which provides for conscription, will be entirely eliminated or, at least, the first part of it. If this is done, I feel that I can consistently support the bill and will do everything possible to bring about its enactment. Not until then will this bill have my vote and support.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, the intent of the bill which we are now discussing is generally satisfactory. However, I believe that our best contribution toward world peace ought to consist in making it most difficult for us to become involved in war, and with public opinion consulted in advance and with plans already worked out and well understood for effectually controlling both labor and capital and thereby eliminating the element of sordid self-interest by putting profiteering out of everybody's reach, the possibility of the United States engaging in another war should attain the irreducible minimum consistent with national honor.

If anything is to be done along this line, we should amend the Constitution of the United States now so as to require that before war can be declared or participated in—except only in the event of attack or invasion—there must be a referendum, and that if a majority of the votes cast are for peace, there the matter ends, and if the majority be for war, every able-bodied citizen between the ages of 18 and 50 shall be drafted for service, either military or industrial, wherever he or she can be of the most use, and that all profits in excess of 5 percent received by any person, firm, or corporation from the day war is declared until peace is finally concluded shall be turned over to the Government.

There is a celebrated painting entitled "They shall beat their swords into plowshares" that gives a vision of that coming time in the history of the world which was predicted by the poet Tennyson:

When the war-drums throb no longer, and the battle-flags are furled,
In the Parliament of Man, the Federation of the World.

Is such a time possible in the evolution of nations, and is it more desirable than the present state of armed watchfulness, when the god of war seems continually ready to shake his iron dice and plunge the peoples of earth into another frightful struggle such as the one from which we have just emerged?

Let us look at the question first from the standpoint of expense—the most practical phase of the subject. The latest estimates of the total cost of the World War to all nations involved place the cost at approximately $235,000,000,000, which is considerably more than the entire estimated wealth of the United States.

The United States was in the war 18 months, during which brief period, according to official data made public on July 1, 1921, the cost to us was $50,168,625,707. The Civil War debt on July 1, 1865, was, in round numbers, $2,500,000,000. From July 1, 1865, to July 1, 1935, is 70 years—nearly a century—and $600,000 of the original war debt still remains unpaid. If it has taken the country nearly a century to pay only $2,000,000,000 of its Civil War debt of two and one-half billions of dollars, how long will it take us to pay the present war debt of $50,000,000,000? At the same rate of progress, 1,675 years.

If Great Britain made the payment due us on the war debt, it would cost her 4.1 percent of her budget. She says she cannot pay us, but she is spending 13 percent of her budget on armaments.

If France paid, it would cost her 2 percent of her budget. She says she cannot pay us, but she is spending 27.4 percent of her budget on armaments. After the armistice was signed we loaned France more than a billion of dollars and during the same period of time she loaned other European countries $700,000,000.

If Italy paid us, it would cost her 1.4 percent of her budget. She says she cannot pay, but she is spending 33.1 percent on armaments.

We conscripted 4,000,000 men for their war. We shipped 2,000,000 across the sea. We shipped almost all in British bottoms, and paid Great Britain $140 to $180 for the transportation of every boy. We paid them to transport our boys to their war.

A hundred and twenty-five thousand of these boys never came back.

We are paying $800,000,000 a year interest on these debts that we contracted for them and that they now refuse to pay.

Quite a burden this for 18 months of participating in a European war. It is quite certain that the great-grandchildren of the men who participated in the World War will still be paying heavy taxes in the effort to reduce its crushing costs.

We have come out of the war with victorious arms, but not in common with the other nations of the world; we realize that the cost was staggering. When Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, was congratulated on his victory over the Romans at Asculum, he replied, "Another such victory and we are ruined." The doom of war is written in the frightful burdens which it imposes upon the present and future generations. It is now admitted that the bulk of the $10,000,000,000 which the American Government loaned to the allied nations during the war is practically lost.

The railroads of our country are staggering under the effect of the strain of war time and neglect of upkeep. Increased freight rates have paralyzed the building trades and imposed high prices upon every consumer of the commodities of life. What is the teaching of these sobering facts and figures—in what direction lies the path of structure of our civilization, which even now seems threatening to engulf all of Europe? Evidently it is a return to the arts of peace, and the enactment of such legislation as will make war impossible.

Ours is a popular form of government—of the people, by the people, for the people—and the majority is supposed to rule.

If the Nation be at any time in actual danger, its citizens can safely be trusted to rally to its defense, but equally surely may they be relied on not to be suddenly stampeded by ill-considered war enthusiasm.

By amending its own Constitution as outlined and thus setting a practical example which every other nation could—and many, if not all, might—follow, the United States would be taking its place and doing its share toward preserving world peace.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, profiteering in war by the sale of munitions and arms is the vilest business practice known to mankind.

The McSwain bill, H. R. 5529, aims to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war. In doing this it will promote the cause of peace and at the same time provide for national defense in event of war.

The American Legion, of which I am a member, has for more than 15 years advocated that, in event of war, wealth and industry should be conscripted the same as men. The American Legion, out of the experience of the World War, has decreed as one of its great fundamental policies there should be a "universal draft." Young men—the flower of our American manhood—left homes and loved ones in response to a grave national duty. They offered their lives as sacrifices for their country. They were paid $30 per month. Mechanics and shipbuilders, 3,000 miles from the dangers of war, who furnished the munitions of war and the ships to convey the munitions received $300 and more per month. Industrialists, who came up like mushrooms, made thousands of dollars per month under contracts to furnish munitions and supplies. This must never occur again.

It is indefensible to compel one man to endure the hardships of war, to offer his life as a sacrifice, while another is earning profits from war.

It is proper and I am happy to support seizure by our Government of 100 percent of all excess profits. During the war period our Government should seize the entire income of every industry in excess of the amount of income during a year or so preceding that war. Let us legislate to make war unprofitable and we shall make peace profitable. Let us make all bear the burden of war. If our country is compelled again to enter a conflict, both industry and man power should be mobilized. When we do this we make it more probable that our country will remain at peace with all the nations of the world.

In every war waged heretofore by our country profiteers and vermin of that ilk have thrived. Gen. George Washington complained of the profiteers of that period. He wrote, "No punishment is too great for the man who can build his greatness upon his country's ruin." I personally know families whose fortunes were created by war contractors. We all know the scandals of the Spanish War and the staggering cost of treasure and human life because we tolerated human vultures who sold "embalmed beef" for our soldiers' use. We know too well of the many fortunes made almost overnight during the World War. This bill provides that the Executive may fix prices as of a date before the declaration of war. After this bill becomes a law there can be no inflation, no profiteering—the prices must remain at the level fixed or below that level. Speculation on the threat of war would be fruitless.

The McSwain bill, which we are debating, is important to every man, woman, and child in America. Ex-service men generally will hail its enactment as a step in the right direction—toward making it less probable that our country will engage in war.

Nations frequently war for purposes of national aggrandizement. Greed breeds war—the desire for more territory, plunder, loot. This bill has been strengthened by amendments in the course of the debate. It is evident that the majority here earnestly desire to take the profit out of war, and in event of war to conscript wealth, industry, and men. There are some here who oppose conscription. Let me say we might as well manfully face the facts. If and when war comes there will be conscription of our man power, and there should be conscription. Let us look ahead and legislate now deliberately and intelligently. We should not wait until possible war hysteria assails our people. Let us plan ahead to conscript industry and the managers of industry, wealth, and the holders of capital. There will then be less likelihood of our ever again entering any war.

We should provide that no person drafted into the armed forces of our country in time of war may be compelled to serve upon foreign soil, except to prevent or repel actual invasion of the United States. We should also provide that soldiers drafted into the armed forces for the defense of our country must receive wages equal to the average daily wage of unskilled labor. During the World War there was no real objection, among thoughtful people, to the selective-service draft. Soldiers did not object to conscription. They did object, and the mothers of this land object with equal force, to civilians profiteering while soldiers serve in the trenches at a dollar a day.

My conclusion after careful study of this bill as amended is to support it and hope earnestly for its enactment. We thereby lay a solid foundation for legislation to make peace more profitable and make war unprofitable to all.

THREE AMENDMENTS KILLED IF MOTION TO RECOMMIT PASSES

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, if the motion made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] to recommit the bill, with instructions that the first sentence in section 3 be stricken out, passes, it will kill three worthy amendments already approved by a vote of the Committee of the Whole House.

It will kill my amendment providing for the conscription of "* * * all persons responsible for the management, direction, and control of industry, commerce, transportation, and communication."

It would kill the Boileau amendment providing that "such members of the unorganized militia drafted into the service of the United States shall not serve on foreign soils, except to prevent, repell, or quell actual invasion of the United States of America."

It would kill another one of my amendments providing that "the per diem pay of such members of the unorganized militia so drafted shall be a sum not less than the daily wage of unskilled labor * * *."

The ex-service men have asked for a universal-service law ever since the war. The third section of this bill, as amended, drafts practically everything and everybody.

The ex-service man's only objection to the last draft was that it did not go far enough. This bill as it is amended drafts all leaders of industry, commerce, transportation, and communication.

As amended it gives power to commandeer the material and financial resources of the Nation.

It was not the conscription that the soldiers complained about before; it was the inequality, the injustice between a soldier's pay and that of a civilian laborer. The man who used the gun received a dollar a day, while the man who made it got $15 a day. But this bill, as amended, would give the soldier at least an even break so far as wages is concerned. Whereas if we kill this amendment, what guaranty have we that a war Congress will so equalize the financial burdens of war?

Those who oppose this bill do so no doubt in the belief that they are furthering peace, but by making a plan now that would automatically draft everything and everybody in the event of war. Does not that further peace even more by removing all incentive for war by announcing ahead of time that the burdens of the next war must be borne by all?

To refuse to pass a draft law just because you do not want war is just like refusing to take a first-aid kit with you on a trip because you do not want to have an accident.

This bill will be a preventive measure. If we fail to announce our plan of draft in advance it is possible some people will not be averse to war, hoping that they might once more force the soldier to serve for a dollar a day while they make millions as before.

But if we pass this bill, it will be notice to the world that a war will cost everybody in service and money; therefore, nobody will want war.

Some who have opposed this law have spoken as though the draft would begin on the day that this bill becomes law, but everything in this bill is distinctly based upon the contingency of war. No war, no draft. But if war, then a universal draft of everybody and everything.

This bill does not become active except in the case of war, and in that case there would be a draft anyhow. Now, the question is whether or not we in our cool deliberation will plan a fair and just draft, including the captains of industry, financial resources, regulations as to pay and foreign service, or whether we will wait until the war hysteria seizes the country and then have an ill-advised, hastily planned draft driven through Congress under lash and spur.

Once more allow me to emphasize this is not a draft unless there is war; and if there is war, there will be a draft anyway. In other words, no war, no draft. If war, then some kind of draft anyway. You cannot prevent war by refusing to announce to the world that in case of war everybody and everything will be subject to call.

Refusal to carry a spare never prevented a war.

What does this bill contain as it now stands?

First. It would fix a ceiling to prices to prevent skyrocketing.

Second. It gives the President power to adjust prices up and down.

Third. It gives the President power to close the stock and commodity exchanges in order to curb speculation.

Fourth. It provides for conscription of all able-bodied men from 21 to 45.

Fifth. It drafts all the leaders of industry, commerce, transportation, and communication.

Sixth. It fixes a floor to the soldiers' pay "* * * not less than that of unskilled labor."

Seventh. It limits foreign service to that necessary in order to repel an invasion.

Eighth. It gives the President power to commandeer all material and financial resources, organizations, and services.

Ninth. It gives the President power to control all business and manufacturing activities by means of licenses.

Tenth. It gives the President power to determine all priorities.

Eleventh. It authorizes the President to set up all boards and commissions necessary for prosecution of the war.

Twelfth. Finally, it taxes 100 percent of the excess war profits.

I believe this bill represents a great gain toward our goal to equalize the burdens of war. Therefore, I hope it passes as amended.

ARMY DAY

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 13, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 13

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Saturday, April 6, 1935, be recognized by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America as Army Day, and that the President of the United States be requested, as Commander in Chief, to order military units throughout the United States to assist civic bodies in appropriate celebration to such extent as he may deem advisable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Has this resolution passed the Senate?

Mr. CHANDLER. It has.

Mr. SNELL. April 6 is Saturday of this week. Does the gentleman think he can get any results from a resolution of this kind when the date is so imminent?

Mr. CHANDLER. If we do not pass it today, we certainly cannot; but if we pass it today, we think we can. The plan is under way. This is simply an official recognition of the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR RELIEF—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conference committee on House Joint Resolution 117 have until 12 o'clock tonight to file a report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman expect to have a meeting of the conference committee this evening?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; and if we can get that meeting together we have every reason to believe that we will get a report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I am requested to ask permission of the House that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DORSEY] have leave of absence for 3 days, on account of death in his family.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE CRUCIFICATION OF TOM MOONEY

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I have long entertained the highest respect and admiration for that fine, courageous woman, our associate in this legislative body, Representative CAROLINE O'DAY.

Today, however, I respect and admire her more than ever because of her brave and worthy action in appealing to President Roosevelt in behalf of the release of labor's persecuted and imprisoned leader, Thomas Mooney. By making this request to the Chief Executive, Mrs. O'DAY has won the esteem and gratitude of millions of workers in every part of our country and in other lands as well, for organized labor in every land regards the cause of Tom Mooney as its own cause and his incarceration as a direct blow at the working class.

There is no blacker page in the annals of history than that of the jailing of Tom Mooney for a crime that it is practically a certainty he never committed. That he was put behind walls and bars, not because he had broken any law but because he was a fearless, fighting, persistent champion of the rights of the California toilers is today conceded by the great majority of people. That the testimony on which he was convicted was false and perjured is proven almost beyond question. That he has been kept in prison so long after his innocence has been so clearly established can be attributed to nothing else than the vicious determination of a brutal and conscienceless plutocracy to crucify the man whose militant leadership threatened their ill-gotten gains.

The wrong done Tom Mooney, whose best years have been spent in San Quentin Prison, can never be undone. It could not be undone if he were paid a million dollars in damages. There is no way on earth of righting such a wrong.

Yet the organized workers of the world and myriads of others who look upon Mooney's confinement as an unspeakable outrage will welcome his belated liberation—if it should come now. Mrs. O'DAY, by adding her voice to the voices of 27 United States Senators, various Congressmen, and so many others, has made a fine contribution to the cause of the oppressed—her finest contribution among many fine acts in her commendable career of public service. Her warm friendship for the President and Mrs. Roosevelt will, of course, give added weight to her recommendation.

About a year ago our former colleague, George Foulkes, then Representative from the Fourth District of Michigan, at the request of a Washington newspaper correspondent, Linn A. E. Gale, who is also president of the Washington Open Forum, wrote the President, asking him to recommend to the Governor of California the pardoning of Mooney. No results came at that time. Now that Mrs. O'DAY has come to Mooney's defense, and just following the admirable decision of the United States Supreme Court in reversing the Scottsboro case conviction, perhaps the hour is ripe for Mooney's liberation.

I have for years believed in Tom Mooney's innocence and advocated his release. I fervently hope that it is now to be granted and that the dark and dismal words of the poet, "Right forever on the scaffold; wrong forever on the throne", may be proven untrue.

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC TENDENCIES

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting in the RECORD a speech delivered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE], in Madison Square Garden, New York City, April 3, 1935.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following:

Mr. Chairman, previous speakers each have offered constructive comment on some phase of the general subject which focuses this evening's forum on the question of the necessity for defending here and tonight our liberties as citizens of the United States of America.

The depression, and the violent economic readjustment which ensued, has not exactly encouraged sane and sensible thought or action. Contemporary happenings in foreign lands have further plunged us with disturbing rapidity into our present hysterical, panicky, illogical, and fragmentary reasonings. It is a time for tragedy and chaos unless we mass ourselves and frankly and constructively try to preserve the principles that have been the foundation stone of this Government.

Our breath of life through all our years of entity has been the liberty of thought and speech and action. That is distinct from unbridled license, it should be unnecessary to add, but nevertheless it has meant liberty to write or voice our thoughts and convictions upon religious, political, or economic questions as we might be inspired to do. Liberty to meet and mingle as we desired. Liberty to hold our own independent views, and likewise to respect our neighbor who might emphatically disagree with us.

What do we see today? Candidly, we see a national administration—to which I still look hopefully for helpful action and proper leadership—we see that administration increasingly subjected to pressure and propaganda, and with at least some degree of success. That propaganda and that pressure comes from short-sighted industrial and financial leaders in the category generally described by the broad phrase "big business." They would perpetuate capitalism's privileges and advantages under a democratic government without meeting the responsibilities which the new deal has assumed. They would fail to join the march toward the performance of the most necessary task of relieving the distress and misery attendant to the wide-spread unemployment. Capital continues on a defiant and sullen strike. But labor and unemployed have no rights, for them these powerful men would deny any responsibility.

What is more, they appear to believe that they can subdue the desperate complaints and protests, instead of acting to cure the fundamental economic ills. That, it appears to me, is the reason for this mass protest tonight. Unorganized, scattered individual complaints are of pitifully little value when directed against the fat ones who have their fingers on the economic and political nerve centers of the Nation.

Hence the drive to reenact sedition laws. Hence the effort to remove the Communist from under the protective blanket of our rights to free speech. I confess that personally I see something a little absurd in granting full rights of free speech to an individual who, if he were given full power to carry his teachings into effect, would destroy those rights among his first acts. And yet, Mr. Chairman, I do know that we live in a democracy, under a republican form of government, and I do know that one of the first purposes of that form of government, if utterances of our leading thinkers since colonial days mean anything, is to guarantee beyond any question that liberty of thought and action in speech, press, religious worship. A careful reading of the Bill of Rights even demonstrates that the right of revolution is enunciated clearly if other methods of reform or progress fail.

Those who now are responsible for this propaganda deny any intent to disfranchise citizens who offend them. But it is the next logical step. In some States, you know, there have been determined and partly successful efforts to remove the voting privilege from those forced upon relief rolls. No matter to them that the destitute were driven to their state by a bitter economic development for which they had not the slightest responsibility. We are familiar with racial discrimination in more than a few polling places. Through neglect and inaction there arises the possibility that what has happened in other nations in our time may happen here. Then it will be too late to lift voices in protest, whether in news or editorial column, from pulpit or platform, or over the air. Surely it must be impossible, we tell ourselves, that we shall see our elections corrupted until only those who unreservedly favor the group in power will dare to exercise that right. Exactly that picture is in the minds of some men.

To be more specific, I might refer to the people I know the best, my own northwestern farmers. Fighting grimly since the war days against a cruel series of reversals, they have shown a courage and patience and resourcefulness difficult to believe. For 15 years they have seen their civil rights melt away, not in one dramatic overt act such as publication of an edict, show of force, an act of God, but with the soul-torturing and inexorable progress of a glacier or the march of a sand dune.

Oh, they can still exercise their rights to speak, assemble, petition their elected and appointed public servants, and otherwise carry out their functions as citizens. And they do. They are literate, vitally interested; and now, out of the chronic aches of 15 years, has come a grim determination. Disillusion came simultaneously with the drought, which, on top of all the rest, brought desperation.

Now the pity of it. Unorganized, dispersing their efforts, betrayed sometimes by false or incapable leadership, victimized by untimely appeals to what was represented to be their duties as loyal and unselfish citizens, they have permitted the selfish groups of industrialists, financiers, and food processors to bring this once independently wealthy and economically content area to a state of virtually complete impoverishment. A dissipation of wealth and of sources has been wreaked which cannot be remedied in a generation. The despoilers have planned their methods with devilish cunning. They contrived their purpose under full protection of law and Government; they diverted protests into blind alleys; they scattered the opposition; they confused the minds of their victims with protestations of sympathy and help, until tonight I am tempted to make the rather rash statement that my farmer is so dejected and depressed over his situation that he may well wonder if free speech is any concern of his. The things which civil liberties were designed to conserve and protect have vanished.

And yet when we regard the awful evidence which comes in from every part of the cotton country regarding the status today of the share-cropper, we cannot but be stirred to deepest indignation and frantic preparation for concerted action. My farm owners are dismal when they are evicted from a home that holds memories and thrills of several generations of continuous occupancy. The farm itself in all likelihood was wrested from the wilderness. Its permanent values have steadily been enhanced by construction and improvement of dwellings and buildings. Farmers in addition fertilized the soil, they rotated their crops judiciously, killed off the noxious weeds, improved the quality of their livestock herds, and otherwise contributed to the permanent wealth of their own holdings as well as of their community and Nation. Family members were assured modest advantages as to recreation, health, education, and small luxuries. To such people reversion to poverty is almost unthinkable.

But behold your share-cropper. Accustomed only to fulfillment of the simplest and barest wants, living in Spartan discomfort, persistently and systematically robbed by his landlord in the great majority of cases, working from dawn till dark during the entire season, and what is more, putting his whole family—little children and all—into the fields, that was his almost universal lot. For his reward, he learned at the time of the annual accounting that he had practically nothing to show in dollars and cents for his drudgery and drab existence.

Then a wise Congress decides to curtail cotton production. I shall not quarrel here or now with that decision. I want briefly to discuss its effect. Without wanting to be self-laudatory, I do want this record to show that at the time the House of Representatives passed the measure I expressed grave concern over the effect of the act upon the modest and inarticulate share cropper, only to have my misgivings impatiently thrust aside.

I once traveled through those areas. I visited with the farmers. I have walked through their pitifully inadequate hovels. I have seen their stark poverty. So now, when I find incontrovertible evidence that they are thrown into helpless unemployment in droves, are too abjectly impoverished to move their families or handfuls of possessions in search of work, have no social or civil rights or liberties, are denied by drastic action on part of authorities the right to collective action, are unable to educate their children, are callously ignored by the planter, who was meant to have his full and fair responsibility for their welfare, and who was supposed to share A. A. A. benefits with them in some reasonable proportion, I need see no more to show me my only course.

Perhaps somewhere in this hall tonight there is opportunity to purchase an inexpensive little pamphlet published by the League for Industrial Democracy, entitled "The Plight of the Share-Cropper." It represents the findings of Norman Thomas as set down after a personal and thorough survey, and also embodies the Amberson report, a factual summary of conditions among these unfortunate and friendless people. Think, that in these free and democratic United States of ours, should be an entire area where a whole economic group can be caught in a press, not of their own making. Disenfranchised, subject to every ravage of starvation, illiteracy, lack of medical facilities resulting in alarming spread of epidemics, they face the future with utter despair. When they endeavor to reach those in authority or an unenlightened public with a statement of their condition and an appeal for help, the reply to them is repression, abuse, force, and threats of violence, without a constructive act to aid them in their distress.

To conclude, then, in summary, and at the risk of painful repetition, may I submit to this gathering that, in my opinion, the new deal has no more important task immediately before it, while this form of government obtains, than to preserve for the farmer and worker, black or white, radical or reactionary, Republican or Communist, his right to free speech and assembly, to an unfettered press, to the inalienable rights of any citizen of this land to his life, his bit of property (if he be that fortunate), and to his perhaps hopeless pursuit of happiness and economic security.

Those are the reasons why I have been glad to have the opportunity of adding my bit to the united protest that goes out from this hall tonight. May this meeting and its influence warn thinking citizens that we neglect our duties as citizens in a critical time in this Nation's history unless we do what we can to counteract the insidious and invidious attacks of those selfish and shortsighted groups who are plunging this country into hysteria today. We are verging toward a rekindling of virtual war psychology.

Remember, and remember well, the oft-quoted admonition which still holds true—"Patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Joint Memorial 6

Whereas during the present depression the original cost of livestock and grain products is greatly in excess of the price now realized by the sale of the same, and that by reason thereof farmers are unable to pay their bills and debts and each year find themselves further behind with their debts and obligations; and if the above situation continues for any additional length of time, the farmers will lose their homes and all; and

Whereas during the time farmers are operating at a loss they cannot be purchasers of other manufactured products, and such industries will in turn fail for lack of business, and that all business of every kind and nature will be affected by this injustice to agriculture; and

Whereas it follows that every kind of business located in the agricultural communities must rise or fall with the farmers, and that the important and absolutely essential industry of agriculture cannot be stricken down without causing disaster to the country as a whole; and

Whereas the placing of an embargo on the products mentioned would stabilize the prices thereof and bring such prices more in harmony with the production costs, together with a fair margin of profit, and bring the farmers out of the dire and distressing depression which now affects them: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Thirtieth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, That we respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to pass laws and provide rules and regulations to place an embargo on flax, wheat, hogs, cattle, and sheep, and upon pork, beef, and mutton products, until such time as the prices of said grains, livestock, and meat products shall cover the cost of production; and we further petition that the law now permitting wheat to be milled in bond be repealed; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Member thereof from this State, to the Secretary of Agriculture, and to each house of the legislative assembly of those States whose legislatures are now in session.

Memorial to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in the eighty-seventh legislative session assembled, most respectfully present and petition your honorable body as follows:

Whereas the deposit of sawdust from mills with alluvial deposits has made it impossible for large barges to navigate the Chandler River; and

Whereas it is not possible to economically transport the products of the district unless the products are moved in large quantities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in legislature assembled, do hereby respectfully petition and urge that necessary action shall be taken by the Congress, so that Chandler River in the State of Maine will be dredged so that the channel will be clear from obstruction as far as it is navigable; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly authenticated by the secretary of state, be immediately transmitted by the secretary of state to the proper officers and committees of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, and to each of the Representatives and Senators representing the State of Maine in the United States Congress.

House Joint Memorial 1

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent:

Whereas we feel that in no case can we have a return of prosperity unless and until the American farmer receives for his commodities a price which will enable him to absorb the products of industry, meet his obligations, continue his operations, and live in a manner becoming to sovereign citizens; and

Whereas we feel that in the utilization of farm products, rather than in a reduction of same, lies the permanent solution of our problem; and

Whereas the annual consumption of gasoline as a motor fuel has increased to an enormous figure; and

Whereas it has been demonstrated that a blended motor fuel will give utmost satisfaction, and such blend would create new possibilities for the utilization of farm products: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the house of representatives (the Senate of the State of Idaho concurring) respectfully request and petition the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled to enact into law a bill known as the "alcohol-gasoline bill", which bill provides for the manufacture of a blended motor fuel consisting of about 90 percent gasoline and 10 percent grain and/or potato alcohol, to be gained through the process of distilling wheat, corn, and potatoes grown on American farms; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be by the secretary of state of Idaho transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture, to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives from Idaho in Congress.

AMENDMENT OF SILVER PURCHASE ACT

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, yesterday I introduced a bill, being Senate bill 2507, to amend the national Silver Purchase Act by repealing two sections thereof. Yesterday afternoon the New York News Bureau ticker came out with the statement that:

Senator McCARRAN charged that only effect of sections of the Silver Act which he would repeal has been to abolish the free American market in silver—

And so forth.

In order that the RECORD may clarify the situation, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a letter addressed by me to the Honorable Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, together with the report of the New York News Bureau Ticker.

There being no objection, the letter and report were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 4, 1935.

Hon. HENRY MORGENTHAU,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE AND DEAR SECRETARY: I am this day introducing a bill amending Public Act No. 438, passed by the Seventy-third Congress, and commonly known as the "Silver Purchase Act."

My bill simply strikes out sections 6, 7, and 8 of the act. I want to assure myself that we are heartily in accord with certain somewhat obscure corollaries which seemingly must have escaped Congress in the hasty passage of this legislation.

May I ask you if you do not think me right in judging that section 6 is somewhat superfluous in providing authorization for you, with the approval of the President, "to investigate, regulate, or prohibit, by means of licenses or otherwise, the acquisition, importation, exportation, or transportation of silver and of contracts", etc., when the very act, though permitting the Government to trade, so penalizes persons who trade in silver as to make regulation unnecessary?

With respect to section 6, is it not possible that Congress, after having provided for the regulation of the security exchanges by a commission, did not carry the theory a step too far by selecting one commodity and burden you with the responsibility for its regulation while it destroyed trading in that commodity?

With respect to section 7, is it not your thought, as well as mine, that the nationalizing of silver by Presidential proclamation August 9, 1934, has already accomplished the purposes for which it was designed and that the freeing of silver may have the effect of encouraging an advance in its price which is bound to increase the production costs of goods competitive to our own and produced in the so-called "silver countries"?

Respecting section 8, I have given this no little attention, and I am seeking information from you as to whether the 50-percent profit tax has yielded to the Treasury any revenue of consequence.

I am wholly at a loss to know precisely how our Government operates under the provisions of the present act in acquiring silver.

If I read the language correctly, am I to assume that any party selling to the Government is subject to the tax of 50 percent of the profit such party makes on the transfer? Seemingly the law, which we enacted with the aim of raising the world price of silver, placed a burden upon your Department of collecting from the vendors of bullion a 50-percent tax on any profit they may have made on their transaction. Whether the Treasury commission a Federal Reserve bank, for example, as its agent, or whether it purchase directly in the foreign market, the vendor seemingly is subject to a 50-percent profit tax which the purchaser must assume. May I assume, if this is so, a vendor would seek out any other market but that of the United States to escape the penalties of the tax?

Or, in the efficient administration of your office, has it been necessary to use an intermediary between our Government, or an agency of our Government, as a secondary agency or instrumentality who may purchase abroad at the market price and resell to the Treasury or its agent silver at the same price paid in the market and certify the absence of any profit to avoid the imposition of the tax?

I ask this question, for I have been until recently unaware that section 8 levies this tax of 50 percent on silver profits on all transfers and thereby must practically preclude the purchase and sale of this commodity within our jurisdiction.

To my amazement the act levies the tax on all transfers outside the United States if either party be a resident of the United States.

Will you not agree with me that Congress has prevented the Treasury from using any agency within the United States as its source of silver purchase without the penalty of the 50-percent tax?

Frankly, has not Congress literally excluded silver trading on the part of United States citizens unless they actually take up residence abroad for a period of 3 months? Has not Congress gone even further and told its citizens that even if they go abroad and take up foreign residence they have not the privilege of dealing in silver, if the silver or interest in which they deal be situated in the United States?

It seems to me that section 8 literally imposes all the tax provisions on vendors to the Government of the United States. I wonder if you have found that this provision in practice as retarded, as it would seemingly do in theory, the acquisition of silver by your Department unless perchance you were literally forced to avoid such retardation by the introduction of "wash sales."

I must be permitted to assume that the avoidance of all the provisions of the act by our own Government by means of "wash sales" would be as repugnant to you as it is to me.

I ask if there is anything in my bill that in any wise interferes with your operations, for I must assure you that it is entirely in a spirit of cooperation with the true purpose of the legislation, which is to raise the world price of silver, and with the administration of it under your jurisdiction that I introduce my bill.

In the midst of a depression I am extremely anxious to conserve all business that rightfully belongs to America, and I cannot overlook our past ownership of a commodity market simply because it concerns perhaps a relatively small group of principals and employees. Their life work must be considered as legitimate as any form of trade and subject to the protection of this Government.

My study of this legislation has resulted in the conclusion that this Government has unconsciously destroyed an American market in silver and thereby has built up a foreign market in this commodity. Silver, among the commodities, has received singular attention from the standpoint of governmental acquisition.

I think we have perhaps gone too far when we permitted ourselves and Congress to penalize citizenship and American residence and placed a premium on foreign citizenship or American residence abroad to assure individuals the right to trade in silver.

I feel we both are equally opposed to wholesale speculation in silver as in any other commodity or in any security which affects the public interest; but however similar our ideas may be on this point, I trust you are in full accord with me in my belief that, by our regulation of this single commodity, we have simply thrown into the lap of London the entire control of the world's silver market, prohibiting our nationals to participate even on an equal footing with foreigners. Thus in both the foreign exchange situation and in the bullion market America establishes her monetary policies, which dominate the financial world, and then seemingly permits the execution of these policies to be at the mercy of the London bullion and foreign exchange markets.

I assume it is now necessary for the purchasing agent of the Treasury to protect himself, in dutifully executing orders, against the automatic assumption of full liability for the tax on profits realized by the actual seller.

May I assume that that necessary protection is made available by instituting a three-cornered transaction by introducing an intermediary who can truthfully certify that no profit has been made on his transfer to the Government?

If this is the practical method of purchase, is not this, then, a case of evasion to which our Government has unconsciously become a party?

I frankly solicit your reactions to these possibilities, for I am as anxious to know the facts as are you.

We may both be helpful in removing any possibility of the charge of tax evasion which would certainly, if proven, degrade the majesty of the State and act as a pernicious example to the potential taxpayers of the Nation. We must impress men with the solemn fact that tax evasion is not alone contrary to public policy but a violation of the ethics of good citizenship.

I welcome your comments on these thoughts, your correction of any false assumptions, and your valuable assistance in the proposed legislation.

Sincerely yours, PAT MCCARRAN.

STORY ON M'CARRAN SILVER AMENDMENT REPEALING PARTS OF SILVER-PURCHASE ACT

Senator MCCARRAN charged that only effect of sections of the Silver Act which he would repeal has been to abolish the free American market in silver as a commodity and to transfer that market to London. He added that no benefits had resulted from the enactment of the measure, but only further decline in opportunities of employment in silver-producing States and no increase in agricultural products. Foreign countries only, he said, had benefited from the act. At the same time the Senator charged that the Treasury Department was violating the law through effecting wash sales in silver contracts in order to avoid payment of the tax imposed by the bill.

RECORD OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY LESLIE C. GARNETT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Washington Sunday Star of March 31, 1935, giving the record of prosecutions under United States District Attorney Leslie C. Garnett.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GARNETT'S OFFICE ESTABLISHES RECORD FOR CASES PROSECUTED—COURT DOCUMENTS SHOW MORE CRIMINALS TRIED AND CONVICTED LAST YEAR THAN AT ANY TIME SINCE 1931

Official records of the District Supreme Court show the office of United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett, charged with laxity in prosecutions by witnesses testifying before the House Crime Committee, tried and convicted more criminals last year than in any corresponding period since 1931.

Some of the witnesses before the committee stressed the supposed failure of the prosecutor to proceed against gamblers—a field of crime in which more offenders were convicted last year than in the entire preceding 4-year period.

The prosecutor's office also established something of a record for this jurisdiction last week in the prosecution of murderers. Four men were brought to trial in three cases on first-degree murder charges. Three of them were found guilty in the first degree, while the fourth, at one time adjudged insane, was convicted of second-degree murder.

PRESSES 60 GAMBLING CASES

During the 14-month period since January 22, 1934, Garnett commenced prosecutions in 60 gambling cases involving more than 100 defendants charged with felonies. Twenty-six of these defendants have been convicted, 3 were acquitted, and 7 cases were nolle prossed. Of these 7, 2 have been reindicted, and in the other 5 cases the court refused to permit the introduction of the evidence on the ground it was procured without a warrant.

The remaining defendants, many of them indicted recently, are awaiting trial. Included among these are Sam Beard and 13 associates, scheduled for trial in April.

During the entire preceding 4-year period there were 22 gambling prosecutions started, resulting in 11 convictions, 10 nolle prossed, and 1 verdict of not guilty.

Garnett has also been responsible for the removal of 276 telephones used by gamblers and the refusal on the part of the telephone company to install 58 other phones where it was possible to show they would be used by gamblers.

CASES BROUGHT TO TRIAL

Another criticism before the committee was that law enforcement has broken down because of long delays in the prosecution of criminals. The records show that from last January 1 to March 27 a total of 51 cases were brought to trial within 2 weeks after arraignment, 31 of these cases being tried within 1 week after the defendants entered their pleas.

During this period, representing 61 court days, a total of 151 trials were held in the 2 criminal courts, an average of nearly 3 a day. During the same period, 334 indictments were returned and 212 defendants pleaded guilty.

On March 27 there were only 223 cases pending in which indictments have been returned but no action taken. These cases cover a period of several years and in more than 200 of them the defendants are fugitives from justice and cannot be brought to trial.

ONE THOUSAND TWO HUNDRED AND FORTY-TWO CRIMINAL CASES

The records at the close of the last fiscal year showed that 1,244 criminal cases were started during that period. Of these cases, 1,166 were terminated, 755 by pleas of guilty, 166 by verdicts of guilty, and 49 by acquittal. The percentage of convictions in trials by jury for the past 5 fiscal years follows: 1930, 61.7 percent; 1931, 67.2 percent; 1932, 75.2 percent; 1933, 70.5 percent; and 1934, 77.2 percent. When the courts recessed last June there were only 10 criminal cases in which the defendants were in jail awaiting trial, and 57 bond cases awaiting trial out of a total of 1,454 indictments handled by the prosecutor's office during the year.

It is also disclosed by the records that comparatively few cases were nolle prossed last year, the figures being: 1930, 379; 1931, 172; 1932, 207; 1933, 270; and 1934, 192.

The records also show that the United States attorney's office has won 189 civil cases for the Government since January 22, 1934, and lost 46. These 46 include 38 consent judgments in war-risk cases approved by the Department of Justice. In other than war-risk cases the Government only lost three suits.

Garnett and his assistants have also been successful in the Court of Appeals during the same period, winning 23 cases and losing 4. Among the cases lost was the Sigma Chi Fraternity trial, in which the attorney general filed a confession of error, and the McCracken case, which Garnett finally won in the United States Supreme Court.

THE N. R. A.—CHICAGO DAILY NEWS EDITORIAL

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Preservation, or Evasion—Which? Mr. President", which appeared in the Chicago Daily News on April 2, 1935.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

[From the Chicago Daily News, Apr. 2, 1935]

PRESERVATION OR EVASION—WHICH? MR. PRESIDENT

"I, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States."

This was the oath taken by the President on March 4, 1933.

On January 7, 1935, the Supreme Court of the United States held that the grant to the President of congressional authority contained in the National Industrial Recovery Act was "untenable under the Constitution." In at least 17 other instances Federal courts have ruled that varying provisions of the N. R. A. were unconstitutional. Many of these cases are now on the way to the Supreme Court for final adjudication, and one of them, at least, that of the Belcher Lumber Co., of Alabama, had reached the Supreme Court and was about to be decided when the Government itself withdrew the case, palpably declining to face the issue.

At the same time the President of the United States formally and officially demanded that the Department of Justice, acting through district attorneys throughout the country, take prompt and vigorous action to prevent, or punish, violations of the codes under the N. R. A.

In the curious and unprecedented situation thus created, honest business men, seeking to carry on their legitimate affairs, are threatened by the executive power of the Government with punishment if they violate N. R. A. codes, and at the same time are told by the judicial power, represented by the Federal courts—which are equal in authority to the executive power—that the codes are unconstitutional. Every possible consideration for just and impartial execution of the law and fair treatment to the business interests of the country requires that there be as swift and final a decision upon the constitutionality of the N. R. A. as it is possible to secure. Indeed, such a policy is demanded by the very terms of the oath the President took upon his inauguration. It is his solemn duty to "preserve the Constitution." The obligation is inescapable.

Yet it is under these circumstances that the President has directed the withdrawal of the case pending in the Supreme Court, which would determine the constitutionality of the N. R. A. swiftly and promptly and finally, and has caused to be introduced in the Congress a new N. R. A. bill which contains practically all the debatable, questionable features of the old N. R. A.

These two momentous steps—the withdrawal of the suit in the Supreme Court and the introduction of the new N. R. A. bill—were taken, it is announced, upon the advice of Felix Frankfurter and Donald R. Richberg. It was stated at the time, and has not been contradicted, that the purpose of this policy was to avoid a Supreme Court test of the N. R. A.'s constitutionality until the code structure under the new law had become a well-functioning machine with a tremendous vested interest which the Supreme Court might well hesitate to disturb.

This is precisely the type of policy which, in the past, has been pursued by certain unscrupulous, but powerful, business interests which, under the guidance of highly paid and skillful legal advisers, sought to escape the plain provisions of the law by devious and unscrupulous methods of evasion and indirection. If the President of the United States and the executive authority of the Government itself openly and palpably seek to evade the terms of the Constitution, or to sidestep a test of constitutionality in the court of final resort, what becomes of the hope, vital to our future welfare, that a higher code of ethics will rule in private business?

The people of the United States rely upon Franklin Delano Roosevelt to remember that the first promise he made as President of the United States to the people of the United States, with his hand resting upon an open Bible, was a promise to preserve the Constitution. Consequently, when any executive act is challenged upon constitutional grounds, it becomes his duty to have such questions determined by the court of final resort, as swiftly as possible, to the end that the Constitution shall be preserved. To attempt to exercise a dubious constitutional right, and at the same time deliberately and palpably to evade a prompt judicial determination of the question, challenges the fitness for public office of the individual who so acts, and is utterly destructive of the confidence which should attach to the man who exercises such great responsibility under a constitutional form of government.

COURT DECISION ON FARM BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an opinion by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Fourth Circuit, written by Mr. Justice Parker, in which the constitutionality of the Farm Bankruptcy Act, as amended by the Seventy-third Congress, was at stake. I have complied with the rules of the Printing Committee and have gotten an estimate of the cost of printing.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Fourth Circuit

No. 3778. William W. Bradford, Jr., bankrupt, appellant, v. Michael W. Fahey, assignee, John D. Worthington, Annie McC. Worthington, and the Potomac Joint Stock Land Bank of Alexandria, appellees. On appeal to superintend and revise, in matter of law, proceedings of the District Court of the United States for the District of Maryland, at Baltimore.

No. 3797. William W. Bradford, Jr., bankrupt, appellant, v. Michael W. Fahey, assignee, and John D. Worthington and Annie McC. Worthington, his wife, appellees. Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the District of Maryland, at Baltimore.

(Argued Jan. 8, 1935. Decided Apr. 2, 1935.)

Before Parker, Northcott, and Soper, circuit judges.

Parker, circuit judge:

This is an appeal in bankruptcy proceedings from an order denying the prayer of a petition, which was filed under subsection (s) of section 75 of the Bankruptcy Act, and which asked that the court enjoin further prosecution of proceedings which had been commenced in the Circuit Court of Harford County, Md., to foreclose a mortgage on the farm of petitioner. The mortgagee resisted the petition on two grounds: (1) That the court of bankruptcy could not interfere with the State court's jurisdiction, which had attached in the proceedings to foreclose the mortgage; and (2) that subsection (s) (7) of section 75 of the Bankruptcy Act was unconstitutional and therefore furnished no basis upon which the ultimate relief sought might be granted. The district judge held against the mortgagee on the first ground, but sustained the second and denied the petition because in his opinion the subsection of the Bankruptcy Act under which the petition was filed was violative of the "due process" clause of the fifth amendment. The petitioner has appealed.

There is no dispute as to the facts, which may be briefly stated as follows: On February 6, 1926, the petitioner, William W. Bradford, Jr., a farmer of Harford County, Md., executed a mortgage on 145 acres of land to the Potomac Joint Stock Land Bank of Alexandria to secure a debt of $20,000. On April 16, 1934, there was due on the mortgage debt a balance of amortization payments in excess of $1,000 and certain insurance premiums which the mortgagee had advanced; and on that date the mortgagee, acting under the terms of the mortgage, declared the whole debt, amounting to $19,497.23, to be due, and assigned the mortgage to Michael W. Fahey for the purpose of foreclosure. Fahey proceeded to advertise and sell the mortgaged property under the power contained in the mortgage, docketing the foreclosure proceedings in the circuit court of Harford County, Md., in accordance with the provisions of the Maryland law. The sale was held on June 18, 1934, when John D. Worthington and wife became the last and highest bidders for the property at the price of $21,500 and deposited $2,150 with the assignee to be applied on the purchase price. On June 19 Fahey reported the sale to the clerk of the court, and the usual order nisi was entered requiring notice to be given that the sale would be confirmed unless cause to the contrary should be shown on or before the 19th day of July. Exceptions to the sale were filed by the petitioner, Bradford, but these have not been passed on because of the proceedings taken in this cause.

On July 17, 2 days before the order nisi was returnable, Bradford filed his petition in the court below under section 75 of the Bankruptcy Act, alleging that he was a farmer, that he was unable to meet his debts as they matured, and that he desired to effect a composition or extension of his debts as provided by that section. The proceedings in the State court were stayed pursuant to the prayer of the petition, and the case was set for hearing on September 6. In the meantime answers were filed by Fahey and the Worthingtons and the land bank was made a party. Letters were sent to the various creditors offering a composition, but on the morning of the hearing petitioner was notified that his offer would be refused by the land bank, and, as the debt owing to it was more than the other indebtedness of petitioner, there resulted a failure to obtain such an acceptance of the offer of composition as was required by the section. Petitioner thereupon amended his petition and asked to be adjudicated a bankrupt and granted relief pursuant to subsection (s) of the section and that the foreclosure proceedings in the State court be permanently enjoined. At this time it was formally and definitely stated by counsel for petitioner that he would elect to purchase the property embraced in the land bank's mortgage pursuant to the terms prescribed in subsection (s) and by counsel for the mortgagee that it did and would object thereto. The court approved the petition as properly filed and passed an order adjudicating Bradford a bankrupt, but, being of opinion that paragraph 7 of subsection (s) was unconstitutional, refused to stay proceedings in the State court. The matter complained of on this appeal is this refusal to stay proceedings.

A preliminary question which arises is whether the appeal is not premature, as the right of petitioner to relief under paragraph 7 of subsection (s) of the act would arise only after there had been an appraisal of the property, an offer to purchase at the appraised price, and a refusal on the part of the lienholder to accept this offer. But the answer to this is that the appeal is from the refusal to stay proceedings in the State court, and under the provisions of the act, if valid, these proceedings should be stayed while the appraisal and other proceedings preliminary to the right to relief under paragraph 7 are going forward, if the court has jurisdiction to stay such proceedings. Subsection (s) is not an independent statute but an amendment to section 75 as enacted by the act of March 3, 1933. Under subsections (n) and (o) of that section, the property of the farmer, wherever situate, is subjected to the exclusive jurisdiction of the court of bankruptcy, and it is forbidden that proceedings for foreclosure of a mortgage thereon be instituted or maintained in any other court without the permission of the court of bankruptcy. Proceedings under subsection (s) are but a continuation of proceedings theretofore instituted under other provisions of the section; and the provisions for staying foreclosure in a State court are clearly applicable for the purpose of protecting the court's jurisdiction while such proceedings are going forward. A denial of the stay on the ground that paragraph 7 of subsection (s) was unconstitutional, after a petition had been filed asking relief under that subsection, was clearly appealable, therefore, irrespective of whether or not the proceedings had gone forward to the point where petitioner was entitled to the relief provided by that paragraph.

With this preliminary question out of the way, three questions are raised for our consideration by the appeal, viz: (1) Whether subsection (s) of section 75 of the Bankruptcy Act, and particularly paragraph 7 thereof, is a constitutional exercise of the bankruptcy power of Congress; (2) whether a court of bankruptcy has jurisdiction under section 75 of the Bankruptcy Act to stay proceedings for foreclosure of a mortgage already pending in a State court where relief is asked under subsection (s) of the section; and (3) whether this jurisdiction may be exercised with respect to a foreclosure suit in Maryland, where there has been a sale of the mortgaged property under order of court but the sale has not been confirmed. We think that all of these questions must be answered in the affirmative.

The bankruptcy power of Congress is conferred by article I, section 8, clause 4, of the Constitution, which provides that Congress shall have power "to establish * * * uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States." It is correlative to the clause of article I, section 10, which provides that "no State shall * * * pass any * * * law impairing the obligation of contracts." It was realized at the time of the adoption of the Constitution that uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies were important in the development of interstate and foreign commerce, over which Congress was given control; and not only was Congress vested with the power to establish such uniform laws but the States were expressly forbidden to exercise the power usually involved in bankruptcy laws, i. e., the power of impairing the obligation of contracts. The subject is dealt with in one sentence in that great commentary on the Constitution, the Federalist Papers (XLI), where it is said: "The power of establishing uniform laws of bankruptcy is so intimately connected with the regulation of commerce, and will prevent so many frauds where the parties or their property may lie, or be removed into different States, that the expediency of it seems not likely to be drawn in question."

What is a law on the subject of bankruptcies within the meaning of the Constitution has never received exact definition at the hands of the Supreme Court, but there can be no question, we think, but that the constitutional grant vests in Congress full power to deal with the relationship existing between debtors unable or unwilling to pay their debts and their creditors, and that we may safely say, without attempting to delimit the power, that any law must be held to be a law on the subject of bankruptcies which provides for the surrender of the property of a debtor to a court, its control and administration by the court with the eventual application of the property or its value to the claims of creditors, and the discharge of the debtor from the remainder of his debts. As we said in the recent case of Campbell v. Alleghany Corporation (C. C. A. 4th), — Fed. (2d) —, which dealt with the validity of the corporate-reorganization section of the Bankruptcy Act, "all phases of the relationship between a debtor financially embarrassed and his creditors are brought under the control of Congress by the constitutional grant of power; and the fact that a particular mode has hitherto been employed in dealing with this relationship is not to be taken as a measure of the power over it. (Hanover Nat. Bank v. Moyses, 186 U. S. 181; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122; In re Landquist (C. C. A. 7th), 70 Fed. (2d) 929; In re Klein, Fed. Cas. No. 7865, reported as note to Nelson v. Carland, 1 How. 265, 277; In re Reiman, 7 Ben. 455, Fed. Cas. No. 11673; Kunzler v. Kohaus, 5 Hill 317.)"

In Story on the Constitution, section 1113, quoted with approval by Judge (later Mr. Justice) Blatchford, in In re Reiman, supra, it is said: "Perhaps as satisfactory a description of a bankrupt law can be framed is that it is a law for the benefit and relief of creditors and their debtors in cases in which the latter are unable or unwilling to pay their debts. And a law on the subject of bankruptcies, in the sense of the Constitution, is a law making provisions for cases of persons failing to pay their debts."

And Judge Blatchford in his opinion in the case cited defines the "subject of bankruptcies" as used in the constitutional grant of power as follows: "What is 'the subject of bankruptcies?' It is not, properly, anything less than the subject of the relations between an insolvent or nonpaying or fraudulent debtor, and his creditors, extending to his and their relief. It comprises the satisfaction of the debt for a sum less than its amount, with the relief of the debtor from liability for the unpaid balance, and the right of the creditor to require that the amount paid in satisfaction shall be substantially as great a pro rata share of the property possessed by the debtor as it can pay, or can reasonably be expected to pay."

It is clear that the power of Congress over bankruptcies is not limited by the terms of the British and colonial statutes as they existed at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. As was well said by Mr. Justice Hunt in affirming the decree of Judge Blatchford in the Reiman case (Fed. Cas. 11675): "The argument that the subject of bankruptcies is to be interpreted and limited by the British and colonial statutes as they existed at the time of the separation of this country from Great Britain is quite too narrow. No country can afford to be thus cut off from all possible improvement in its legislation. Whatever relates to the subject of bankruptcy is within the jurisdiction of Congress; and to say that the law as existing at the time of the Revolution or the adoption of the Constitution shall furnish the rule and limitation of legislation would take a large part of the subject out of their jurisdiction. While it is true that all proper bankrupt laws and insolvent laws are based upon the theory of a surrender of the bankrupt's property, none of them require such surrender to be entire and absolute." See also opinion of the Supreme Court in Hanover Nat. Bank v. Moyses, supra, and opinion of this Court in Campbell v. Alleghany Corporation, supra.

Nor are the limits of the bankruptcy power to be sought in the exercise which Congress has made of that power. Congress made no exercise of the bankruptcy power whatever until 1800, when an act along the line of the English bankruptcy acts relating to traders was passed, which was repealed, however, in 1803. The power was again exercised by the passage of an act in 1841, but this act was repealed in 1843. In 1867 the third bankruptcy act was passed, and it remained in force for only 11 years, being repealed in 1878. In 1898 the present bankruptcy act was passed. It has been well described (1 Remington on Bankruptcy, p. 18) as: "A system of laws for the taking possession of the assets of an insolvent, either upon his own initiative or, in case he has done certain acts called acts of bankruptcy, considered to demonstrate his unworthiness or incapacity properly to continue his business upon the initiative of his creditors; for recovering such of his assets as have been transferred fraudulently to third parties or unfairly to particular preferred creditors or have been seized by creditors while the debtor was insolvent; for selling the assets and distributing the proceeds equitably amongst his creditors; and finally for granting to him, in case he has surrendered all his assets and disclosed to his creditors in bankruptcy the truth about his business, a discharge from the unpaid deficit of his debts." But not even the act of 1898 fully covered the subject of bankruptcy. It made no adequate provision for extension of time to insolvents, for corporate reorganization, for relief of embarrassed railroad corporations, or for relief of agricultural debtors. It was designed primarily for the relief of those whose debts had been incurred in mercantile and manufacturing pursuits and their creditors; and only in this field did it afford relief which could be said to be adequate.

In 1933, however, a much wider exercise of the bankruptcy power on the part of Congress became imperative. The period of industrial expansion which followed the World War witnessed an unprecedented expansion of credit throughout the country. Bonds were issued by both public and private corporations in amounts far beyond any ability on their part to pay in normal times, and private individuals borrowed on real-estate mortgages to an extent that had never before been thought possible. This period of prosperity and expansion of credit had been followed by an economic depression world-wide in scope, property values had dwindled to a mere fraction of what they had been, and the national income had shrunk to the extent that the payment even of the interest on this vast volume of indebtedness was out of the question. Relief was needed in the form of bankruptcy laws, which would enable the people to face reality with respect to the altered condition of their debt structure and would enable business to go forward unhampered by obligations which were impossible of fulfillment. Congress accordingly passed the amendment of March 3, 1933, to the Bankruptcy Act (47 Stat. 1467). This amendment added four sections to the act: Section 74, which provided for compositions and extensions by distressed debtors without an adjudication of bankruptcy; section 75, which provided a special plan for the relief of agricultural debtors; section 76, which granted relief to persons secondary liable on obligations of distressed debtors; and section 77, which provided for the reorganization of insolvent railroads. Sections 74 and 77, as thus enacted, have been sustained, as a valid exercise of the bankruptcy power (In re Landquist (C. C. A. 7), 70 Federal (2d) 929; In re Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. (C. C. A. 7) 72 Federal (2d) 443).

It was soon apparent, however, that the amendments of 1933 did not adequately meet the situation. Something was needed which would enable insolvent corporations and farmers to obtain relief from their debt burdens without forcing a sale of their property, and in the case of farmers, without putting them off of the land which they had been cultivating to join the army of the destitute and unemployed. Congress accordingly, on June 7, 1934, passed the Corporate Reorganization Act, as section 77 (b) of the Bankruptcy Act, and on June 28, 1934, passed the Frazier-Lemke Act, adding subsection (s) to section 75 of the Bankruptcy Act. Both of these acts provide relief in bankruptcy for embarrassed debtors and their creditors under the supervision of the court without requiring a sale of the property of the debtor. We have recently passed upon the Corporate Reorganization Act and have held it valid (Campbell v. Alleghany Corporation, supra).

Both section 75 as originally enacted and the the Frazier-Lemke Act, adding subsection (s) thereto, are emergency legislation, enacted to meet the conditions brought about by the economic depression. Subsection (c) of section 75 limits the time within which petitions may be filed thereunder to 5 years, and the provisions of subsection (s), the Frazier-Lemke Act, are applicable only to debts existing at the time of its passage. As originally enacted the section provided merely for extensions and compositions for agricultural debtors, when accepted by a majority in number and amount of the claims against them, and when approved by the court as for the best interest of all creditors and as including an equitable and feasible method of liquidation for secured creditors and of financial rehabilitation for the farmer. See subsections (g) and (i). Compositions and extensions thereunder did not "reduce the amount of nor impair the lien of any secured creditors" but affected "only the time and method of its liquidation." Subsection (k). There can be no question but that under the principles discussed by us in Campbell v. Alleghany Corporation, supra, the section as originally enacted was valid.

Subsection (s), added by the Frazier-Lemke Act, provides for cases where a farmer who has filed a petition under section 75 has failed to obtain the acceptance by creditors of an extension or composition proposal offered, or who may feel aggrieved by the composition or extension as finally approved. Such farmer is authorized to amend his petition or answer so as to ask that he be adjudged a bankrupt. Provision is then made, under paragraphs (1) to (6) of the subsection, for the valuation of his property by appraisers, subject to review by the court, and for the purchase by him of all or any part of the property at the valuations so fixed, upon making payments which are spread over a period of 6 years. As the right of the farmer to purchase the property under these sections is dependent upon the consent of lien holders, and as the lien holder here has not given such consent, the validity of these purchase provisions is not before us. Upon the principles hereafter discussed, however, we see no reason to doubt their validity. Where a secured creditor objects to the sale to the farmer in accordance with these provisions, however, provision is made under paragraph (7) that proceedings be stayed, that the farmer have the right to retain possession of the property for 5 years upon paying a reasonable annual rental to be fixed by the court, and that he have the right to purchase the property at any time within the 5 years upon paying the appraised price of the property, with the right on the part of the lien holder to demand a reappraisal of the property and payment of the amount thereof in lieu of the amount of the original appraisal, if it is acceptable to him. Paragraph (1) of the subsection relating to appraisal of the property of the bankrupt and paragraph (7), upon which the rights of the petitioner here depend are as follows:

"(1) Upon such a request being made in the petition or answer, at the time of the first hearing, appraisers shall be designated and appointed. Such appraisers shall appraise all the property of the debtor at its then fair and reasonable value, not necessarily the market value at the time of such appraisal. The appraisals shall be made in all other respects, with right of objections, exceptions, and appeal, in accordance with this act: Provided, That in case of real estate either party may file objections, exceptions, and appeals within 1 year from date of order approving the appraisal."

"(7) If any secured creditor of the debtor, affected thereby, shall file written objections to the manner of payments and distribution of debtor's property as herein provided for, then the court, after having set aside the debtor's exemptions as prescribed by the State law, shall stay all proceedings for a period of 5 years, during which 5 years the debtor shall retain possession of all or any part of his property, under the control of the court, provided he pays a reasonable rental annually for that part of the property of which he retains possession; the first payment of such rental to be made within 6 months of the date of the order staying proceedings, such rental to be distributed among the secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear, under the provisions of this act. At the end of 5 years, or prior thereto, the debtor may pay into court the appraised price of the property of which he retains possession: Provided, That upon request of any lien holder on real estate the court shall cause a reappraisal of such real estate and the debtor may then pay the reappraised price, if acceptable to the lien holder, into the court, otherwise the original appraisal price shall be paid into court and thereupon the court shall, by an order, turn over full possession and title of said property to the debtor and he may apply for his discharge as provided for by this act: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall apply only to debts existing at the time this act becomes effective."

As the paragraphs which we have quoted are amendments of the general bankruptcy law, it is clear that the appraisals for which provision is made are to be conducted as are other appraisals in bankruptcy under the supervision and approval of the court, with the added safeguard that, in the case of real estate, objections, exceptions, and appeals may be filed within 1 year of the order approving the appraisal. The price at which the farmer may purchase the property, therefore, is not some arbitrary figure arrived at by friendly appraisers, as has been argued, but the fair and reasonable value of the property as determined by the court in a judicial proceeding after notice and hearing. The appraisal is to be made of the property "at its then fair and reasonable value, not necessarily the market value at the time of such appraisal." Congress doubtless realized that, as a result of the economic depression, much valuable farm property had little or no market value at the time, and that it would be unfair to creditors to value the property on the basis of its then market value. In arriving at its fair and reasonable value, the appraisers and the court were authorized to take into consideration all the circumstances bearing upon value, not merely the market value at the time of the appraisal, just as a public-service commission may consider such circumstances in valuing property for rate-making purposes. The cost of the property, the cost of improvements made upon it, its depreciation, its productive capacity, reproduction cost, or the cost of acquiring like property, the history of values in the immediate locality—all of these and other like matters, as well as market value, would be proper subjects of consideration in determining fair and reasonable value. The rule prescribed is eminently fair to creditors, as it is hardly conceivable that a court would approve an appraisal as a fair and reasonable value which was less than market value. And the danger that the farmer might avail himself of the provisions of the act to speculate upon the chances of a rise in the value of the property without obligating himself to purchase it, is obviated by the provision which allows the lien holder to demand a reappraisal. If the farmer elects to purchase, he must pay either the original appraisal or this reappraisal, whichever is higher.

It is, of course, no ground of constitutional objection that the section here in question relates only to farmers; for it is well settled that the uniformity prescribed by the Constitution is "geographical and not personal" and that bankruptcy legislation need not apply to all classes of persons in the same way (Hanover National Bank v. Moyses, supra, 186 U. S. 181, 188; Stellwagen v. Clum, 245 U. S. 605, 613; Leidigh Carriage Co. v. Stengel (C. C. A. 6th), 95 Fed. 637; In re California Pac. Ry. Co., 3 Sawyer 240, Fed. Cas. No. 2,315; Campbell v. Alleghany Corporation, supra). And it does not furnish ground of objection that secured debts are affected, or that property which has been mortgaged by the bankrupt is to be administered by the bankruptcy court. Under the bankruptcy law as it existed prior to the recent amendments the court in ordering the sale of the bankrupt's property free of liens administers his encumbered property, as well as that which is unencumbered. (See Van Huffel v. Harkelrode, 284 U. S. 225, 227; Federal Land Bank of Baltimore v. Kurtz (C. C. A. 4th), 70 Fed. (2d) 46; Allebach v. Thomas (C. C. A. 4th, 16 Fed. (2d) 853.) "A secured debt or lien is, so far as the Constitution of the United States is concerned, a no more sacred kind of property than an unsecured debt, * * * and the Constitution expressly permits and grants to Congress the power to affect such property, whether it be an unsecured debt or whether it be a lien, by laws relating to the subject of bankruptcies" (In re Burgh, 7 Fed. Supp. 184, 185; Campbell v. Alleghany Corporation, supra).

The case, then, comes to this: Whether the act is to be condemned as not being in fact a law on the subject of bankruptcies or as denying the due process guaranteed by the fifth amendment, either because it permits the farmer to purchase the encumbered property at the valuation fixed by the court instead of requiring that it be sold at public auction, with right on the part of the lienholder to bid at the sale, or because it permits a delay of 5 years, during which the property is to be rented to the farmer, before requiring that the value as determined by the court be collected and distributed to lienholders and other creditors.

There can be little doubt as to the law being a law on the subject of bankruptcies within the meaning of those words as used in the Constitution. It applies only to farmers who are unable to pay their debts and ask to be adjudged bankrupt. It requires the surrender of their property into the control of the court of bankruptcy. It provides for the valuation of this property and that such valuation be paid to creditors. It grants to the bankrupt a discharge from his debts. That the property of the bankrupt is to be operated under the direction of the court until such time as it can be disposed of to advantage, is, of course, not inconsistent with the purposes of a bankruptcy act; and there is nothing in the nature of bankruptcy which requires that the debtor's property be actually sold and the proceeds thereof distributed among creditors. If the creditors receive the value of the property, they have received all to which they are reasonably entitled. The corporate reorganization act rests on this basis; and there is no reason why Congress should not apply the same principles to the relief of insolvent farmers. See discussion of this question as applied to corporate reorganization in Campbell v. Alleghany Corporation, supra.

Of course, a bankruptcy law must not offend against the due-process clause of the fifth amendment, which is a limitation upon all of the powers conferred by the people upon the Federal Government (Hanover Nat. Bank v. Moyses, supra). But as any exercise of the bankruptcy power impairs the obligation of contracts, such impairment is not to be taken as in itself a denial of due process. For the provisions of the act to violate the amendment, they must be so grossly arbitrary and unreasonable as to be "incompatible with fundamental law"; and, when consideration is given to the situation which confronted Congress at the time of the passage of the act, and we do not think that its provisions can be said to violate this rule. The situation, which still continues in large measure, was that agriculture throughout the United States was prostrate and dispairing. A huge volume of debt, estimated at between eight and nine billions of dollars, had been piled up by the farmers in the period of expansion, and this was represented in large part by mortgages on land. As a result of the decline in the prices of agricultural products, the farmers were without means to pay even the interest on this huge volume of debt, and there was default throughout the country on agricultural mortgages. Foreclosures on an unprecedented scale were imminent; but such foreclosures, while fraught with ruin to the farmer debtors, would not have resulted in payment of the debts, as land had so declined in value that only in rare instances could it be sold for anything like the amount of the debt against it. To have permitted these foreclosures to proceed would have meant the purchasing of the land by the lienholders, the eviction of owners who were settled on the land, and a great increase in tenant farming. It was in the public interest that the farmer be kept on his farm; that, if possible, his interest as an owner of the farm be maintained; and that its value as a going concern be preserved.

It was to meet this emergency situation that the statute in question was enacted. The interests of the creditor were protected by having the property valued under the direction and subject to the approval of the court, and by providing that the creditor should ultimately receive this valuation. The farmer was kept on the farm and its value as a going concern was preserved by providing that it should be rented to the owner at a rental to be fixed by the court, and that he should have the right to purchase it at the fair and reasonable value which the court should determine.

The operation of mortgaged property under the control of the court, is, of course, nothing new. It is a common thing for foreclosure proceedings to be delayed while the court operates the property of debtor corporations for the purpose of preserving its going-concern value in the interest of stockholders as well as creditors until a sale can be advantageously made; and it should not be held "so grossly arbitrary and unreasonable as to be incompatible with fundamental law" that Congress, when faced with a great economic emergency, has prescribed for the relief of agricultural debtors and their creditors, a procedure which involves the operation of agricultural property under the supervision of the court to the end that its value may be preserved in the interest of all parties concerned. The fact that the court is to rent the property, instead of operating it through a receiver, is a difference of detail in management and not a difference in principle.

And the right accorded the farmer to purchase at the valuation fixed by the court is no more than the right accorded the debtor under the corporate reorganization act which we have upheld. If the creditor receives the value of the property, it is no concern of his who the purchaser may be; and as we have seen, the act provides for the determination of value by the court in a judicial proceeding in which the creditor is given full opportunity to be heard.

As a matter of fact, no property in any real sense is taken from the lien holder by reason of the provisions of the act. The mortgaged property has already shrunk in value before the proceedings under the act are instituted; and the proceedings merely scale down the secured portion of the debt to the value of the encumbered property and transfer the lien of the encumbrance to the proceeds of that property when paid into court. While the lien holder is delayed in getting his money, the delay is probably not for so long a time, or the loss so great, as would result to him if the act were not passed and wholesale foreclosures of real-estate mortgages should result. While generally regarded as a measure for the relief of farmer debtors, it is clear that the act is at the same time one in the interest of their creditors also; for creditors of farmers would have nothing to gain, even with respect to the collection of their debts, from the financial debacle which would result from the wholesale foreclosure of farm mortgages, in which their collateral would be rendered practically worthless. In this connection, it may not be amiss to consider the closing paragraphs of the report of the Senate Judiciary Committee, reporting on the act (Rept. No. 1215, 73d Cong., 2d sess.). They are as follows:

"In short, all that this amendment does is to carry out the purpose of section 75 and adjust and scale down existing farm indebtedness to the present value of his property, and it gives the debtor farmer an opportunity to save his home and maintain his property by paying for it on the installment plan, while the property remains under the control of the court. Section 75 itself is an emergency act and has only about 3½ years to run. Therefore this amendment will cease to exist when the time limit of section 75 expires.

"This amendment will make it possible for the Federal Farm Credit Administration, through the Federal land banks, to function by adjusting and scaling down the indebtedness to somewhere within the reasonable value of the property. This amendment in no way affects existing liens or emcumbrances, except that it scales them down to the present value of the encumbered property and then transfers the lien or liens to the proceeds of that property when paid into court.

"On the average, under its provisions, the lienholders and creditors of the debtor farmer, on a whole, will receive unquestionably larger returns than under the present system, where the property is thrown upon the market and sold at public auction. It gives a reasonable time and gives the original owner an opportunity to protect his property, and therefore his home."

If the States, as has been held in Home Building & Loan Association v. Blaisdell (290 U. S. 398), may in times of emergency exercise their police power to grant a moratorium against the foreclosure of mortgages, notwithstanding the limitations of the contract clause of the Constitution, then certainly Congress, which has been given express power upon the subject of bankruptcies, may exercise that power in the enactment of bankruptcy laws designed to meet the emergency, even though the exercise may delay the collection of the debts due by the bankrupt. As has been often said, the bankruptcy power, like the other powers granted to the Federal Government, is plenary. It is to be used, as are the other granted powers, to "promote the general welfare." And in times of emergency it should be exercised, reasonably of course and in the spirit of the Constitution, but in a way, if possible, to meet the problems of the emergency. As said by the Chief Justice in the Blaisdell case: "While emergency does not create power, emergency may furnish the occasion for the exercise of power. 'Although an emergency may not call into life a power which has never lived, nevertheless emergency may afford a reason for the exertion of a living power already enjoyed' (Wilson v. New, 243 U. S. 332, 348). The constitutional question presented in the light of an emergency is whether the power possessed embraces the particular exercise of it in response to particular conditions."

The most serious question presented is as to the 5-year delay which the statute interposes to the rights of the creditor. It may be conceded that under ordinary conditions this provision would be so arbitrary and unreasonable as to offend against the provisions of the fifth amendment; but we are not prepared to say that it may be so condemned when viewed in the light of the emergency which confronted Congress. Whether after the economic depression shall have passed and conditions shall have returned to normal the act can be sustained is a question which is not before us; but the law is well settled that "it is always open to judicial inquiry whether the exigency still exists upon which the continued operation of the law depends" (Home Building & Loan Association v. Blaisdell, supra, 290 U. S. 398, 442; Chastleton Corp. v. Sinclair, 264 U. S. 543, 547, 548).

The act in question has been upheld as constitutional by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Sixth Circuit in Louisville Joint Stock Land Bank v. Radford (C. C. A. 6th), — Fed. (2d), —; by Judge Dawson in the same case in the district court (8 Fed. Supp. 489); by Judge Symes in In re Cope (8 Fed. Supp. 778); and by Judge Atwell in Paine v. Capitol Freehold Land Co. (8 Fed. Supp 500).

We come then to the question as to whether the court of bankruptcy had jurisdiction to stay proceedings for foreclosure of a mortgage already pending in a State court; and it is clear that prior to the enactment of the amendment of March 3, 1933, it had no such power (Straton v. New, 283 U. S. 318; In re Hurlock, 23 Fed. (2d) 500). This was because the jurisdiction of the State court and the bankruptcy court in matters of foreclosure was concurrent, and on principles of comity the bankruptcy court would not attempt to interfere with the jurisdiction of the State court. Under subsection (n) of section 75, however, the bankruptcy court was given exclusive jurisdiction over the property of the farmer debtor; and under subsection (o) it was expressly provided that proceedings for the foreclosure of mortgages should not be instituted, or, if instituted prior to the filing of the petition, should not be maintained. Under such circumstances there can be no question but that the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court over the property was paramount and exclusive, and that it was the duty of the court to protect this jurisdiction by injunction or other appropriate process. In such case the power of the court is analogous to that which it possesses where the property of the bankrupt is in possession of the receiver of a State court appointed within 4 months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. See In re Watts (190 U. S. 1); Bailey v. Blackmon (C. C. A. 4th), 14 Fed. (2d) 16, 19, 20); Gamble v. Daniel (C. C. A. 8th), 39 Fed. (2d) 447); Miller v. Potts (C. C. A. 6th), 26 Fed. (2d) 851).

It is argued that the power of the court of bankruptcy to stay proceedings ended with the rejection of the proposition for composition or extension submitted under section 75 as originally enacted. This, however, fails to take account of the fact that subsection (s), the Frazier-Lemke Act, is a mere addition to section 75 of the Bankruptcy Act, and that the procedure provided for thereunder is merely a continuation of the procedure which must be begun under other subsections of section 75. For the court to afford the relief which the section, as amended, contemplates, it is necessary that the exclusive and paramount jurisdiction of the court over the property of the bankrupt be maintained; and there can be no question but that the provisions of subsections (n) and (o) apply as well to proceedings continued under subsection (s) as to proceedings under the other provisions of section 75.

And we do not think that the right to stay proceedings in the State court is precluded because a sale has taken place in foreclosure proceedings if there has been no confirmation of the sale. Of course, where the property of the bankrupt has finally passed from him under a foreclosure proceeding, the bankruptcy court has no power over it; for the bankruptcy court is given jurisdiction only over property of the bankrupt, and when he has ceased to have an interest in the property as the result of foreclosure, no basis exists for a stay of proceedings under the act. In re Arend (8 Fed. Supp. 211, 212); In re Klein (9 Fed. Supp. 57, 59); In re Stacy (9 Fed. Supp. 61); In re Smith (7 Fed. Supp. 863). Under the law of Maryland, however, the defendant in foreclosure does not lose his interest in the property sold at foreclosure sale until the same is confirmed and the purchase money paid. It is provided by the Maryland Code (art. 66, sec. 11) that "all such sales, when confirmed by the court and the purchase money is paid, shall pass all the title which the mortgagor had in the said mortgaged premises at the time of the recording of the mortgage." Until confirmation and payment of the purchase money, the property is still in the mortgagor and the only interest acquired by the purchaser is the right to receive a conveyance upon complying with the terms of sale if the sale be confirmed. In the latest case dealing with the subject, Mizen v. Thomas (156 Md. 313, —, Atl. —), the Court of Appeals of Maryland said:

"It is true that where in such a case as this the trustee reports a sale, which in due course is finally ratified, the transaction is spoken of as a sale, and for many purposes it may be treated as a sale, and no mischief is occasioned by that use of the word. (Miller's Equity Proc., sec. 512.) But strictly speaking it is not a sale, for a sale of real estate is not complete or consummate until the property has been actually conveyed, or at least until the purchaser has so far complied with the terms of sale as to entitle him to a conveyance. The bid of the purchaser, its acceptance, the report of the trustee, and its final ratification by the court, are all successive steps in the formation and completion of a perfect and binding contract of sale, but do not amount in themselves to an actual sale. Nor can the property be treated as actually sold until the terms of sale have been met or waived and the purchaser has received or is entitled to receive a conveyance thereof. For until then the title to the property is still in the mortgagor, and the only interest acquired by the purchaser is the right to receive a conveyance of the property upon complying with the terms of sale."

While there are some expressions to the contrary in the opinion in Union Trust Co. v. Biggs (153 Md. 50, 137 Atl. 509), that case merely decided that a judgment against the defendant in foreclosure, rendered after the sale but before its confirmation, did not constitute a lien upon the property sold; and it is to be interpreted, in our opinion, as relating the effect of the confirmation to the date of the sale, rather than as changing the well-settled rule as to the effect of judicial sales on the rights of the parties prior to confirmation. See Whiteley v. Whiteley (117 Md. 538, 544); Loft, Inc., v. Seymore (148 Md. 638, 645). But at all events, the decision in Mizen v. Thomas, supra, is the latest expression of the Maryland court and we accept it as laying down the rule now in force in that State.

"As the bankrupt had not lost his rights in the mortgaged property as a result of the unconfirmed foreclosure sale, we think that the foreclosure proceedings should have been stayed. The statute is highly remedial in character and should be liberally construed. The evident purpose of Congress was to grant to farmer debtors the relief which it prescribes in all cases where an interest in their property remained in them at the time of the filing of petitions under the act." (See Paine v. Capitol Freehold & Land Co. (8 Fed. Supp. 500); In re Lawmon (8 Fed. Supp. 886); In re Cope (8 Fed. Supp. 961); In re Mines (9 Fed. Supp. 1); In re Duffy (9 Fed. Supp. 166).) As said by Judge Lindley in the case last cited:

"Viewing the bankruptcy amendment in connection with the remaining sections of the Bankruptcy Act and the recent amendments thereto, it seems to me evident that Congress intended to reach every kind of property interest or property right which the bankrupt then had, including rights to redeem; that Congress intended that the bankrupt should have an opportunity to preserve the then existing status of foreclosure or other insolvency proceedings until it can be determined whether any rehabilitation is impossible. This does not mean that Congress has said that mortgages shall not be enforced. It does not mean that liberty of contracts shall be interfered with or property confiscated, but it does mean that the court, within its jurisdiction and within the limits announced by the Supreme Court in the recent case of Home Building & Loan Association v. Blaisdell (290 U. S. 398, 54 S. Ct. 231, 78 L. Ed. 413, 88 A. L. R. 1481) will preserve the existing status of property rights of the bankrupt until convinced that no good purpose is being served by so doing."

For the reason stated, we think the learned judge below erred in denying the prayer of the petition for stay of proceedings in the State court. The order appealed from will accordingly be reversed and the case will be remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion. As appeal to superintend and revise under section 24 (b) of the Bankruptcy Act is the proper method of review, the order appealed from will be reversed in no. 3778 and the appeal in no. 3797 will be dismissed.

In no. 3778 reversed.

In no. 3797 appeal dismissed.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOODS, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein, to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on what are known as the "Bailey amendments" to the pending bill.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

CONDITION OF COTTON-TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, in the Providence Journal of yesterday I notice a list of the cases on relief in the cotton-textile mill towns in my State. The list shows a total increase over those on relief last year of 4,896. I ask unanimous consent the article from the Providence Journal, to which I have referred, may be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, the closing within the week of four additional mills in Rhode Island and Massachusetts, affecting as it does the employment of several thousand workers, impels me at this time again to call the attention of the Senate to the general situation affecting the textile industry of the eastern and southern Atlantic States.

Unable to enlist the sympathies of the executive branch of the Government, upon which is the responsibility for effecting recovery of the great industries of the country, we, who are conversant with the existing conditions, are receiving the pleas of employers and employees to secure a change of attitude.

Far from draining the resources of the farmers, the textile industries of the country are their best customers. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, however, has a psychology that cannot be either understood or interpreted by industry. For instance, in order to reduce the carry-over of cotton, he would starve industry into paying a high price for its raw material. A natural price for cotton is not objected to, as it would be reflected not only in our own product but that of the whole world, for the world would be paying on the same basis.

However, what really is happening is that Secretary Wallace is killing off the domestic customer of the cotton farmer without providing new customers for him. He cannot sell more cotton abroad than can be absorbed, a fact that has been made patent to, but has failed to influence the Government officials.

When a merchant finds himself overstocked, his first thought is to divest himself of whatever may be his excess merchandise. Sometimes he has to sacrifice even more than his profits to dispose of that for which at normal prices there is little or no demand. I do not contend that the cotton farmer must sell his excess at a loss or below a normal figure, but I do insist that it is poor psychology artificially to raise the price so high that we get into that vicious circle which results in the closing of the mills and the placing of more thousands upon the relief rolls.

It must be realized that "price", as I refer to that factor, means what the mills have to pay for cotton before it can be processed. We have to give consideration to many things in this regard. There is the influence of the Government's loan policy, whereby an advance of 12 cents is provided as a basis for the farmers upon which to realize on their cotton. Then there is the processing tax, which, in my State, amounts to about 40 percent of our pay-roll outlay. We have code wages to pay, although there is no opposition to that, except as it may affect the whole picture.

But while the mills are being subjected to these harassing matters the administration stands by idly and, despite section 3 (e) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, permits Japan to flood our markets with textiles, the product of cheap oriental labor.

Foreign trade is the strange fetish of the administration. It would sell cotton abroad and permit the return of the finished goods in competition with our mills, which cannot face it. At the same time, the administration calls upon us to provide $4,800,000,000 of work-relief money.

It has been whispered about that persons in high places believe the present agitation for relief in the cotton and cotton-textile industries to have been fomented by cotton speculators.

Closed mills and workers walking the streets in the mill towns attest to the futility of holding speculators in cotton responsible for the putting of men and women on relief.

The administration's tariff policies are being repudiated, at least privately, by the very followers of the Democratic Party who brought about the adoption of the present reciprocal trade agreement law. They thought, it appears, that it would lead to the narrowing of what they were pleased to call "the disparity between agricultural and industrial prices", never dreaming for a moment that there was more than tariff involved, or that farm products would be affected both directly and indirectly, as will be found to be the case.

The trouble is, as I see it, the unwillingness of the administration to admit a mistake. It fears loss of prestige. That already is becoming a fact because of administration acts of commission and omission.

No loss of prestige can come from putting men and women back to work, taking them off the relief rolls, and restoring their self-respect. It is the protest of the unemployed and the hungry that will bring about disrespect for the administration.

During the past month delegation after delegation of representatives of cotton growers and cotton textile manufacturers have come to Washington praying for relief from the burdens which are crushing their industries. One of these delegations, from the State of Georgia, was composed of men who have spent their lives in the business of manufacturing cotton textiles. If there is any group of men who know every angle of the cotton-textile business, it is these men.

Representatives of the textile industry are almost unanimous in their belief that the cotton-processing tax is building up consumer resistance in this country and is throwing the price of cotton textiles completely out of line. They believe that the increased cost of manufacturing as a result of numerous codes, taxes, and regulations, has invited an overwhelming influx of goods from foreign countries. In pleading for relief they have only one thing in mind, and that is an attempt to salvage the cotton-textile industry and bring natural prosperity to the cotton growers, manufacturers, and workers.

There is no longer either patriotism or wisdom in remaining silent when one of our major industries is being straitjacketed and suffocated by the application of theories of a Secretary of Agriculture whose activities are reaching beyond the farm and stopping the wheels of industry.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has rendered a noble service by his effort to save the domestic market for his southern textile mills and for his southern cotton growers. On this issue we of New England stand on common ground with the people of the South. Everybody seems to be agreed—that is, everybody but the Secretary of Agriculture—that the cotton-processing tax is partially responsible for desolation in the cotton-textile industry.

Now we witness an order to curtail cotton manufacturing by 25 percent. Mr. President, before long cotton-textile production will be curtailed 100 percent. Twenty-three large mills in the State of Rhode Island alone have already closed. The decline in the price of raw cotton, the failure of mill after mill, the tremendous influx of cheap cotton textiles from abroad, and the pitiful fact that 50,000 trained textile workers are facing the relief roll, may be charged to our shameful mistake in intrusting a large part of our national affairs to an impulsive theorist, who, so far as I know, has never been inside a cotton-textile mill.

The importation of cotton textiles is a more serious problem than most people believe. At the same time we are agreeing to curtail production in our cotton mills in this country we are witnessing a tremendous increase in importations from abroad. From December to February importations have increased by leaps and bounds. I am informed that during the first 3 weeks of March importations will run well over 6,000,000 square yards—more than the total importations during the whole of the year 1934.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. METCALF. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Whence do those importations come principally?

Mr. METCALF. The cheaper goods come mostly from Japan.

Mr. McKELLAR. What proportion comes from Japan?

Mr. METCALF. I cannot tell the Senator.

From press comments it would appear that the State Department's reciprocal-treaty policy forms an almost impenetrable wall over which our domestic textile manufacturers cannot hope to climb. It is too bad, Mr. President, that we are forced to stand by and witness the desolation in the cotton industry and receive nothing from our Government officials but the blind assertions that they intend to go on with their present policies in spite of the dark facts we have before us.

Senators from cotton States bear witness:

During the 28 days of February 1,367,000 pounds of cotton staple under 1⅛ inch arrived in this country from British India, and 180,000 pounds from China.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. METCALF. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I understand the Senator is complaining about cheap goods coming to the United States from Japan. Is that correct?

Mr. METCALF. That is correct; from Japan as well as from some other countries.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I understand also the Senator is complaining about the processing tax and opposing a processing tax. Is that correct?

Mr. METCALF. That is correct.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If the Senator could be convinced that through a wide issue of silver we might ameliorate the condition of which he complains so far as imports from Japan are concerned, would the Senator be inclined to cooperate with us to obtain some desirable results?

Mr. METCALF. I would cooperate in an effort which I thought sensible and which would tend to put the cotton workers back to work.

I should like to digress for a moment to point out some very interesting facts concerning the results of the program of our professorial theorist, the Secretary of Agriculture. I am told that the best butter in the world is made in Wisconsin. With that in mind the people of Wisconsin should be interested to know that during the 4 weeks of February we imported 3,056,000 pounds of butter. Possibly the Secretary of Agriculture would like to purchase this as a surplus.

The people of Texas should be interested in the fact that 6,773,000 pounds of meat came into the United States from foreign countries during February.

Senators from the wheat area should stand at attention before the fact that 1,055,000 bushels of wheat grown by Canadian farmers came into the United States for consumption by the American people.

The city of Peoria, Ill., is in the very heart of the Corn Belt. It is faced on one side by the Illinois River and surrounded on other sides by millions of acres of fine cornfields. A few days ago there was unloaded in Peoria 32,000 bushels of corn from Mexico. During the last few weeks of February 1,815,000 bushels of corn were imported into the United States, some of which came all the way from Rumania.

This situation, Mr. President, certainly justifies our hope that Mr. Roosevelt, on his return to Washington from his Florida vacation, will give it the careful attention it merits.

This morning I received a letter from Bushnell, Nebr., reading as follows:

BUSHNELL, NEBR., April 1, 1935.

To Senator METCALF.

DEAR SENATOR: I see you are after Secretary Wallace in regard to cotton farmers, and I write you to not forget the wheat and corn farmer. We are about in the same fix as cotton farmers are. The farmers here think Mr. Wallace's wings must be clipped or he will have us all busted and on relief. Now, we cannot borrow seed loan unless we agree to sign a wheat-reduction contract, and we do not know what the contract is to be now. The most of the wheat farmers here have lost our winter wheat by dry and dust storms, and we sure need the seed loan in order to keep trying to keep going. We need the seed loan without any string on it. The farmers here are with you in your fight for a fair deal. There has been more wheat coming in from other countries now than our overproduction was.

Yours respectfully for a fair deal.

I do not give the name of the writer of this letter, because I did not ask his permission to do so.

I thank the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. METCALF. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. The philosophy of scarcity which was debated here during the past few days has been in reference to agriculture. Suppose the same principle were applied to industry. Suppose we should tax all the people, and pay the United States Steel Corporation, for example, a bonus on the steel they did not produce, or pay the railroads a bonus on the tons of freight they did not haul. Suppose the policy now applied to agriculture were applied to industry.

I think that is a complete answer to whether or not such a policy is justified as a permanent venture, although it might be justified on some grounds as a temporary expedient.

Mr. METCALF. I think the Senator is right again.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. METCALF. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yesterday I introduced a bill providing for the repeal of section 5 of title I of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which provides for the processing tax. I trust I may have the support of the Senator from Rhode Island in getting consideration for that bill.

Mr. METCALF. We will study it carefully.

EXHIBIT A

[From the Providence Journal, Apr. 4, 1935]

PROCESSING TAX BRINGS JUMP IN RELIEF ROLLS OF STATE—COTTON TEXTILE MILL TOWNS CONTRIBUTE 4,310 CASES OF TOTAL INCREASE OF 4,896 IN RHODE ISLAND WELFARE LISTS SINCE LEVY BECAME EFFECTIVE AUGUST 1, 1933

Cotton textile mill towns contributed 4,310 cases to the total increase of 4,896 in the welfare rolls of Rhode Island between August 1, 1933, the date the cotton processing tax became effective, and March 1 of the present year.

Records at the office of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration headquarters here showed that a total of 13,085 persons were on Federal relief rolls in Rhode Island during the week that ended on August 5, 1933, while the number had increased to 17,981 during the week that ended February 28 last.

While the decreased activity in the cotton textile business cannot be laid solely to the processing tax, nor are all the additional welfare cases those of cotton-textile workers, the figures indicate the havoc that has been wrought in Rhode Island communities, partly or principally dependent upon cotton-textile manufactories, during the past 20 months.

WOONSOCKET LIST GAINS

In the city of Woonsocket, one of the textile centers of the East, the number of names on the welfare rolls increased 171 percent, jumping from 590 in August 1933 to 1,599 on the 1st of March this year.

Pawtucket, where the welfare rolls swelled from 1,272 in August 1933 to 1,916 on March 1, 1935, was affected by the closing of the Manville-Jenckes mill and curtailment of production in other manufactories.

West Warwick, dealt a severe blow by the closing of the B. B. and R. Knight mills, is staggering under a welfare burden that has increased 177 percent in the last 20 months.

The welfare figures of West Warwick form a parallel to the decline and ultimate passing of the Knight mills. During August 1933, while the mills were operating with the hope that some of the new Government regulations over the industry would aid the cotton-textile business, the town had but 184 persons receiving relief. A year later, by the time the processing tax, underselling by foreign competitors and other burdens, had made themselves felt, the welfare roll had grown to 330 persons. Early this year the Knight mills closed, and the number on relief promptly mounted to 511.

OTHER TOWNS HIT

There are numerous other towns that have seen their welfare rolls increased by 100 percent or more during the past 20 months; Smithfield, from 47 to 118, and little Richmond, with its growth of from 9 to 19.

Cumberland, with its numerous little communities largely dependent upon the pay rolls of the Lonsdale Co., had a welfare list of 236 on March 1 as compared to 148 in August 1933, but this does not complete the picture of the welfare situation in the town. Since March 1, the last date upon which figures were available, the Ashton mill of the Lonsdale Co. has closed and an additional 200 persons have been thrown out of work.

Only a few years ago the Lonsdale Co. was one of the most active cotton-textile manufactories in the country. Now, of its original five units, only two are operating and these at reduced capacity. Only the foundations of old No. 4 mill are visible, it having been torn down. Most of the machinery has been moved out of the Ann and Hope mill and the Ashton mill closed "for an indefinite period" on March 31. Now only the Berkeley mill and the bleachery across the river are being operated.

In Providence curtailment in the cotton-textile industry has made a definite contribution. In August 1933 there were 6,468 persons on welfare in Providence. A year later there were three fewer persons receiving aid, but on March 1 of this year the number had grown to 7,845, an increase of 1,380 in 7 months.

Within the city itself the Grant mill of the B. B. & R. Knight Co. closed and many Providence persons who were employed in textile mills in nearby cities and towns also are out of employment.

A similar situation holds in Cranston, where the number on relief advanced from 455 in August 1933 to 590 in August 1934, and then still further, to 748 on March 1 of this year.

The figures at the F. E. R. A. headquarters record that no one is receiving Federal relief in the towns of Foster, New Shoreham, and West Greenwich.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, following the discussion of yesterday on the processing tax, and the address of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] this morning, I desire to present a few facts and figures which will show that the processing tax on hogs amounts to 38½ percent of all the processing taxes now being collected, and we are wondering how long we are going to be penalized by this process.

I noted in the Washington Herald a few days ago this statement:

So you'll eat pork? Have you millions? Pork chops, once the good old stand-by of the American family may soon be a luxury for millionaires only.

I think it is absolutely agreed on the part of every one that as prices rise 10 percent, consumption decreases 10 percent; and the pork producer is up against that very condition right now.

This comment in the press should be considered in connection with the announcement that on April 1, 850,000 contracts were signed up, agreeing to pay the American farmer $150,000,000 in 1935 for a reduction in acreage in corn and in the number of hogs to be raised. It has also been announced that there are now 37,000,000 hogs in the United States, the lowest number for more than 50 years, and that beef cattle and sheep are not only on the decline but also at a low-record mark.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Was that before the last killing?

Mr. DICKINSON. No; this was after the last killing.

Mr. LONG. Oh! I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. DICKINSON. Apparently, this is carrying the economy of scarcity to the extreme. When the American consumer quits buying pork on account of a high price, and substitutes other meats therefor, it will take many years to regain the market.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the Senator complaining that pork products are too high?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am complaining of the entire program of reducing production, and I am complaining that pork products are too high in comparison with other products, because people are ceasing to eat pork.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is it the Senator's theory that all efforts to reduce production, or to restrict it, should be abandoned?

Mr. DICKINSON. I should like to see them abandoned instanter, and I shall so state before I close my remarks.

There is further interest in the amount of processing tax that is being paid.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he resumes his remarks?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. In other words, the Senator from Iowa is willing for the whole program to be abandoned. If the Senator from Iowa pursues that policy he will be qualifying himself to be a Democrat, because all of us over here are for that policy.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is a new doctrine on the part of democracy. I have been thinking that the administration's policies were reflected by the legislation which has been passed, and which the administration has been attempting to continue in view of the fact that it could be terminated by Executive order of the President.

Mr. LONG. Oh, I beg the Senator's pardon, we have not passed any legislation at all. We have passed some laws which allowed the departments and bureaus to do these things, but if the Senator heard the other Senators on this side of the Chamber yesterday, he will recall that they were all complaining about the bureaus' having done them.

Mr. DICKINSON. I concur in that view.

Mr. ROBINSON. The contention of the Senator from Iowa is that all efforts on the part of the A. A. A. to increase and stabilize the price of pork products and of corn should be abandoned?

Mr. DICKINSON. It is my contention that they should be abandoned. I should like to see the corn and hog contracts of Iowa abandoned now, and I have said so in the press in Iowa.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator realize that might result in a reversion to the prices which prevailed when the prices of corn and of meat products were below the cost of production?

Mr. DICKINSON. It does not make much difference whether a man has a small crop and sells it at a high price, or whether he has a large crop and sells it at a low price.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator, then, would like to return to the conditions relating to these commodities—corn and meat—which prevailed during the Hoover administration?

Mr. DICKINSON. No; I want to return to conditions where the farmer will run his own business, and sell his products for what he can get for them in the economic equation as it will then exist.

Mr. ROBINSON. Was not that the condition which prevailed during the Hoover administration?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; there was none of this A. A. A.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator endorses that and would like to return to it?

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to return to the conditions which existed and the privileges which the farmer enjoyed before the present policy was inaugurated, because that policy is going to drive pork production out just as the policy with reference to cotton is driving cotton production out of the South, if it shall continue.

Mr. ROBINSON. If I understand the Senator correctly, he would like to abandon all efforts to increase and stabilize the prices of agricultural products.

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no; I did not say that. I said I would abandon the Agricultural Adjustment Act as passed during the present administration.

Mr. ROBINSON. What would the Senator substitute in place of it?

Mr. DICKINSON. If the Senator will give me the opportunity, I will go back and state the legislation which I think is sound.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator would go back to the Farm Board of the Hoover administration; would he?

Mr. DICKINSON. I would go back to the McNary-Haugen bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, the McNary-Haugen bill, which was vetoed by both President Coolidge and President Hoover?

Mr. DICKINSON. No; it was vetoed by President Coolidge.

Mr. ROBINSON. Twice.

Mr. DICKINSON. Twice.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator now is for the McNary-Haugen bill?

Mr. DICKINSON. As a matter of fact, the Senator from Arkansas is trying to inject a lot of politics in my remarks, and I should like to talk economics for a few moments. I am not questioning the record of former Republican Presidents; but I am willing to charge that the present administration is not only wrecking cotton, it is not only wrecking wheat, but it is wrecking the dairy industry, and it is going to wreck the hog industry and the corn industry if it is permitted to continue.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to say that Coolidge days were better than Roosevelt days or better than Hoover days, but that does not say Coolidge was right?

Mr. DICKINSON. No.

Mr. LONG. And some of the Hoover days may have been better than some of the Coolidge days, but that does not say Hoover was right.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is true.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; the effect of the suggestions of the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Iowa, as I understand, is that they are dissatisfied with present conditions. They would prefer that those conditions should be reverted to which brought the American farmer to a state of destitution during the Hoover and Coolidge administrations.

Mr. DICKINSON. We all want to go back to 1926; the members of the Democratic Party have suggested that they want to go back to 1926; and those were good Republican days.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator is wrong, Mr. President. There never were any good Republican days. [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. Then the history of this country of ours belies its own record.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is a remarkable statement.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will yield to me, I will not interrupt him again unless something is said that rather reflects on me. I cannot be put in two houses or either house; but the Senator from Arkansas says that the Senators from Iowa and Louisiana would go back to the Coolidge and Hoover days, or words to that effect. The facts are that when the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Iowa were both voting for what Hoover recommended, I was telling them both that they were wrong. Now I have convinced the Senator from Iowa that he is wrong, and if we have the Senator from Arkansas convinced we can have a protracted meeting.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Louisiana, as usual, is entirely incorrect in his statement.

Mr. LONG. Well, now, let me prove it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I prefer to present a few facts which I have in mind.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. LONG. Did not the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Arkansas both vote against higher income taxes and higher inheritance taxes, as proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS]? Did they not both pretty well sanction the program for recovery sent here by Mr. Hoover, which was more or less followed by Mr. Roosevelt's scheme?

I should like to check up the record. I think the Senator from Arkansas was a little bit more consistent in supporting Hoover's policies than was the Senator from Iowa, because, if I remember correctly, when we started to put a tariff on copper and on oil to keep the slave labor of Chile from depriving us of our copper market and to keep the slave labor of Venezuela from depriving us of our domestic oil market, we did manage to persuade the Senator from Iowa to go against his chief, Mr. Hoover, but the Senator from Arkansas never did come over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana is wrong, and he seems to be anxious to maintain that attitude. He is entirely incorrect when he says the policies of the Roosevelt administration are those of the Hoover administration. In times of distress we all recognize necessity for a national leadership.

Mr. LONG. Right or wrong.

Mr. ROBINSON. No, not right or wrong; but we must recognize some kind of leadership, and the mistake of the Senator from Louisiana is in refusing to recognize the greatest leadership the United States has ever had in time of distress, the leadership of President Roosevelt.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I prefer to proceed with my own speech for a little while, and let the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Louisiana take their own time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield, or not?

Mr. DICKINSON. I will yield once more.

Mr. LONG. Every time we have a President taking us on the road to destruction there has always been a loud proclaimer telling us that he is a great leader, but the trouble is that these blind guides have led us into the chasm, and I refuse to go along and commit suicide with them. I am going to stop somewhere back a little bit before I go into the chasm.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I prefer not to yield again.

There is further interest in the amount of processing tax that is being paid:

	July 1, 1933–July 1, 1934	July 1, 1934–Mar. 1, 1935	Total
Hogs	$77,034,611.24	$132,987,938.07	$210,022,549.31
Cotton	144,767,232.64	65,507,924.37	210,275,157.01
Wheat	117,621,174.82	84,609,627.22	202,230,802.04
Field corn	4,495,193.74	4,693,312.48	9,189,506.22
Paper and jute	9,244,830.78	2,428,629.84	11,673,460.62
Peanuts		1,305,112.42	1,305,112.42
Sugar cane and sugar beets	170,416.37	43,052,552.43	43,222,968.80
Tobacco	18,088,426.05	21,641,096.16	39,729,522.21
Total	371,422,885.64	356,226,192.99	727,649,078.63

Upon summarizing these figures it is noted that on cotton a large amount of the tax was paid on goods on the shelf and cotton supplies on hand. The same is true with reference to wheat and flour on hand. For this reason, when we take the normal period from July 1, 1934, to March 1, 1935, we find that the processing tax paid on hogs and corn is 38½ percent of the total processing tax paid on all commodities. In other words, it would seem that hogs and sugar pro rata are paying a large percentage of the processing tax.

For the month of January we find that the processing tax on hogs amounted to $22,447,172.18; on cotton, $9,135,682.07; the total processing tax for the month on all commodities, $50,673,168.24. Therefore the processing tax on hogs amounted to 44½ percent of the total processing tax paid in January.

In addition to this an examination should be made of the benefits paid under the A. A. A. According to the Southern Agriculturist's April issue, we find that the benefit payments are as follows (accumulative total from May 12, 1933, to Mar. 7, 1935):

	Cotton	Tobacco	Corn-hog	Sugar
1933 program	$112,739,209	$2,056,618
1934 program	110,536,103	17,094,004	$216,783,913	$5,323,911
Cotton options	12,224,694
Cotton pool	48,712,775
Cert. sales	9,999,164
Total	294,211,945	19,150,622	216,783,913	5,323,911

In addition to this, attention should be given to the fact that already the adjustment program on rice has failed. The allotment acreage to the States has brought a surplus of rice rather than a scarcity, and we are now by legislation authorizing to be paid out of the Federal Treasury $2,250,000 as a subsidy to the rice producers.

The A. A. A. program has also failed as far as cotton is concerned. The George amendment authorizes the payment of allotment benefits on cotton, which last year amounted to $110,536,103, to be paid out of relief funds. This amendment is now in conference, but apparently agreed upon, and will remain in the bill. If all allotment benefits under the A. A. A. are to be paid out of relief funds, we probably should increase the amount. At the present time this appropriation of $4,880,000,000 is the largest appropriation ever made by a legislative body in history.

With reference to the wheat situation, the drought has brought about a condition wherein acreage reduction is to be ignored and the full acreage is to be planted, but the allotment benefits are to be paid to the wheat producer anyway. This is an indirect subsidy to the wheat producer out of the Public Treasury.

What I am suggesting is that this shows the condition into which we are gradually drifting in the case of every one of these items, and the only item that is still in line, paying every day, is the item of the hog products of this country.

The cotton men are going to be taken care of out of the relief funds. The wheat men are not going to be asked to reduce their acreage, but are going to receive benefits. The rice producer is already allowed a cent a pound as a subsidy out of the Federal Treasury. The hog producer is the only one who is still paying, with the price of hogs going up and with the consumption of his products going down.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If we are to continue to expand the policy of substituting direct payments from the Treasury for processing taxes, is there any rule of American justice or equity which would permit processing taxes to be continuingly collected on any commodity?

Mr. DICKINSON. Absolutely none.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And if we are to turn to the Treasury in one aspect, do we not confront the ultimate necessity of turning to the Treasury for all these things?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is the conclusion I reach, and there is no other conclusion that can be reached, because if we draw on the Federal taxpayer for one item of benefit, we ought to draw on him for all items of benefit.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BILBO in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. The Senator said, I believe, that the hog industry pays 38 percent of all the processing taxes paid.

Mr. DICKINSON. Thirty-eight and a half percent.

Mr. STEIWER. Does the Senator from Iowa propose to discuss the proportion of that tax which is paid ultimately by the consumer and the proportion paid by the industry?

Mr. DICKINSON. I have never been able to obtain any definite information along that line.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Do Senators on the other side assume that we should not like to hear what is going on over there? We cannot hear what is being said in this private conference.

Mr. STEIWER. I was merely propounding a question, and I was hoping the Senators on the other side could hear the answer which the Senator from Iowa made.

Mr. CONNALLY. If it is a matter of sufficient importance to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I think we ought to know something about what is being said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. STEIWER. I was asking whether any information has been provided upon which Congress could reach a conclusion concerning the ultimate tax burden, and the proportion that is paid by the consumer and the proportion paid by the hog-growing industry.

Mr. DICKINSON. There are various estimates of the percentage. I think the sentiment that prevails among the hog producers is that between 75 and 80 percent of the processing tax is paid by the producers of hogs, and that probably from 25 to 30 percent is paid by the consumers.

Mr. STEIWER. I read in a newspaper this morning that food prices had advanced, as I recall the figures, 7½ percent since this time last year, and approximately 34 percent since a similar period 2 years ago. After talking with those who purchase the products I am quite sure they feel that they themselves are paying the greater share of this tax. I understand the Senator to say that the hog growers feel that they are paying about 75 percent of it. In the face of a great increase in the price of the commodity, is there justification for the belief that the grower pays this tax, or is it possible that both the grower and the consumer are contributing and that somebody else is taking the benefit?

Mr. DICKINSON. I think there is no question but that both are contributing to the processing tax. I do not believe there is any yardstick by which to measure accurately the relative proportions.

I think originally the producer paid more than he is now paying, because as this matter has gradually been adjusted more of the tax has been reflected in the price charged the consumer. I think for that reason we find both a decline in the price paid the producer, and a tremendous advance in the price paid by the consumer.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to ask the Senator what was the price of hogs before the processing tax was applied?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not know just exactly when it was applied. Hogs went up in the spring of 1933, and the processing tax was applied late in the summer of 1933, I believe. Hogs did not increase in price materially until the fall of 1933, after the drought.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it not a fact that the price was about 2 cents a pound?

Mr. DICKINSON. The price was 2 cents a pound in 1932, and in the spring of 1933 it was low, but the price of hogs went up during the summer.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the price now?

Mr. DICKINSON. It is about 7, 8, or 9 cents a pound, depending on the location.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator stated that a certain part of the processing tax was taken from the producer.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it not a fact that all the processing tax goes back to the producer by way of benefit payments?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no. A great part of our hog benefits is going to the cotton men.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, I deny that absolutely.

Mr. DICKINSON. I gave the Senator the figures to show it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator gave me no figures showing that any processing tax on hogs ever went to cotton producers.

Mr. DICKINSON. I showed the Senator that the hog industry is paying 38½ percent of the processing tax, and to date the cotton men have gotten $74,000,000 more than the hog producers have gotten.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senator knows that figures can be made to lie. The Senator ought to know, whether he does or not, that no tax goes to the cotton producer except the tax collected as processing tax on cotton, and that no part of any hog-processing tax or any other processing tax goes directly or indirectly to the cotton program. Does not the Senator know that to be true?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, Mr. President; it is not true.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, Mr. President, the Senator is ignorant of the conditions.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me suggest that, if that statement is true, the whole law is unconstitutional, because a tax which goes into the Federal Treasury cannot be earmarked. Anyone who is a student of constitutional government knows that to be so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is not a question of constitutional government. It is a question of the use of funds in the judgment and the discretion of the administrative officer; and I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that if he will inquire he will find that no part of any processing tax on any commodity is used for application to the cotton program except the cotton-processing tax.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me ask the Senator from Alabama a question. The cotton producers paid in $210,000,000 and they have received $294,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They have collected it.

Mr. DICKINSON. No; they have not collected it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; they have.

Mr. DICKINSON. They have already received the benefits. The benefits have been paid out to them, and they have not been collected, according to the figures of receipts up to the 1st of March. Now, if they get only the benefits paid on cotton, where did they get the other seventy-five or eighty-five million dollars?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will ask the Senator from Iowa where the producers got the first $35,000,000 used in the payment on hogs?

Mr. DICKINSON. There was an advancement made.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, yes. The other was an advancement also.

Mr. DICKINSON. There is no question about the fact that that was an advancement, but since that time that advancement has been taken care of and the hog producer has paid in about $20,000,000 more than he has received.

The Senator from Alabama had better get acquainted with the figures before he starts to argue the question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I assert—and I challenge the Senator to follow up the assertion—that no part of any processing tax on hogs has been used, either in payment of benefits to cotton producers or for any other purpose.

Mr. DICKINSON. There is no segregation of the money in the Treasury so far as a commodity is concerned. All we have is an indirect and indefinite suggestion of the Administration that they are going to pay the benefits out only as they collect them; but they have paid them out in greater amounts than they have collected, and I want to suggest to the Senator that there has been a great deal of money collected by way of processing tax on sugar, some $43,000,000, and only a very limited percentage of it paid out.

I was just going to challenge the statement of Mr. Edward O'Neil, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, in which he says:

> The processing feature of the Adjustment Act is a device to make the adjustment program on basic commodities self-supporting. Under the plan each commodity pays its own way.

But it does not pay its own way. It has not paid its own way. That is the reason why we are finding this effort on the part of various commodities to be relieved of the payment of the processing tax.

Let me suggest that in the Agricultural Adjustment Act, section 9, it is provided that—

> When the Secretary of Agriculture determines that rental or benefit payments are to be made with respect to any basic agricultural commodity, he shall proclaim such determination, and a processing tax shall be in effect with respect to such commodity from the beginning of the marketing year therefor next following the date of such proclamation. * * *

Such rate shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture.

I suggest here is a blanket authority which has been written into this law without many people knowing what was in the law. First, subsection (a) of section 12 provides that there is to be appropriated $100,000,000. Subsection (b) provides—listen to this—

In addition to the foregoing, the proceeds derived from all taxes imposed under this title are hereby appropriated to be available to the Secretary of Agriculture for expansion of markets and removal of surplus agricultural products and the following purposes under part 2 of this title.

It does not segregate the tax. That is the very thing I am complaining about. There is no segregation of the tax under the law, but there is a blanket authority that these taxes are to be paid into a revolving fund, disbursed pretty nearly at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, and there is no limitation as to the amount which he can disburse to any commodity.

I think the processing tax is responsible for a great deal of the distress which is now prevalent in agriculture. It is true that we have had higher prices in the case of one or two commodities, not brought about by a processing tax, but brought about by the drought in the Midwest, the most serious ever suffered by that section.

In order further to amplify what I am saying I ask to insert in the RECORD as part of my remarks an editorial from the Chicago Tribune entitled "Farm Relief, New Style."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune]

FARM RELIEF, NEW STYLE

The $5,000,000,000 slush fund is to be used in part to pay bounties to farmers. This use of the money by the President is intended to obviate the collection of processing taxes.

Students of political science may find in this authorization a lesson that is often neglected in the classrooms. The lesson is this: When a political solution is devised for an economic problem, the result is generally disappointing. New experiments are undertaken. Progress is from bad to worse. The process is one of economic and moral deterioration.

The Hoover administration produced the Farm Board with half a million dollars to spend. The money was used to peg agricultural prices above the market. The result was lessened consumption and increased production. Supply was stimulated and demand discouraged. The accumulation of huge surpluses, unsalable at the Government's price, weighed upon the markets. Under this weight the scheme collapsed.

At this point the Roosevelt tinkering began. The "new dealers" introduced the processing tax. It was to be collected from consumers and redistributed to those farmers who agreed to reduce their output, a reward for doing what in their hearts they knew to be wrong. The reduction in acreage was supposed to prevent the piling up of surpluses, but it hasn't worked out as expected. Cotton offers a clear illustration. The processing tax has served to reduce consumption, and this effect has been aggravated by the Government's cotton loans, which have pegged the price of spot cotton at 12 cents. Foreign and domestic consumption of American cotton has fallen off by several million bales. Once more a political solution of an economic problem is failing disastrously.

And once more, of course, the politicians are trying to patch up their perpetual-motion machine with string and hairpins. Taxing the consumers did not work. Congress now proposes to tax the unborn to provide the bounty. The Government will have to borrow every penny of the $5,000,000,000 slush fund, and that money will not be repaid for decades. It is to be distributed, however, in the form of a bounty to farmers, particularly to the wealthier landowning farmers.

Anyone with economic and political intelligence can confidently forecast that this scheme will not work either. The more successful it seems to be at the start, the more certain will be its eventual failure, because there will be continued pressure to extend the benefits to additional classes of producers and to increase the amount of the hand-out. What the new scheme promises is a steadily rising cost of living, a steady increase in taxation, the creation of privileged and unprivileged classes, and the wholesale degradation of the political life of the country.

Mr. DICKINSON. I desire to refer to one other matter, and that is with reference to the dairy industry. Mr. W. A. Wentworth, who is secretary of the dairy industry committee, made a statement which appeared a few days ago in the press, and one of the reasons for my remark is that I thought we ought to be in the position soon where we should have an Executive order, or an order of the Secretary, or of someone else to relieve the country of this whole legislative machinery. Secretary Wentworth said:

The members of this industry throughout the country would prefer to return to the old days of free competition than to have the present complicated and indefensible condition persist.

Of the conditions which have arisen he said:

Violations of the marketing agreements are wide-spread.

Chiseling and racketeering are common.

Producers of milk are selling their product at less than the prices fixed in the agreements. The same is true of distributors.

These licenses are supposed to have the effect and morality of law, but A. A. A. knows they are being violated on every hand and has made only sporadic and ineffectual attempts to enforce them.

Chiselers openly defy the A. A. A. A contract to supply milk to a veterans' hospital in Chicago was let only recently to a confessed violator of the Chicago license who openly admitted he was paying milk producers less than the fixed price. Of course, his bid was low, and the branch of the Government that gave him the contract abetted the violation of a law which another branch of the Government makes feeble attempts to enforce.

This is only one of thousands of cases which regularly occur to make the milk-license system a common joke, a source of law violation, a temptation to the repudiation of contract, and an invitation to disrespect of all law.

Further quoting Mr. Wentworth:

In view of all these complications, and in view of the unreasonableness of the law, so many violations of the law have come to the attention of A. A. A. that they would be helpless to prosecute them.

That shows the chaos into which we are drifting.

I desire to make reference to a statement which was made recently with respect to the imports of agricultural products which are now coming into the United States. I read from a letter, coming from the State of Kentucky, in which the writer says:

MY DEAR SENATOR: We are in touch with grain dealers, milling interests, farm organizations, and railroads in some nine Central and Southern States, and we will deeply appreciate it if you will bring to the attention of the Senate a few facts and opinions we have encountered everywhere throughout this territory.

Billions of invested capital have been set up in these States on the basis of certain usual and normal conditions, and when these conditions are allowed to be changed almost overnight, terrible hardships result to almost every line of business.

Imports of foreign grains and feedstuffs are literally flooding our eastern and southern ports. Argentina is the main offender, and as that country buys little or nothing from the United States in return, it is hard to see why she is allowed to come in over our low-tariff walls to the detriment of so many business organizations here.

One branch of the Government sets out by means of crop restrictions to raise prices to the farmer, while another branch allows them to be depressed by cheap foreign imports.

The normal course of events is for corn, oats, wheat, etc., to flow from our great grain belts down through the Southern and Eastern States. Normally, the railroads would be hauling thousands of tons of grain in this direction, but that traffic is almost entirely eliminated at present. The eastern and southern grain markets have been taken over by Argentine and others. Result, an enormous traffic loss to the railroads.

Take the case of our Indiana and Illinois farmers—the same for the farmers farther west—his normal market is eventually to the great centers of dense population in the East, and also down through the South; but the Argentine farmers are allowed to put their grain and feedstuffs into our ports at 10 cents per bushel less than our midwestern farmer can supply those markets at his present prices. Farm prices cannot hold up long under a situation like this. It does not do the farmer any good to raise his prices if you take away his markets.

Furthermore, imagine the stimulus this situation is to the South American farmer. With millions of acres of virgin soil and cheap labor at his disposal, and such profits to be had by exporting to the United States, will he not be encouraged to raise enormous surpluses in future years with which to further harass our farmers?

As for the grain dealers and milling interests in the Middle West and parts of the South, such a situation will spell utter ruin for them if it is allowed to continue long. Take our own case, for instance: Normally, at this time of the year, we should be turning over $150,000 to $200,000 per month, of which we would be paying the railroads between $25,000 and $50,000 for hauling our corn, oats, and wheat down through the South and East. Our actual turn-over for the month of February 1935 was 25 percent of normal. You will find other grain and milling interests throughout the Middle West working in about the same ratio. Result, billions of dollars of invested capital are facing utter annihilation.

There should be at least a 50-percent increase in the tariffs on grain and feedstuffs. Such a tariff would go a long way toward restoring prosperity to the farmers all over the United States, and would greatly aid the railroads and the grain and milling interests.

I also submit a postal card from Long Beach, Calif., signed by Fred Lindley and written to a friend in Iowa. The card is dated March 11, 1935, and the writer says:

Since I have been here there have been 6,000,000 bushels of Argentine corn unloaded. Sure a lot of encouragement for an Iowa farmer to lay his land idle. I wish some of those Democrats could spend a few days on these docks. I believe they would walk off Republican and be forever more for a protective tariff. It's a crime.

FRED LINDLEY.

In addition, I desire to have inserted in the RECORD a quotation from the Logan Observer, dated March 28, 1935, entitled "Holding Iowa Down."

There being no objection, the quotation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Logan Observer of Mar. 28, 1935]

HOLDING IOWA DOWN

But, under regimentation, plow-under, and the tender supervision of the A. A. A., Iowa corn growers are permitted to grow but a certain amount of corn. There must be no overproduction. That would destroy the market for the Argentine corn grower, and it might put him and his help on relief rolls, which would not do. Iowa farmers must not grow and sell any 12,880,000 bushels of corn for $10,304,000 in competition with South American countries, and apparently A. A. A. "brain trusters" feel that Iowa farm hands and tenant farmers are better off in town, looking for jobs and being forced to accept relief.

Market reports of Monday, March 25, stated: "The Government reported the arrival of about 590,000 bushels of Argentine corn at Galveston, 415,000 bushels at San Francisco, and 183,000 bushels at Seattle during the past week." That, of course, is in addition to the 12,880,000 bushels previously reported.

WHEAT FROM CANADA

On the same date market reports said: "It is assumed that this addition to the stocks (of wheat) in Chicago is due to the unloading of a cargo of low-grade wheat from Canada, which cannot be used for human purposes, only for feeding to animals."

Switching over to hogs and their byproducts, a recent market comment stated: "Exports of lard from the Atlantic and Gulf ports for the period from November 1, 1934, to March 9, 1935, declined 90,866,343 pounds, compared to the same period of a year ago. Total for this year is 60,843,112 pounds against 151,709,455 pounds a year ago."

As we have previously stated, "It just don't make sense."

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By Frank R. Kent

THEY CAN'T LET GO

WASHINGTON, April 1.

But for the fact that its representatives "cover up" better and it has a more agile and aggressive publicity department, it would long ago have been discovered that the A. A. A., so far as confusion is concerned, is little better off than the N. R. A.

Solemnly grappling with problems far too big for human hands, its leadership is often uncertain, sometimes absurd. One way or another, it is in hot water most of the time, and the resentment against it is much more intense than generally grasped. At the moment it is under particularly severe fire from the South, where there is a deepening conviction that the new-deal economics are not so good for that section. Assailing Secretary Wallace and his cotton policy an angry demand is voiced through southern Senators for a remission of the processing tax on cotton, which, it is contended, increases the cost to the point where consumer demand declines, goods cannot be sold, profits vanish, and markets disappear.

It is no exaggeration to say that there is deep apprehension among the cotton Senators, some of whom are in an exceedingly hostile frame of mind toward the A. A. A. generally, and Mr. Wallace particularly. Continuation of the processing tax is the real issue. There are Senators who heatedly insist it must be removed and the bonuses paid the cotton farmer come either out of relief funds or from some other Treasury source. Mr. Wallace firmly contends that the processing tax on the manufactured goods is essential to the scheme and it cannot safely be lifted.

And, of course, Mr. Wallace is right—from his angle. Elimination of the processing tax would bring the whole A. A. A. structure trembling to the ground. Unless the entire scheme of giving subsidies to the farmers is to be abandoned it can't be dropped. Without the processing tax the whole business becomes a direct burden on the Treasury, increasing the deficit enormously. Perhaps it will come to that in the end. Certainly there is no prospect of stopping the bonuses. Mr. Wallace has begun to pay them now for not reducing crops, as well as reducing them. It is a question of how long he can hold on to his processing taxes. The drive has begun to put an end to that and pay the farmers directly out of the Treasury—in brief, put them on the dole. It has already started in the South. Should the processing tax be broken down there the whole A. A. A. becomes hopelessly lopsided and almost the last vestige of orderly financing within the new deal would disappear.

As it is, the processing taxes do not cover the total expenses of the A. A. A.—not by a long shot. That was the theory, but it has not worked out. The only way by which it can be maintained that the A. A. A. is a self-sustaining proposition is by using the same system of calculation used by the pious Mr. Farley in obtaining his post-office "surplus." Here are the Treasury figures: In the fiscal year from July 1, 1934, to March 19, 1935, the Government collected in processing taxes $496,729,206.66. In that time $496,220,773.57 was paid out in benefits to farmers, leaving a balance of $508,433.09. However, under the emergency budget, it appears that the A. A. A. has paid out $127,495,861.79 additional. This was the overhead cost of the organization.

Thus it is clear the A. A. A. has cost $126,987,428.70 so far this year more than the processing taxes have produced. Theoretically, the processing taxes take care of all the costs. Actually, they do nothing of the sort. However, if they were repealed, it is easy to realize how very much more Mr. Roosevelt's Budget would be thrown out of whack. It would make the pretense of keeping the running expenses of the Government under control much thinner than now. Hence, it is plain why Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Wallace resist pressure from Southern Senators for a remission of the tax in that section.

The situation is full of unhappiness for everybody concerned. The cotton manufacturer and the cotton planter see the crop and the industry upon which the life of the South so largely depends in a most precarious condition. The A. A. A. knows its policy is not bringing results, but has no alternative but to go ahead. The Members of Congress from the cotton States are seething with feeling over what they allege is failure to understand the essentials of the situation. The administration has the bull by the tail and can't let go. And this was the experiment concerning which, when first launched 2 years ago, Mr. Roosevelt so winningly said to the people, "My friends, if after a fair trial satisfactory results are not achieved I shall be the first to inform you."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I regret the political necessity which requires that the Senator from Iowa should delay the enactment of imperatively necessary legislation.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. In addition to the matter I have asked to have printed in the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an article by Frank R. Kent in the Baltimore Sun of April 2 under the heading "They Can't Let Go."

Mr. CONNALLY. What is the title?

Mr. DICKINSON. "They Can't Let Go." It has to do with the A. A. A.

Mr. CONNALLY. One difference between the article which the Senator is now asking to insert in the RECORD entitled "They Can't Let Go" and the Senator from Iowa is that the Senator and his administration could not "get to going", they never could start the industrial machinery again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the insertion of the article referred to by the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(The article appears at the conclusion of Mr. DICKINSON's remarks as exhibit A.)

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not desire to consume much time of the Senate, because it is not necessary to do so. The Senator from Iowa was the keynote speaker at Chicago at the Republican National Convention in Chicago, if I remember correctly, in 1932. He begged America to reelect his regime.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I wish to suggest to the Senator that if we had elected that regime we would have been at least 2 years ahead of where we are now.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; that is true——

Mr. DICKINSON. Because we are getting deeper and deeper into debt, and the Senator and his party do not know where they are going.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is absolutely correct; we would have been 2 years ahead of where we are now; but we would have been going in another direction—backward instead of forward.

Mr. DICKINSON. If the present administration can go into debt any faster or any deeper or any more promiscuously than it is doing now, can adopt any more silly panaceas than they are attempting to carry out, and can affect any more businesses and ruin more individual investors in every line of endeavor, whether banking, public utilities, industry, farming, and what not, I do not know what they can do, and I should like to have an explanation from the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, the Senator does not know what to do. He did not know what to do in 1932, and his President did not know what to do, and his administration did not know what to do.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment. The Senator made his speech, and I should like to say a few words before he interrupts me again.

Mr. DICKINSON. I wish to suggest that the Senator and his party do not know what to do, and they are doing the wrong thing.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course I yield to the Senator; I am always glad to yield to the Senator, because he usually answers his own argument more effectively than can anybody else. The Senator wants to go back to the good old days; he wants to go back to the good old days of 2-cent hogs. He comes from a great hog-producing State, and under the administration of his party agriculturists in Iowa were enjoying the marvelous blessing of selling their hogs for 2 cents a pound. Today those same Iowa farmers, if they have any hogs——

Mr. DICKINSON. That is the trouble; they have not any.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then it is the fault of the Iowa farmers if they have not any hogs.

Mr. DICKINSON. No; the Government took their hogs away from them and killed them.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator wants to be courteous, he will at least rise and ask that the Senator from Texas yield; but, with an arrogance for which his party is distinguished, an arrogance which he well illustrates, he remains in his seat, and, not in keeping with the traditions or the precedents of this body, in a contemptuous fashion, undertakes to interject his remarks into the remarks of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa wants to go back to the good old days of 2-cent hogs, when today the farmers of Iowa, his constituents, for whom he speaks, are getting $8.40 a hundred on the farm for their hogs. Let us go back to the good old days, the good old days of his administration. Now, let us see.

How about corn? It is necessary to raise corn in order to feed hogs in Iowa, and Iowa is supposed to raise more corn than any other State. What were the farmers of Iowa getting for their corn under the old regime? They were getting 8 cents a bushel; and the statesman from Iowa wants to go back to the glorious old days of 8-cent corn. What are the farmers today getting for corn? They are getting, I understand, 90 cents on the farm. The Senator from Iowa shakes his head. The New York newspapers yesterday carried the quotation of corn at 90 cents. The Senator from Iowa shakes his head. I do not know why he shakes his head except that he will not admit anything that is not in harmony with his own prejudiced and preconceived political opinions.

Now let us see about the claims of the Senator as to present conditions. I hold in my hand a number of newspaper clippings of some weeks ago. Some of them are from newspapers supporting the Senator's own party. Here is one from the New York Herald Tribune, for instance. The Senator ought to accept that as his political bible. I believe he read from the Chicago Tribune a while ago with approval. I quote from the New York Herald Tribune of February 15:

> Twenty-first monthly increase made by collections. Percentage of gain shown by 20 key stores reveals continuous improvement.

Then it goes on in detail and sets out the figures.

I quote from the Philadelphia Inquirer:

> Trade barometer hits peak of year as gains continue. Business index climbs to 74.3, gain of 17.2 over same week last year.

Income-tax returns by the Government's own figures show that the income of the American people, not some of them, but all of them, not each individual but the whole of the American people, for 1934 was much larger than their income for 1933. The investigation before the Senate Finance Committee now in session has disclosed that the income of corporations and other business concerns all over the Nation has vastly increased during 1934 as compared to 1933. More men are working at better wages and under better conditions.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the recruit from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the Senator remember the testimony before the Finance Committee showing that under the code rubber hose has increased in price from 46 cents to 84 cents? I should like to inquire whether he thinks that has had any result upon the income of the corporations engaged in that line of activity.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course it has. The Senator knows that to be so. He asks a question the answer to which is obvious. I do not approve any increase in price, under the N. R. A. or out of the N. R. A., if it is made in order to exploit the public; but I was not speaking of isolated cases, and I so stated. I said that the whole mass of American business has increased in 1934 over 1933, as shown by the Government's reports in the payments of dividends and income. Does the Senator deny that?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; but my supposition is that most of it comes out of the Federal Treasury; and I wonder if the Senator agrees with that?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator's supposition. That is what the Senator deals in. I am dealing in facts; I am dealing in figures; I am dealing in Government statistics; and the Senator from Delaware admits that he is dealing with his supposition.

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, no; I also am dealing with Government figures; they are Treasury figures; and that is what worries me, the fact that they are Treasury figures, and the fact that the national debt has been increased in the neighborhood of from twelve to fourteen billion dollars during the last 2 years. I should think that vast sum of money being spent in this country ought to show some results somewhere to somebody.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was making some remarks in reply to the Senator from Iowa, and the Senator from Delaware, without knowing anything about what the controversy was, but, being like a charger every ready to bolt forward into the fray, rushes in and injects foreign matter.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am always glad to hear the Senator's remarks, as they cause me to inquire about some of the facts.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is usually very helpful to have the Senator from Delaware interrupt, because the Senator from Texas is always glad to impart information to those who are in need of it.

Mr. President, remaining in his seat, the Senator from Iowa a little while ago, when the Senator from Texas made a statement about the price of corn, shook his head. Let us see what the report is. The New York Herald Tribune, his own journal, of Friday, April 5, today, quotes corn, no. 2 yellow, New York, Thursday, $1.02 a bushel; Wednesday, 99.78 cents a bushel; a year ago, 63½ cents a bushel. Does the Senator from Iowa deny those figures?

The Senator from Iowa stated that in the case of cotton and other farm products the processing tax which was levied on hogs was used to pay benefits to the cotton farmer. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] challenged that statement, and I desire to reinforce that challenge. Since his own statement here on the floor, the Senator from Alabama has communicated with the Department of Agriculture, and has been advised that he was correct in his statement that the processing tax on cotton goes to pay the benefits to cotton growers, and that the processing tax on hogs goes to pay the benefits to the producers of hogs.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have just been furnished by the Department of Agriculture the figures relating to hogs. I find that up to February 28 the tax collected was $219,212,000, while the benefit payments to farmers were $247,656,076.40. Those are the figures as to the amounts collected and paid out up to yesterday.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. The Senator from Alabama, with the information which he has secured, illustrates the accuracy with which the Senator from Iowa makes statements on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. The only difference is that the Senator is including the last hog payments sent out since March 1, and I gave the figures only up to March 1. I quoted them from the Southern Agriculturist.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did the Senator know that when he made the statement?

Mr. DICKINSON. I gave the date of the figures. I did not know what the last statement showed.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator knew, when he made the statement, that he was quoting figures only up to March 1. He knew that since that time additional benefits had been paid.

Mr. DICKINSON. No; I did not know the additional benefits which had been paid, but I do know they were paid and the Senator has the figures up to date.

Mr. CONNALLY. When did the Senator learn that?

Mr. DICKINSON. The press has stated that hog payments are being made. What the Senator from Texas desires to insinuate is that the Senator from Iowa is not honest.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no; I do not think the Senator from Iowa is dishonest. Dishonesty involves conscious wrongdoing. Dishonesty involves a man willfully doing something. I think the Senator from Iowa either does not know or does not give a continental. That is what I think. [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. Does the Senator from Texas challenge the figures up to March 1?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I am not talking about March 1. I am talking about today. If the Senator from Iowa wanted to be fair, he would speak as of today when he makes his speech. I am not dealing with ancient history. I am not going back to peruse the pages of Gibbons. I am talking about today.

The Senator from Iowa made the statement on the floor of the Senate that part of the money collected as the processing tax on hogs went to pay benefits to the producers of cotton. That is what he said. Let us see if that is correct. The figures show that the total amount collected on hogs was $219,212,000. The Senator from Iowa said part of that went to pay benefits to the producers of cotton. Did it? On the other hand, not only every dollar of the $219,000,000 was paid out to the hog producers but there was paid to them in addition about $18,000,000 which was secured somewhere else than through the processing tax on hogs. There was not one copper cent, not one dime, that went from the hog-processing tax to the producers of cotton.

Mr. DICKINSON. What was the amount of benefits paid to the cotton producers in excess of the amount collected from the processing tax on cotton?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Alabama quoted those figures a while ago in reply to the Senator from Iowa, and I shall get them again for him if he desires. But that is not the important thing. The important thing is that the Senator from Iowa was making a statement which is not justified by the record and the facts, making it purely for political effect.

Mr. President, there is nothing President Roosevelt could do that would satisfy the Senator from Iowa, and I thank God there is not. He could not satisfy the Senator from Iowa, and no Democratic administration could possibly do it.

I know there are many now in the land criticizing and assailing the present administration. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] on yesterday adverted to a slanderous and scurrilous statement issued by the Chamber of Commerce of New York. It is that particular type of statement to which I refer. Why is it, Mr. President? In the face of continuing improvement, in the face of high dividends to business and to corporations, in the face of increased incomes to individuals, in the face of corn rising in price from 8 cents a bushel to 90 cents a bushel, in the face of hogs rising in price from 2 cents a pound to 10 cents a pound, in the face of cotton and wheat, wheat coming from the State of Iowa, rising rapidly in price and enhancing in value, we have now this barrage of criticism and attack upon the present administration.

I am glad the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] has returned to the Chamber. I am glad he came back to listen. The Senator from Delaware a moment ago attacked the administration because we are spending money and increasing the public debt. Yes; we are. Those of us on this side of the Chamber regret the necessity that has required it, but let me ask the Senator from Delaware where he was in those 4 years preceding 1932 when the public debt was increased under Mr. Hoover by more than $5,000,000,000 with no recompense whatever? We spent that $5,000,000,000 deficit under Mr. Hoover, with no rise in prices for commodities as a result. Instead, we continued on the toboggan slide down toward ruin and disaster.

We increased the public debt under Mr. Hoover by $5,000,000,000. Did the financial and business interests of the State of the Senator from Delaware thereby secure increased profits or greater security or a larger measure of prosperity? Senators know that instead of that $5,000,000,000 bringing about any such improvement or return of prosperity, the business institutions and the banks of the country shrank and shriveled in their resources, whereas their liabilities increased.

"Back to the good old days!" says the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON]. "Back to the good old days", when farm foreclosures in Iowa threatened the theretofore prosperous farmers of that great State with bankruptcy and with poverty! "Back to the good old days!" says the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], coming from a city which has within it great financial and great business enterprises. "Back to the good old days", when the doors of banking institutions all over the land were being slammed in the faces of their depositors and their customers, and when "just around the corner", instead of prosperity, waited the sinister figure of ruin and chaos. "Back to the good old days of free play of economic forces! Do not do anything; let the economic forces go on!"

Mr. President, on March 4, 1933, had we permitted those "good old days" to continue, had not the strong arm of government interfered, even the prophets who now sit on the other side of the Chamber and seek to affright our souls with stories of impending disaster, know in their hearts that liquidation and bankruptcy would have overwhelmed a large percentage of our people. I, too, believe in the free play of economic forces; but I believe in that play under normal and natural conditions and surroundings.

Those who sit on the other side of the aisle and their administrations through 12 long years had refused to permit economic forces to have their natural play. They had interfered with them by legislative processes, by the enactment of measures giving those particular interests privileges over and above those enjoyed by the great mass of the American people. Through their public policies they had fostered the loaning of many billions of dollars to foreign countries; and then, under the stimulation of a false security, we sold goods to Germany and to other European countries, and they paid for them with American money which they had borrowed.

Inevitably, that process could not go on. Then in 1929, 30, 31, 32 the economic crash came. It was artificially fostered; it was artificially generated; it was artificially modified; and if the Government had not interfered and artificially, if you please, sought to stay the ravages of the tidal wave of disaster which would have engulfed us, we should have been shattered and broken on the rocks of ruin; and Senators know it.

Now, however, the country is convalescent. The country is again feeling secure. Did you ever see a man who had been in the hospital, perhaps at the very point of death?

The flame of life was flickering feebly. For a long time he did not know whether he was going to pass on or was going to remain among us. Finally, the physician saves him. He begins to get strong. He knows he is going to recover; and then nothing on earth can please him. He complains of his doctor. He is mad at the nurse. He complains at his wife. Nothing suits him, because he knows he can make his own way out. He is safe. He is on solid ground.

That is the condition of Senators on the other side of the aisle today. Where were these strong voices in March 1933? Where was the Senator from Iowa? Of course, I know that nothing suited him, but we did not hear the Senator from Iowa denouncing Franklin D. Roosevelt and the Democratic administration in March or April 1933. If he spoke at all, it was with a wee small voice. He said nothing.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I voted against the Economy Act transferring power to the President, condemned the Democrats for lodging the power with him, and condemned him for asking for it, as will be shown by the RECORD of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well. Yes; the Senator voted against the Economy Act. He has been voting against economy acts ever since he has been in Congress, so far as I have ever heard; and that was one reason why there was a deficit of $5,000,000,000 under the Republican administration.

The Senator points out that he voted against the Economy Act. I did not talk about his votes. I am talking about that ringing oratorical voice of his. Where was it, denouncing the administration measures in behalf of agriculture? Where was this mighty champion who now dashes gallantly forth to assail the efforts of the administration in behalf of a suffering and dying country? He did not say anything about what was being undertaken. He was afraid to say anything about it; but now there is a lot of restlessness throughout the country, a lot of dissatisfaction because of this, that, and the other; and so the Senator from Iowa, encouraged by the disaffected, comes out to do battle.

Mr. President, there are those of us who are becoming somewhat impatient at these political tirades and gibes at the administration and the measures which Congress has enacted. I make no claim that all these measures are perfect. Of course they are not. The President of the United States is a big enough man and a sufficiently courageous man to admit that many of these measures were experimental. He has had the courage to say that when we find that they do not work, or that they are imperfect, we shall undertake to change or amend them, and we hope we shall succeed in doing so.

In a body so numerous as this, even on this side of the Chamber we are not always in agreement. I hope we never shall be, and I hope the other side will never agree with us, either, because, in the first place, if that were true it would prove that we were wrong, and, in the second place, it would prove that too much harmony, too much unity of thought, is always destructive of progress and development.

Mr. President, of course these measures are not all perfect; but where is the man or where is the woman, where is the Democrat, or where is the Republican anywhere in this land who will gainsay the fact that but for the leadership of the President, followed by the Congress, in March, 1933, we should have been plunged into horrors which even the imagination of the Senator from Iowa cannot adequately depict?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am always glad to yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the Senator name the measures which have not been successful?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Delaware will do that for me. I do not want to take any time in doing that which I can have the Senator from Delaware do for me.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator has said that these were important measures, and that the President is a great leader, and that he has done these great things which have not all been successful. I should like the Senator, before he finishes his address, to tell the country which of them have not been successful.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that I did not vote for all of them. The Senator from Texas, for instance, did not vote for the N. R. A.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the Senator from Texas mean that he did not follow this great leader in all the things he recommended in his effort to pull the country out of the depression?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; not in all. As I said a moment ago, we on this side of the Chamber do not always agree 100 percent. It is only under the leadership of a little group on the other side of the Chamber that there is harmony and unity; and that is because when any one of that little group desires to make a hostile, insinuating attack on the President of the United States there is, among that certain group, loud acclaim and complete unity of purpose and agreement in mind. Over here, we are not always in agreement. I said we were not, and I hope we never shall be. I hope this side at least will continue to exercise a sense of intellectual integrity and intellectual freedom.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senators on the other side do not all agree with the President, do they?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly not.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator constantly remarks about what is going on on this side of the Chamber in opposition to the administration's policies.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is not much going on over there, I admit.

Mr. HASTINGS. The other day I sat here for half a day and heard criticism over on the other side. I do not see why the Senator should complain about what this side has been saying.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not complaining. There is nothing that pleases me more than to have complaint from some on the other side of the Chamber. It confirms me in the rectitude of my own course.

Of course, there is not unity over here on everything; but there is unity on this side in that, taken as a whole, we are trying to follow our leader, and are trying to support those measures which will bring the country out of the disaster into which the Senator from Delaware and others so successfully led us.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, may I inquire whether Senators on the other side are not doing that at times against their own judgment?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas cannot speak in that respect for anyone except himself. The Senator from Texas has not hesitated on several occasions to vote contrary to the way in which the majority on this side voted, and contrary to what the President of the United States advocated. As to this program as a whole, however, the Senator from Texas is glad to state that he has supported it, and expects to continue to support it until we approach normal conditions and can modify these measures to suit the conditions then existing.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LONG. I have been absent from the Chamber. Has someone been attacking the party in my absence? [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Louisiana, of course, is astonished to know that anything has transpired when he was not present. If the Senator had been here and had been listening, he would have known that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] made an assault on a number of administration measures, in which he has the very enthusiastic cooperation of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator will pardon me, I bore the brunt of the party's defense here as against the attacks made by the Democrats all day yesterday. I bore the burden of defending the party against the attacks made by about five Senators; and I desire to compliment my able friend from Texas for taking up the cudgels for the party today.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I should like to state, for the benefit of the Senator from Louisiana, that the Senator from Iowa was attacking certain administration measures. I have been trying to ascertain from the Senator from Texas whether or not he agrees with the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I do not. If it will afford any satisfaction to the Senator from Delaware, I will state categorically that I do not agree with the Senator from Iowa; and if it will add anything further to his satisfaction, I will say that I do not agree with the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. I should like to know, at the same time, whether or not the Senator from Texas thinks that the measures which the Senator from Iowa criticized ought to remain on the statute books. That is what I am trying to ascertain.

Mr. CONNALLY. They ought to stay there for the present; yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Including the N. R. A.?

Mr. CONNALLY. I have stated to the Senator very categorically that I voted against the N. R. A. I did not understand that the Senator from Iowa criticized that in his attack. The Senator from Delaware was not here, and, like most absentees, he knows more about what transpired, after he gets here, than one who was here.

Mr. HASTINGS. I wondered whether the Senator from Texas had changed his mind about the N. R. A.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; he has not changed his mind.

Mr. HASTINGS. He is still against it?

Mr. CONNALLY. Against what?

Mr. HASTINGS. The N. R. A.

Mr. CONNALLY. I voted against it, and I have not changed my mind. I hope that answers the Senator.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. In just a moment. I myself want a little time. [Laughter.] I will yield to the Senator from Louisiana in a moment. I want to answer the Senator from Delaware.

There is a high degree of cooperation between the Senator from Delaware, the Senator from Iowa, and the Senator from Louisiana. They are all engaged in a common purpose, and that is to besmear and besmut the administration of President Roosevelt whenever and however they can.

What impelled the Senator from Texas to take the floor was principally the statement of the Senator from Iowa that the hog-processing tax had gone to the cotton farmer in benefit payments. I have, I hope, successfully dispelled and dissipated that piece of misinformation, when I have said that hog producers had received $247,000,000 in benefits, and the processing tax has been only $219,000,000, showing that the hog producers not only got all of the processing tax but something out of the Treasury too, of which the Senator from Delaware is complaining. The hog producers got $247,000,000 in benefits, and there were collected on the hogs themselves $219,000,000.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I just wanted to point out the very embarrassing position in which I am placed here as a party leader. The Senator from Delaware rises and strikes a note of harmony with the Senator from Texas in criticizing the N. R. A. That is where a faithful Democrat finds himself at a loss. There is a community of interest here by which constantly some of our prominent Democratic Senators are joining with the Senator from Delaware in attacking our party. That is why we cannot defend the party until we get wise and have a consistent understanding on this side.

Mr. CONNALLY. If my party ever gets to the point where it has to depend upon the Senator from Louisiana for its defense, God save it [laughter]; for I know from his conduct here that he has no sympathy with the present administration, and he gives aid and comfort to the Senator from Iowa and to the Senator from Delaware.

So far as the attitude of the Senator from Texas on the N. R. A. is concerned, it is nothing new. He voted against it when the proposed legislation was before us. It took more independence to vote against it then than it would now when there are so many who are attacking it. The Senator from Texas is not secretly pursuing one course and publicly trying to pursue another course.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator has just stated that the Senator from Louisiana has been lending aid and comfort to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. Does the Senator not think that the keynoter of the last Republican National Convention and the manager of the last Republican Presidential campaign need aid and comfort?

Mr. CONNALLY. They do, indeed; and they seem willing to take it from whatever source it comes.

Mr. LONG. Well, Mr. President, who was the keynoter of the Democratic convention?

Mr. CONNALLY. The senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. LONG. For the Senator's information, the first vote was taken over HUEY LONG.

Mr. CONNALLY. How is that?

Mr. LONG. For the Senator's information, the first vote was taken over the Louisiana delegation in that convention.

Mr. CONNALLY. So far as I know, that is correct.

Mr. LONG. And there were 20 more votes for us than our crowd got for Walsh for chairman.

Mr. CONNALLY. What that has to do with the question before us I cannot imagine.

Mr. LONG. The point I wish to make is simply that the Democrats will have to stand for it when they are reminded by Republicans that we are leaving the party principles. We have, as the Senator from Texas pointed out, made the chief cornerstone of the Democratic administration an offensive N. R. A., which has practically disrupted such a thing as democratic or constitutional government in the United States. The Senator from Texas says so.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas said what? [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. I will repeat.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to understand the Senator.

Mr. LONG. I stated that we have made as the cornerstone of the Democratic Party's so-called "recovery program" not the Democratic Party but the "new-deal party"—let us call it that so that we will be understood—the "new-deal party" has made as its program and its cornerstone an N. R. A. which practically sets aside direct democratic or constitutional government; and I take it that the Senator from Texas feels just as the Senator from Delaware feels in regard to that, and as the Senator from Iowa feels, and as the Senator from Louisiana feels about it. We are all in harmony on that. We ought to stand for the country first, and get rid of the N. R. A.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to advert to a little clipping which I hold in my hand. I tried to point out a little while ago that with business improving, according to Government statistics; with bank deposits higher than for years; with incomes increasing gradually and significantly; with practically every branch of American business and life and commerce on the upgrade—we are faced with this barrage of attack and insinuation.

I wish to quote an eminent American, Mr. Will Rogers, in one of his statements from New York:

> Here is New York City, where all the money in the world is, and where every guy with a dollar is doing better than he was a year ago. "Say, what's this country coming to? I tell you this income-tax is terrible." "My business is picking up every day, but I am scared." "I am doing better than I have since 1929, but when are we going to get back to the good old days?" Well, the good old days with most of us was when we didn't earn enough to pay an income tax.

Mr. President, of course, when many citizens were broke they did not pay any income tax at all, and it did not bother them. Now, with their incomes increasing, they have to pay income taxes, not on paper, but on incomes, on profits—and, of course, they are complaining at the income tax. When the banks were about to fail and their doors were about to be slammed in their customers' faces, they were crying out, "Come and help us." Now that they have been rescued, they want the Government to take its hands off.

This reminds me of an occurrence some years ago in my State. An old fellow was out in the middle of the river about to drown. He had gone down for the third time, when he saw some persons standing on the bank, and he appealed to them, "Come save me! Come save me!" One of those on the bank swam out to the middle of the stream, grabbed the drowning man by the hair, and pulled him out to the bank. He did not wait until he got to shore but, when he got to the point near the shore where he could feel firm ground under his feet, he sort of said to himself, "I can make my own way out now." So he turned to his rescuer and said, "What in the name of common sense did you want to be so rough with me out in the middle of the stream for? You like to have pulled my hair out and you handled me rough. Take your hands off. Let me alone." Then he waded on out to the shore.

This illustrates what is the matter with the Senators on the other side of the Chamber, and what is the matter with most of those who are complaining in the United States now. In 1933, 1932, and 1931, those dark, those dreary, those heart-breaking days and years when we were in the midst of ruin and depression, they were willing to have anyone come and save them. They were willing to have anyone rescue them. In 1932 the American people cried out to Roosevelt to come and save them, to "Come and keep us from drowning", and he responded.

In March 1933, with chaos all about him, with ruin and wreckage scattered all over the landscape, with a picture as dark and forbidding and apparently as hopeless as any which ever faced a political leader, President Roosevelt had the courage, he had the ability, he had the daring, and he had the integrity of purpose to go forward with a program which he himself said might not be successful in every particular; but at least he had a program, he had a plan, he had a campaign mapped out for himself, and we have been following his leadership.

And now that the American people are close to the shore, now that they feel firm ground under their feet, now that they feel they can get back to prosperity without any Government help, now that the banks no longer need to have the Government come to their help, the discontented ones say, "Turn me loose, let me go." The insurance companies are no longer threatened with bankruptcy, so they are willing for the Government to take its hands off. The income taxpayer several years ago had no income tax to pay because he had no income. Now that he has an income he says, "Cut down the tax or take it off."

The people out in Iowa were getting 2 cents for their hogs. Now they are getting $8.40 a hundred. They were getting 8 cents a bushel for corn, and now they are getting nearly a dollar. So the farmers represented by the Senator from Iowa—I do not think the farmers do, but the Senator representing the farmers would say, "Why, we can get along all right now. We are getting 90 cents for corn and we are getting $8.40 a hundred for hogs. We do not need anyone to help us now. We are all right. Take your hands off of us. Let us alone. Give us back the good old days of freedom, the freedom to starve, the freedom to sell hogs which we are now selling for $8.40 a hundred for 2 cents. Give us back the good old freedom, the freedom to sell 90-cent corn for 8 cents a bushel, the freedom to be acquitted of an income tax through the sorry process of having no income."

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], now that they feel secure, say, "O Mr. Government, you have saved us, you have done enough. You have rescued us from drowning, you have saved us from bankruptcy, you have put us on the high road. We can feel good old Mother Earth under our feet. We are free men. We want to be free. Turn us loose. You have rescued us. Now, to hell with you."

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as an innocent bystander I am a little bit confused by the remarks which somewhat afflict those of us who are practically in neither camp. It must be realized that the Senate has three parties. It has the Republican Party, it has the Democratic Party, and it has the new-deal party. There is a fringe of us who are some times called "liberals", and sometimes are called "progressives", and sometimes are called other things not quite so complimentary, but in the main the Senate has three parties, the Democratic Party, the new-deal party, and the Republican Party.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] does not qualify for the new-deal party.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Louisiana very much.

Mr. LONG. And I thank the Senator from Texas very much.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is the third party, I assume, he is talking about.

Mr. LONG. The new-deal party.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is that a third party?

Mr. LONG. That is the Roosevelt party.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, then the Senator from Texas withdraws his remark.

Mr. LONG. The new-deal party.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator was talking about the Johnson-Long-Coughlin party.

Mr. LONG. No, no. The Senator from Texas is showing himself to be far more ignorant than his people are in that respect. I am talking about the new-deal party.

Now, if we are going to wipe out that party over here we are making progress. I hope we do. But we have the new deal, the Roosevelt new-deal party. That is one party. The Senator from Texas says he does not know anything about the new deal. If he does not, we are making progress. If this side of the Chamber will begin now and wipe out the so-called "new deal" isms and schisms and sundry other things of those kinds, and affiliated things, then we are making substantial progress, but I must proceed on the assumption that there are others here who still know of the new deal.

We have the new deal and the Democrats and the Republicans. The others I will not mention. They do not amount to much anyway. They do not count so much. I want to justify eliminating them to begin with. I want the so-called "progressives" and "liberals" to understand why in the few moments during which I am going to discuss this question I eliminate them to start with.

Progressives, Mr. President, are men who make promises and come here and vote the same way they promise, and who go out and make the same promises and come back and vote the same way. They never are with the majority. They never will be. Until the Progressives become party-minded and substantial enough so they will learn to promise one way and come back and vote another, they will never amount to much as a party organization in the United States. So, therefore, I eliminate that party to start with.

So we have the new deal, we have the Republicans and we have the Democrats. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] were the most consistent supporters of what Hoover proposed here of any two men in the United States Senate when I first came here. I worked hard on them. I was kind of lining up with the Progressives until some of them got reactionary. I went with the Progressives until some of my leaders over there got to the point where I could hardly identify the party. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] jumped us on the oil tariff, and I could not follow his leadership; and 2 or 3 weeks ago the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] jumped us on the McCarran amendment and I could not follow him any longer. And it looked like the Republican Party was dipping into such dark circumstances that I went to see the two Senators and told them that the Progressives were likely to become like the French Government once was and have to go to Corsica and get somebody to lead the army if they did not stay a little bit more consistent.

At any rate, I came along here and tried to follow the Progressive fringe, as we have been termed. There were issues galore. I had not taken the time to investigate, but it was called to my attention as I sat in the rear of the Senate when I first came here, that the Democratic leaders and the Republican leaders were voting the same way. They were voting the same way all the time.

We could have corrected the conditions under Hoover; do not fool yourselves about that; but we could not get the two parties nor enough of the two parties to stand together.

So we went to work to break up this coalition to get rid of some Hooverisms, and we worked on the Senator from Arkansas and his subleaders, and we worked on the Republican leader, Mr. Watson, of Indiana, and his subleaders. We managed, Mr. President, to pull the Republican leader, Mr. Watson, and the Republican subleader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], and the Republican Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] away from Mr. Hoover for three or four votes, but we never were able to pull the Senator from Arkansas away from Mr. Hoover on any one of those votes. Now and then we could trade or we could persuade or we could beg, and we got the Senator from Iowa or the Senator from Indiana or the Senator from Oregon, but we never could get the Senator from Arkansas.

For example, let me be specific for fear someone will ask for a bill of particulars. There was a man by the name of Marcel Garsaud, who was a member of the Power Commission. He sat on the Power Commission and decided against the people so many times that nobody expected him to act any other way. I tried to get the Democratic leadership to help me in preventing Mr. Hoover from reappointing that man to the Power Board, but the Democratic leadership stood firm and adamant that Garsaud should be confirmed and go back on the Power Commission. Lo and behold, I finally managed to persuade the Republican leader, Mr. Watson, and other Republicans to stand against him. Finally, in the Garsaud case, I got the Republican leaders and the Progressive leaders to vote against him, and there were enough of us to prevent the confirmation of Garsaud on the Power Commission.

I am not going to have the Senator from Texas embroil the Democratic Party, because the Senator from Texas kindly came in by the back door of this particular new deal, which he now claims he does not know anything about. The Senator from Texas was at the Chicago convention, and while we considered him somewhat liberal in his views, we never did consider him quite liberal enough to let him come up and sing in the choir. He was one of the men who were made to sit on the back seat for awhile, very much like the Apostle Paul. When the scales fell from his eyes, he did not become a leader in the church immediately, but he was made to sit on the back seat for a time before he was allowed to come up and sit among the brethren. That was the class in which we put men like the Senator from Texas. I was one of those who did the grading in those days; I was going to pass on them for awhile around there. They might not have known it, but I was sitting right on the inside of the church in those days, and we never once thought that the Democratic Party was ever going to go back to the Congress of the United States and have it work upon the lines that Hoover had been following, or with the men who had been following Hoover as a leader.

I might illustrate that to the Senate now. We never once thought but that we would have practically a realinement in the Senate, with the men of liberal mind going one way on both sides of the aisle and the men of reactionary mind going the other way on the two sides of the aisle; but, lo and behold, we did have what we did not expect. What did we get? We did not get the philosophy of the Senator from South Carolina on farm relief; we did not adopt the philosophy on farm relief that had been spread abroad through the country by the Senator from South Carolina. We did not take the philosophy of the other side of the aisle among the Progressives on labor legislation; not at all. We did not get the system of banking control that we were led to believe we would have to have; not at all. On the contrary, what did we get? We started out, no. 1, with the banks; and they called back, under Roosevelt, Parker Gilbert from the House of Morgan, and various and sundry other men from the House of Rockefeller; they brought back identically the same men to draft the banking legislation that Hoover had to draft banking legislation in his administration. What did they do? They closed up the banks. Talk about the Democrats claiming any credit under the new deal! Do not give any credit for the guaranty of bank deposits to the new deal, please, until you go back and read the RECORD. We had to jam the guarantee of bank deposits down their throats, and we were not able to jam it down their throats until they had squeezed out about one-third of the banking resources of this country and spread panic throughout the land. So much for no. 1.

What did we do about the labor policy and the agricultural policy? We called in the United States Chamber of Commerce, I am informed on reliable authority, to draft something that they could use as a labor policy and something else they could use as a farm policy, and we finally swallowed them. Now that we are bragging about the result, let us see who gave us the scheme. Mr. Hoover gave us the cotton program. Some may think the Bankhead bill was the program of the Democrats, but it was not. Hoover is the man who proposed to plow up every fourth row of cotton. There is only one difference between the Roosevelt cotton plan and the Hoover cotton plan; Hoover proposed to plow up every fourth row of cotton, and Roosevelt proposed to plow up every third row of cotton; that is the only difference. The only difference was that we would not plow up every fourth row under Hoover, but we plowed up every third row under Roosevelt.

Now, let us get down to the N. R. A. I call upon any man on the floor who will say now that he thinks the N. R. A. is a good thing for this country to stand up and defend it. I call upon any man on the Democratic side or any man, I care not what position he occupies in the councils of his party, to stand up and say that he thinks the N. R. A. is a good thing for this country. Where is he to be found? The N. R. A. is about 75 percent of the Roosevelt administration. They had marches just as Hitler had in Germany and as Mussolini had in Italy; they had a parade down Broadway, I am told, that was about 7 miles long and about 16 feet wide, with an N. R. A. big blue eagle taking the place of the Stars and Stripes. They ran around with that blue eagle over the country until it got to look like a blue buzzard, and that is what it looks like now. [Laughter.] There is no one in the Senate today, I believe, who will defend the N. R. A., and yet it is still the law. I want to make a further statement. It is still the law, and for aught I know, there will be many a grumbling Senator on this floor who may vote to continue it a law. I know Senators cannot grumble much worse now than they did when they voted for it the last time, but we voted for it just the same; and if it were to come back and be voted on again with no one, not even my friend from the State of Texas, willing to raise his voice in its defense, imagine the further calamity that is going to happen to the American people.

Laws, codes, rules, bureaus, inspectors, secretaries, advisers, clerks, supervisors of the clerks, supervisors of the inspectors, secretaries of the supervisors, and secretaries of the clerks, with whom it is necessary to file reports. If one opens a shoe-shine stand in the morning he has to report in the evening how much money he took in, and then he has got to get permission to close up the shoe-shine shop when evening comes. Down in New Orleans a little Greek was running a shoe-shine stand. He was arrested so many times that he made a deal with a lawyer to come there once every hour to pass on the N. R. A. code. Right down there on little old Royal Street that little Greek got a lawyer who came down there once an hour in order to keep that shoe-shine stand open, in order that he could make a living; but finally he had to give up, and he just made up his mind to go to the "pen" anyway, and be sure that the Government would feed him instead of trying to feed himself any longer.

In Pittsburgh a man had a profitable little machine shop out of which the owner and all his employees were making a living. The N. R. A. came along and closed him up. I have a telegram in my possession, which I should be glad to read to the Senators if the Senators want me to send to my office for it, in which it is said the N. R. A. wired a little grocery store, "Either comply with what we have done or it is going to mean the wreckage of your business"; and I suppose by this time that grocer is out of business.

In New Jersey, where they undertook to enforce one of the codes, a little man, pressing a pair of pants for 35 cents, was sent to jail for 60 days because the code prescribed a price of 40 cents. If a man did not have 40 cents with which to get his pants pressed and the tailor should credit him with 5 cents, he would have to go to jail. A man could not get credit from perhaps his best friend to have his pants pressed so that he could go out and see his girl on Saturday night.

Under that code it did not make any difference how well one stood in his community, he could not get credit from a tailor to press his trousers so that he could call on his best girl, because the code prevented. [Laughter in the galleries.] We still have that magnanimous system of government in operation.

The Senator says he voted for legislation. The Senator from Iowa, good lawyer that he may be—and I take it that he is a good lawyer—and the Senator from Texas, I take it that he is a good lawyer, although I think I could teach them both something about some of the so-called "laws" they have been voting for. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana will suspend. The visitors in the galleries have been handed a slip, in which their attention has been called to the rules of the Senate prohibiting any demonstration of approval or disapproval. They are the guests of the Senate, and the Senate is glad to have them, but they must observe the rule of the Senate if they expect to continue in the galleries. The Senator from Louisiana will proceed.

Mr. LONG. Good lawyers, as both of these Senators are, nonetheless they think they have been voting for laws. The Senator from Arizona has better legislative judgment than to think any such thing as that; he knows better. He is a better lawyer than I am, so far as that is concerned, although he will not claim that.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Louisiana is too modest.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Arizona knows that we have not been passing legislation, and I know it. Why? We have not voted for any laws, Mr. President. Laws are not made in Congress. I repeat that statement: Laws are no longer made in Congress. We have authorized Mr. Wallace to make some laws, and we have authorized Mr. Wallace's assistant, Mr. Tugwell, to make some laws, and we have authorized Mr. Tugwell's assistant to make some laws, and we have authorized the assistant of Mr. Tugwell's assistant to make some laws, and then there have been set up some boards and regional district agencies, and we have authorized them to make some laws; but the Congress has yet to make one law that affects agriculture. That has all been done away with. I do not undertake to criticize the system, but I do criticize the lack of legal intellect in this learned Congress that would still think themselves a legislative agency when they are not.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] nods while I make that statement, Mr. President, and so I am convinced that it is correct.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I may add, if I may be permitted to do so, that if, as the Senator from Louisiana assumes, I gave evidence by gesture, it was because I was recalling that if it be true that there is a legislative body that has been ignored, particularly in making laws, and commits itself wholly to the guidance of a dictating individual, my mind describing such condition reverted to Louisiana and the Napoleonic commander of its legislature, its officers, and its present fate.

Mr. LONG. That is very fine, Mr. President, but when laws are passed in Louisiana they say what the law is, but the laws that come out of the Congress do not say what the law is. In Louisiana the law reads, for instance, "Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, That if one kills another, he will be hung for the crime"; in the Congress of the United States the law reads, "Be it enacted by the Congress of the United States, That if one kills another, and the President of the United States finds out about it and refers it to some other man, and he thinks it is wrong, he will have a right to have the criminal punished." That is the difference in the two kinds of lawmaking. We voted on the subject of agriculture, but we have yet to enact one law. Who knows what the agricultural laws are today? Where is the smart man who will tell me, if there be such a man here?

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. We know as much about what would happen as we would, for instance, with reference to what the regulatory body in the State of Louisiana is going to do with the power companies down there.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; we reduced the rates. The power company rates in Louisiana are being reduced very drastically and very quickly.

Mr. BONE. What I am getting at is that when the Senator says Louisiana is passing laws concerning them, everyone is fully advised that he overlooks the fact that some of those laws are rate regulatory laws, and nobody knows what they are, not even the power companies of Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. That shows the Senator from Washington does not know what is going on in Louisiana. It is true that in Louisiana there was for a while an anti-Long public-service commission, but that has all been corrected in the last few months. [Laughter.] Now we know what is taking place.

Where is the man who will tell me what are the agricultural laws of the United States? Nobody knows. Nobody can find them. There is not a volume published in the United States today containing those laws. No volumes are published containing them. Even though there should be as many volumes as the Encyclopedia Britannica, they would not contain the agricultural laws of the United States. We could not combine them all, including the rulings, in 45 volumes of 500 pages each; and even if we did, nobody would know what they were by the time they got through reading them. Nobody knows the law relating to agriculture.

Then we come to labor. What are the labor laws? Nobody knows what they are. It took me 48 hours to find out what the law was with reference to making uniforms for a school; and even then I did not find out all about it, after spending more than $250 for telephone calls, telephoning all over the country to find out what is the law and who is the law.

Who is there here that knows what the money law is today or what it will be tomorrow when we have vested in the Department the right to have $20,000,000,000 worth of money or $40,000,000,000 worth of money or $1,000,000,000 worth of money? Who knows what the law is as to money when gold would be of such value that a dollar may be worth $2.50 or worth one-half of 1 cent? Nobody knows what the law is today or who the law is or what the law is going to be tomorrow. We do not know what will be the legislation tomorrow, or what it will be at any time.

"Cowardly Congress", they think we are. I have heard it so stated. I do not know whether they are wrong or right.

I am not allowed to say about that. I might offend somebody either way I spoke about it, and I refuse to give offense. I refuse to give anyone cause for offense in the course of my public life.

Cowardly, they think we are—and why? Because we are sitting here and letting the departments come in and strip us of our authority. We sit here and let them untie the necktie which gave us a little control over farm production. We sat silent while they came here with their Wallaces and their Johnsons and their Tugwells and their Baruchs and every other bureaucrat they could wash up all the way from Cuba to Canada and let them strip the United States Congress of every legislative power it had, and we muttered and "bellyached", but did nothing about it, and finally let them take away from us everything we had.

Now we ask, What is the matter? I will tell you what is the matter. The matter is that this Congress is not a Congress. That is what is the matter. The matter is that the Congress is not even undertaking to legislate. Congress is not even trying to perform the duties which were imposed upon it by the Constitution of the United States. Congress is turning its authority over to the Wallaces, the Tugwells, the Moleys, the Johnsons, the Browns, and everybody else, and they come around with the T. U. G.'s, the A. B. C.'s, the A. A. A.'s, the C. C. C.'s, the X. Y. Z.'s, the P. D. Q.'s, and all the others. I procured a book in order to inform myself what all these alphabetical enumerations stood for. How many do Senators think there are? My recollection is there are 36 alphabetical agencies. Three of them have the title "C. C. C." They used up the alphabet and had to start over again. They did not even go to the trouble to designate them as "C. C. C. No. 1", "C. C. C. No. 2", and "C. C. C. No. 3." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I am not going to take more time except to sound a note of warning. We are not going to let this great American country of ours, when it is wrecked by the new deal, go out of the frying pan into the fire. The old moss-back Republicans on the other side of the Chamber are sitting up with a "hee! hee! hee!" and a "ha! ha! ha!" They think when the Democratic Party has made a mess out of the situation, the only thing to be done is to turn around and put the Government back in their hands. All they want to do is to have the reactionary new deal blow the country up and blow it over into the hands of the Republican reactionaries, and then they will blow the country up a little worse and blow it back to the Democratic reactionaries.

We are faced today with a condition where the country is not going to allow itself to turn from the frying pan into the fire. We do not want a reactionary government under either one of them, and that is all we have had. We want constitutional government.

I do not blame Roosevelt for this condition entirely. When the Hoover crowd and the Coolidge crowd started out with the flexible tariff law—I think it was under Coolidge that the flexible tariff law was enacted—the President of the United States was empowered to say what the tariff should be within certain limits. It was a monstrous outrage on the country. It was absolutely a fraud upon the rights of the American people. If we had had the manhood in this country that existed in 1776 when our people rebelled against the English King before they would allow him to assert a tax-laying privilege against the consent of the people, probably the Congress never would have been allowed to enact such a law as that; but they did it.

Then the Democrats went out and told the people what an outrage it was. What did we do then? I am going to tell you what we did, and I defy anybody to say it is not so. I defy any Republican or any Democrat to say it is not so. The Democrats went out and said that empowering the President of the United States to fix the tariff rates was a monstrous outrage upon the people of the country, and upon that platform the Democrats won.
